(142)—Decree for money against mortgagor—Subsequent mortgage by conditional sale, decree for possession under—Rights of purchaser in execution of money-decree. Every attaching creditor who has obtained an order for sale thereby acquires a charge on the property attached. So, an attaching creditor of mortgaged property who has a right, under cl. (f), s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, to redeem the mortgage, is a necessary party to a suit on the mortgage, and could not be deprived, by a foreclosure decree obtained behind his back, of the charge which the attachment and order for sale obtained by him created in his favour. The requirements of s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act are provided for the benefit not only of the mortgagor, but of all persons entitled under s. 91 of the Act to redeem the mortgaged property, and the mortgagor could not, in proceedings to which such persons were not parties, destroy their right of redemption. *GHULAM HUSAIN KHAN v. (143)—Mortgage incorporating prior mortgage—Suit based on later mortgage only—Effect on prior security.—On the 4th of May 1883, certain properties were hypothecated to the appellants. On the 30th of June 1883, a bond hypothecating the same properties was executed in favour of the respondent. The above bond of the 4th May was renewed on the 3rd November 1883 by a fresh bond in favour of the appellants under which the prior charge in their favour was expressly kept subsisting. The appellants sued on the later bond and obtained a decree. The contention by the respondent in this case that the appellants, by suing on the bond of November alone, had relinquished their rights under the bond of May, was held untenable. There was no need for the appellants to sue on the earlier bond in order to obtain a sale for the whole of their debt, that having been comprised in the later bond in their favour and, in suing on the bond of November, they did nothing to imply, or to lead others to believe, that they abandoned what, apart from the abandonment, was a subsisting hypothecation. SHANKUR SARUP v. MEJO MAL, 23 A. 313 = 5 C.W.N. 649 = 3 Bom. L.R. 713 = 28 I.A. 203, P.C.

(144)—Possession given under usufructuary mortgage—Kabuliat of even date by mortgagor to mortgagee, suit not maintainable on, as one transaction what mortgage.—By an instrument of even date the mortgagor, defendant-appellant, (who under a usufructuary mortgage had put the mortgagee in possession) executed to the latter a kabuliat, or rent agreement, by which he acknowledged to have received from the mortgagee a lease of the mortgaged premises, to hold good up to the redemption of the mortgage, at a certain fixed annual rental. The mortgage-deed authorised the mortgagee to recover his principal and interest from the mortgagor and the mortgaged property, while under the kabuliat the lessor, in order to recover arrears of rent, was authorised to make use of the provisions of the Rent Act for the purpose of ejecting the defendant on his failure to pay rent. In his suit on the mortgage, the plaintiff-respondent claimed the principal amount as due under the mortgage-deed, but for the interest turned to the kabuliat, claiming the rent payable under it as realizable along with the mortgage money. The High Court, however, held that the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the instruments of mortgage and lease as one transaction so as to found a part of his claim on the mortgage and the remainder on the lease. The kabuliat did not make the rent reserved in it chargeable on the mortgaged property, and plaintiff could therefore, be given a mere money decree, and that only for the rent of three years previous to the institution of the suit. *CHIMMAN LAL v. In execution of the decree obtained by him, he himself became the purchaser and obtained delivery through Court. Thereupon, the first mortgagee sued on his mortgage and himself became the purchaser in execution of the decree obtained by him and obtained possession through Court. Subsequently, however, he sued to recover possession. The question was as to the priority between the two purchasers. Held that priority in the case had to be determined not by reference to the dates of the mortgage documents, but according to the dates of the sales and recovery of possession under them. The second mortgagee, having first obtained possession, was entitled to priority over the first

(146)—Mortgage—Decree for sale obtained by first mortgagee—Second mortgagee not party to suit—Execution of decree—Purchase by decree holder of mortgagor's undivided share—Right of second mortgagee to claim redemption.—In a suit for sale brought by the first mortgagee of certain property the second mortgagee was not made a party. In execution of the decree passed in the suit, the first mortgagee himself purchased the mortgagor's undivided interest in the mortgaged property, and then sued for partition and possession. The second mortgagee who was made a defendant to this suit, contended that he was entitled to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage. Held that the plaintiff could not obtain possession without paying off the second mortgagee, who was in possession. The second mortgagee was not liable to suffer, because the plaintiff failed to make him a party to the prior suit, and it made no difference to the second mortgagee whether the plaintiff's failure was wilful or due merely to ignorance of the existence of the second mortgage. The amount payable by the second mortgagee was the same as that which he would have had to pay if he had been made a party to the plaintiff's prior suit. *RANGASAMY NAIKEN v. (147)—Mortgage—Sale in execution of decree on prior mortgage—Decree for sale on subsequent mortgage subject to prior mortgagee's right—Sale in execution—Right to possession as between respective purchasers.—A prior mortgagee instituted a suit on his mortgage. Though there was a subsequent mortgage on the property, the second mortgagee was not made a party to the suit. In execution of this decree, the prior mortgagee purchased the mortgaged property, and his vendee applied for and obtained delivery of possession. Later on, the second mortgagee instituted a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale, subject to the right of the said vendee. In execution, the second mortgagee purchased the property and his successors in title obtained possession through Court. The above said vendee applied for re-delivery of possession. Held that as the decree on the second mortgage was made subject to the right of the applicant and as his sale was of prior date, he was entitled to be in possession until redeemed in accordance with the decree on the second mortgage. *MUHAMMAD USAN ROWTHAN v. (150)—Mortgage—Personal covenant by mortgagor to pay mortgage-money in instalments—Provision in mortgage deed for mortgagee to be placed in possession on default—Suit for sale and to enforce personal covenant on failure to pay each instalment—Maintainability.—A mortgage deed payable by instalment contained a personal covenant to pay as each instalment fell due. The deed also contained a covenant that, at the termination of the period on which the instalment was to fall due, if any sum still remained due, possession of the property was to be given to the mortgagee. On default being made in the payment of some instalments, the mortgagee sued for sale of a portion of the mortgaged property and for a personal decree against the mortgagor. Held that the fact that there was provision for delivery of possession to the mortgagee on default being made did not deprive the mortgagee of his right to sue for each instalment as it fell due, and recover the same by sale of a portion of the mortgaged property, and personally from the mortgagor. *RAMAYYA v. (154)—Sub-mortgage—Assignment by sub-mortgagee—Intention to keep alive mortgage—Suit for redemption by original mortgagor—Nature of decree to be passed.—A kanomdar executed a mortgage to another and the sub-mortgagee assigned his right to a third person. The original mortgagor having sued for redemption, held that, as the title passed under the express assignment, no question as to whether there was an intention to keep alive the sub-mortgage could arise, and the mortgagor was entitled to a decree for redemption on payment of the amount due under the sub-mortgage and the value of improvements. A decree for possession of the property under s. 264 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, was not the proper form of decree to be passed. SHOURI ANNA v. ANTHONI MUTHU, 13 M.L.J. 375.

Subsequently, the Government revenue on the land was enhanced. The enhanced portion of the revenue was paid by the mortgagor and he brought a suit to recover the same from the mortgagee. Held that the usufructuary mortgagee was not, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable, as between himself and the mortgagor, to pay the enhanced revenue, as the enhancement was subsequent to his mortgage. The reasonable view is that the revenue payable under the settlement in force was all that the mortgagee undertook to pay, the ultimate responsibility in respect of any addition to the Subsequently one of them mortgaged the plot which fell to the share of the other. The mortgagee obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property and purchased it himself. Held that the decree-holder purchaser would not be entitled to recover the plot actually belonging to his mortgagor. The plaintiff was not entitled to possession of the plot which was not mortgaged to him, and he was not entitled to another decree for money as he had already got one. LAKSHMAMMA v. The mortgagee having alleged that he lost the title deeds the Court passed an order directing him to furnish security for the value of the properties before drawing the money paid into Court by the mortgagor. Held that as there was no direction in the decree that the mortgagee, in default of delivering up the title deeds of the properties to the mortgagor, should furnish security for the value of the properties, the order directing security to be furnished was not maintainable. SUBBARAYA IYEN v. The only relief he was entitled to in such an action was relief ejusdem generis with his claim. In the absence of any claim for money, the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for the mortgage-money. CHINNASAMI AIYANGAR v. KUPPUSAMI AIYANGAR, 7 M.L.J. 50.

S sued on the bond of November 1883 only and not on the bond of May 1883, and obtained a decree on the bond of November. P also brought a suit on his bond of June 1883, and obtained a decree. Held, that the mere suing on the bond of November did not amount to a relinquishment by S of his rights under the bond of 4th May 1883. There was no necessity for S to sue on the bond of May in order to obtain a sale for the whole of their debt. SANKAR SARUP v. LAL PHUL CHAND, 5 C.W.N. 649, P.C.=3 Bom. The conclusion by an Appellate Court that the subsequent mortgagee could not have intended to keep alive an earlier lien simply because he was not, at the time of the execution of his mortgage, aware of the earlier lien which he paid off cannot be legitimately drawn from the fact found by that Court. In determining, however, the period of limitation for a suit on the later two bonds, the time should be reckoned from the date of these bonds and not from 1876. Where, in a suit on the mortgage of 1877, the mortgagee of 1876, who was made a party, did not mention the mortgage of that date but only the two later bonds, admitting himself to be a subsequent mortgagee, held that, so far as the question of priority was concerned, the latter suit by the mortgagee of 1876 was barred by the rules of res judicata, though not by estoppel. [D., 2 C.L.J. 574, 1 C.L.J. 337.] Where, at the time of mortgage, the owner owned only a certain share in the estate, but after that date acquired an additional share, held that the mortgagee had no lien against the later acquisition. BARANASHI PERSHAD CHOWDHURY v. (18 C. 164, P.C., R.) A puisne mortgagee's right, when he was not a party to the first mortgagee's suit is limited to a right of redemption or sale of the mortgaged premises, subject to the lien of the first mortgagee or auction-purchaser on a decree by the latter. (30 C. 599, R.) He cannot compel him to part with possession without redeeming the first mortgage. (25 W.R. 16, 20 B. 390, 7 C.W.N. 11, F.) A first mortgagee in possession under a prior sale may always shield himself under his mortgage and his purchase, although his right to possession may be defective. [R., 6 C.L.J. 612 = 12 C.W.N. 107.] Inasmuch as the right to possession depends upon the purchase of the outstanding equity of redemption, and is ordinarily determined by the priority of the respective sales, at the instance of the different mortgagees, the purchaser at the prior sale is entitled to retain possession as against a mortgagee who purchases at a subsequent sale. *RAM NARAIN SAHOO v. able—Notice of benami purchase.—The plaintiff sued defendant 1 and defendant 2 for a declaration, that three mortgage-deeds executed by defendant 1, in favour of defendant 2, and the decrees obtained on them, were null and void as against him. He alleged that his father purchased by several sale-deeds the property in suit benami in the name of defendant 1 (his wife and plaintiff's mother). He further alleged that he was unaware of the mortgages until the proclamation for the sale of the property was issued in March 1898. The first defendant admitted all the facts alleged in the plaint, but pleaded nevertheless that the suit should be dismissed. The second defendant pleaded that the first defendant was the real purchaser of the property, and that the mortgage-money was advanced to her in good faith, believing her to be the absolute owner of the property. It was proved in the course of the trial that the sale-deeds were all in the name of defendant 1, that mutation of names was effected in her favour in the register of proprietors that she had previously mortgaged the property and taken possession of it and retained it after her husband's death. Held, that under all the circumstances of the case there was no constructive or other notice which put the defendant 2 to further inquiry. Held, further, that, even if defendant 1 was merely the benami owner of the property in suit, the mortgages and the decree obtained on them by defendant 2 were not voidable, as she was, with the consent of the persons interested, the ostensible owner, when the mortgages were effected. *JAGANNATH BAKHSH THAKUR, v. Subsequent to the mortgage, there was a partition suit as to the entire joint family property, inclusive of the mortgaged lands, in which it was decreed that each of the four sharers was to take a fourth share of the joint estate paying a fourth share of the family debts inclusive of the above mortgage-debt. Plaintiff, the mortgagee, was not a party to the partition suit, but, subsequent to the decree in that suit and in accordance with its terms, he entered into arrangements with each of the three mortgagors other than the defendant, by which their shares of the property mortgaged were to be realised by him on payment of their shares of the mortgage-debt. Defendant not having entered into any such arrangement with the plaintiff, nor discharged his one-fourth share of the mortgage-debt, the present suit was instituted for the recovery of that share of the debt due by the defendant by sale of his portion of the mortgaged lands. The suit was dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that it was not maintainable, as it was only for a part of the mortgage-debt and for sale of a part of the mortgaged property. Reversing the decision of that Court, held, it was competent to the mortgagee in acceptance of the terms of the decree between the mortgagors to validly release each mortgagor on payment of his quota of the debt and proceed separately against such of them as might make default (15 B. 257, 30 C. 755, R.) in paying their share of the debt as settled by the decree. The rule that an arrangement between one or more of several mortgagors and the mortgagee, whereby the former are released from their liability under the mortgage, in consequence of payment of a portion of the debt or otherwise, does not affect mortgagors not parties to the arrangement, if their right as against the co-mortgagors is likely, in any way, to be prejudiced thereby, has no application to the present case, for, here, the defendant co mortgagor has been sought to be made liable only for his just share of the debt and no more. VENKATACHELLA CHETTY v. (170)—Completion of mortgage by registration and payment of consideration—Failure to comply with subsequent directions for payment of consideration-money—Rescission of contract.—Plaintiff executed and registered a usufructuary mortgage of her land in favour of defendant, who paid her the consideration-money before the registering officer and the mortgage became complete on registration, by reason of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Subsequently, plaintiff entrusted the money to the defendant asking him to pay off certain creditors, one of whom was in possession under a prior mortgage of the land. Defendant having failed to pay up, accordingly, plaintiff instituted this suit to have the mortgage rescinded, and both the lower Courts decreed in her favour. Held, reversing the decrees in both the Courts below, that plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for rescission of the mortgage. The subsequent direction to the mortgagee to pay the creditors of the mortgagor on her behalf was none the less a separate transaction, because it took place after the completion of the mortgage by registration and payment of the consideration. The mortgage became a perfected conveyance, as distinguished from a contract, and the defendant became entitled to possession under the mortgage; and, even if the consideration had not been paid at all, plaintiff's remedy would be by suit to recover the money. KHUDKIA alias ABDUL RAHMAN v. mortgages, and retains a portion of the purchase-money for payment to the mortgagees, but pays the first of the two incumbrancers and not the second, he cannot treat the first mortgage as kept alive to be used as a shield against the second, nor can he claim to be subrogated to the position of the mortgagee, whose debt he has satisfied. [R., 10 C.L.J. 150, 6 A.L.J. 549.] The doctrine of subrogation does not apply when a person simply performs his own obligation or covenant and pays off a charge, which he has undertaken or is bound to satisfy. (17 M. 62, Appl.) [R., 6 C.L.J. 134.] The question whether a mortgage, which has been paid off, is to be considered as extinguished or kept alive for the benefit of the person, who makes the payment, is one of intention to be determined with reference to the surrounding circumstances as they exist at the time when the mortgage is discharged. (10 I. A. 62, F.) [R., 6 C.L.J. 134, 11 C.L.J. 226.] In the case of a mortgage-suit, the lis continues after the decree nisi and the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable to proceedings to realise the mortgage after the decree for sale. SURJIRAM MARWARI v. (176) — Mortgage — Prior and subsequent incumbrances in favour of same parties—Notice of existence of prior incumbrances in case of sale under subsequent incumbrance—Bona fide purchaser.—Certain mortgagees holding several mortgages of different dates on varying proportions of the same property, which was held jointly by the mortgagors, obtained a decree under the last of such mortgages and sold the property mortgaged in execution thereof. Before sale, the mortgagees applied to the Court executing the decree to give notice of their prior mortgages; but the Court did not do so. Held that the mortgagees had done all in their power to give notice of the prior incumbrances on the property sold and that they were not precluded, as against a bona fide purchaser at the auction sale, from afterwards suing on the former mortgage deeds. ABDUL ALI KHAN v. KHET SINGH, A.W.N. 1891, 86.

(177) — Mortgage—Prior and subsequent incumbrances — Right of subsequent mortgagee satisfying prior claim as against intermediate mortgagee—Transfer of Property Act, s. 74.—The plaintiff was mortgagee under a bond dated the 27th July, 1883, of certain properties, namely (1) 20 Biswas of mouza Jalaluddin Ganauri, (2) 20 Biswas of mouza Sarawah, and (3) 19 biswas of 6 kach, 13½ tan. of mauza khalsia. Of these properties, (1) was already mortgaged to the plaintiff under a bond dated the 21st August, 1878, for Rs. 30,000; (2) was also mortgaged under the same bond to the plaintiff; (3) was already hypothecated to one Pirbhu Dyal for Rs. 15,000, under a bond dated the 28th August, 1878. The consideration for the plaintiff's mortgage of the 27th July, 1883, was Rs. 16,500. Out of this sum, the plaintiff was found to have made at the instance of the mortgagors the following appropriations or payments, viz., Rs. 3,171 as interest due to himself on his bond of the 21st August, 1878. Rs. 9,080 to Lakshmi Chand, Tej Ram, principal and interest on their bond for Rs. 15,000 of the 13th August, 1880 and Rs. 817 to Pirbhu Dyal as interest on his bond of the 28th August, 1878. The defendants held a mortgage for Rs. 15,000, dated the 15th July, 1883, on the three villages Jalaluddin Ganauri, Sarawah, and Khalsia, on which they obtained a decree and having brought the villages to sale purchased themselves. The plaintiff then sued to recover the sum of Rs. 14,283 by sale of the villages mentioned above on the allegation that the property was liable to that extent in consequence of the disposition made by him at the request of the mortgagors of the moneys advanced by him under the mortgage of the 21st August, 1883. Held that, as to the sum of Rs. 3,171 credited to the mortgagors as interest on the mortgage of the 21st August, 1878, and the sum of Rs. 9,080 paid to Lakshmi Chand, Tej Ram in complete satisfaction of their bond of the 13th August, 1880, the plaintiff must be considered to have intended to keep those charges alive for his benefit, and, this being so, he would be entitled to bring the properties mortgaged to sale for such amount; but, in respect of the sum of Rs. 817 paid to Pirbhu Dyal as interest on his bond of the 28th August, 1878, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount from the properties mortgaged. The principle of equity under which the property mortgaged were made liable to the two preceding payments could not be extended to cover the payment to Pirbhu Dyal. To do so would be to create a second charge under the same mortgage. SANT LAL v. KISHUN SAHAI, A.W.N. 1891, 121.

(178) — Mortgage — Covenant as to right of mortgage under certain contingencies to recover the mortgage-money before due date—Construction of covenant—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), ss. 67, 68.—The plaintiff executed a simple mortgage in favour of one T.P. on the 26th March, 1881. On the 29th March, 1883, he executed a second mortgage of the same property in favour of one D.D. This second mortgage purported to be an usufructuary mortgage, but the mortgagee never got possession under it. It contained, amongst others the following covenant;—"If the mortgagee come to know of any hypothecation, he may at that very time recover his money by suing me (the mortgagor) personally, and if I wish to pay off the money in part, it shall be impossible." The second mortgagee came to know of the first mortgage before the term of his mortgage had expired, and thereupon sued the mortgagor for possession and mesne profits. He obtained a decree in appeal for sale of the mortgaged property and against the mortgagor personally. The mortgagor then appealed to the High Court. Held that the decree, so far as it was for sale of the mortgaged property, was wrong. The only decree which could properly be given under the circumstances was a decree for money. MADHO PRASAD v. DEBI DIAL, A.W.N. 1891, 168.

The mortgagee having become insolvent, the Official Assignee brought a suit in which he prayed, first, for enforcement of the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property, and secondly, in the event of the sale-proceeds being insufficient to discharge the debt, for enforcement of the personal covenant. The Court granted the former relief, but refused to grant the latter on the ground of delay in bringing the suit and of hardship to the defendant. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to join, with his claim for enforcement of the mortgage, the further claim to a declaration that, in the event of the sale proceeds being insufficient to discharge the debt, its discharge might be enforced against the person and other property of defendant and that the claim to enforce the personal covenant ought to have been decreed. MILLER v. DIGAMBAR DEBYA, A.W.N. 1890, 142. (A.W.N. 1889, 149, D.) [D., 13 A. 356, 360; R., 14 A. 513; F., 28. A. 365=3 A.L.J. 171=A.W.N. 1906, 44.]

(180)—Possession, suit for, by mortgagee—Declaration concerning mortgage money when premature.—The plaintiff alleged that, in 1891, the defendant's father executed in his favour a mortgage-deed in lieu of Rs. 43,000. The principal was re-payable within ten years; interest was payable year by year; and, in default of payment of interest, the mortgagor was to deliver possession of the mortgaged villages to the mortgagee. The plaintiff asked that a decree might be passed for possession of the mortgaged villages in lieu of what, according to his calculation, was the amount of the mortgage-money then due to him from the defendants. The defendants disputed the correctness of that amount. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's possession in lieu of Rs. 43,000 plus one year's interest. Held, that the suit, in so far as it related to any declaration concerning the mortgage-money, was premature. The question as to the correct amount due on the footing of the mortgage will arise only when the mortgagor is ready and willing to redeem the mortgage. JAWAHIR SINGH v. CHANDIK BAKHSI, 2 O.C. 145. (181)—Of joint family property—Liability of son under decree obtained by mortgagee against father—Partition, decree for—Execution of decree—Interest and costs, decree for—Non-joinder of parties.—In October 1894, the appellant obtained against his father and brothers, a decree for partition of his share of the family property. In 1889, the father executed two mortgages of a part of a family property. The mortgagees obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property in December 1894 against the appellant's father. The appellant sued to have it declared that his share of the property was not liable to sale in execution of the decree, as he had obtained a decree for partition before the mortgagees obtained a decree on the mortgages, and was not a party to the suit on the mortgages. Held, that the appellant's share was liable to be sold under the decree obtained by mortgagees against his father, and that the mere circumstance, that he obtained a decree for partition of his share before the mortgagees obtained their decree, did not distinguish his case from that of Sheo Rattan v. Raja Jagmohan Singh (1 O.C.

(182)—Absolute estate, condition in restraint of alienation of—Alienation, what amounts to be condition in absolute restraint of—Transfer of Property Act, s. 10.—In a suit brought by H against B for possession of a village, the parties entered into a compromise, in which it was stipulated that the village should remain in possession of H as owner for ever, that H and his heirs (that is, male issue) should always remain in possession, but should have no power to sell, mortgage, or transfer to a stranger; the reason of this condition being that the village was sold by H's father to the grandfather of B. A decree in accordance with the compromise was passed. Subsequently H mortgaged the village to the defendant, who obtained a decree against H for the sale of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff (H's son) sued the defendant and his father H for a declaration that the mortgage was illegal, null and void, and the village was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree, etc. Held, that the estate which, under terms of the compromise, H acquired in the village, was an absolute estate, and the condition in restraint of alienation, except to B and his heirs and representatives, was one in absolute restraint of alienation and was void. Held, therefore, that the mortgage made by H in favour of the defendant was a perfectly legal and valid transfer. *FAIYAZ HUSAIN KHAN v. (183)—Purchase of mortgagor's rights by mortgagee at sale in execution of decree of third party—Mortgagor's rights, purchase by mortgagee of, for fair price—Transfer of Property Act, ss. 99—Leave of Court to bid at auction sale—Code of Civil Procedure, s. 294—Trusts Act, ss. 88 and 90—Execution of decree.—The appellant and three other persons obtained a money decree against the owner of a village in execution of which they attached the village on May 6th, 1899. B and another, who had likewise obtained a money-decree against the owner of the village, attached it on May 26th, 1899, and had it put up for sale on October 20th, 1900, when it was knocked down to the respondent for Rs. 14,633. The respondent was at the time mortgagee of the village and his mortgage was entered in the proclamation of sale as an incumbrance of the property. It was not suggested that the price paid was less than the market value of the village, or that the respondent was guilty of any misconduct. Held, that the purchase of the mortgagor's rights by his mortgagee, the respondent, extinguished the mortgagor's right to redeem, and that, therefore, the mortgagor, had no rights which could be put up for sale in execution of the decree held by the appellant. Within the meaning of ss. 88 and 90 of the Trusts Act, a mortgagee does not avail himself of his position as such merely by bidding at an auction for his mortgagor's property, nor does he gain an advantage for himself within the meaning of those sections, when he pays a fair price for the property; such a purchase has the same effect as a purchase made by a stranger; and neither s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, applies. THAKUR DURGA SINGH v. SETH JAI DAYAL, 7 O.C. 307. [R., 8 O.C. 327.]

(184)—Mortgage—Mortgage of common holding—Part of mortgaged land already heavily encumbered—Remedies of mortgagee.—A person in possession of a portion of a common holding mortgaged certain specific portions out of it, but the mortgagee was later on deprived of his security as mortgagor's title was defective and as a prior mortgage existed. The mortgagee then claimed to have his security substantiated out of the remainder of the mortgagor's share. The Chief Court held that he was entitled to have his security so made good to him. SUNDAR SINGH v. NATHA, 89 P.R. 1903. (21 W.R. 233, 101 P.R. 1894, 18 M. 492, 32 P. R. 1900, R.)

(185)—Decree on mortgage—Alleged satisfaction of decree—Declaratory suit by sub-mortgagee not maintainable—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—In a suit by a sub-mortgagee, for a declaration that a decree held by a mortgagee had been paid up and satisfied and so became incapable of execution; held, that the suit was not maintainable. A suit for the redemption of the earlier mortgage upon the strength of these allegations ought to have been brought by the sub-mortgagee, and, in that suit, he might have raised these pleas and claimed costs in the event of his allegations being found correct. In order to obtain a declaration that the decree was incapable of execution, it was necessary for the sub-mortgagee, as plaintiff, either to have the decree set aside or else to show the Court that the money due under it had been satisfied and, therefore, to have accounts taken. This is not such a decree as the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, ought to pass under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act. HAR PARSHAD v. PHUL CHAND, 2 A.L.J. 609.

(186)—Mortgage decree obtained by puisne mortgagees—Parties to suit—Sale of mortgaged properties—Suit to establish priority and enforce subsequent mortgage—Intention to keep previous mortgage alive—Zurpeshgi deed, and decree obtained thereon, previous, effect of—Limitation—Subsequent sale of properties previously sold—Knowledge of previous suit and proceeding—Service of summons—Lis pendens—Lien of puisne mortgagees—Evidence.—Decrees obtained by previous mortgagees are admissible as evidence against subsequent mortgagees or their assignors who had executed the subsequent mortgages, after the institution of the suits by previous mortgagees, unless they can show that the non-service of summonses detracts from their evidentiary value and binding character.

When subsequent mortgagees are made parties, to a suit to enforce a mortgage, as puisne mortgagees, who have the right to redeem, and they do not set up their title as prior mortgagees and a decree is obtained, and a suit is subsequently brought by the assignees of the puisne mortgagees, who were so made parties, and the same title on the basis of the same deed is set up to establish priority, the omission to raise the title in the previous suit, will, under s. 13, exp. II of the Code of Civil Procedure, be a bar to their now relying on their prior mortgage, even if they could get the benefit of the prior mortgage (29 I.A. 118, 8 C.W.N. 385, 31 C. 428, F.) (See, however, 1 C.L.J. 337.) A suit brought by the assignees of a Zuripeshgi, more than 12 years after the mortgagees ceased to enjoy the usufruct of hypothecated properties for realization of the mortgage money covered by it, is barred by limitation. If, however, the payment of the Zurpeshgi debt had the effect of subrogation, the plaintiffs are bound by the same rules of law and equity as the original mortgagee and the suit, in so far as it is on the footing of the Zurpeshgi, would be barred (8 C.W.N. 385, D.) The question of the intention of the parties to a mortgage, whether it was intended to keep the mortgage alive, is essentially a question of fact, and the presumption that a subsequent mortgagee, intended to keep alive the prior mortgage, which has been discharged with the money advanced by him and that he is entitled to use the prior mortgage as a shield against intermediate encumbrances is a rebuttable one and the Courts are to look, in each case, to its own facts and circumstances in coming to a conclusion (9 C. 961, 10 C. 1035, R.) A plaintiff ought not to be allowed, after a long lapse of time, when other rights have grown up without the slightest objection or action on his part, to take advantage of a stale claim. BAIJNATH SINGH v. MAHOMED IBRAHIM HOSSEIN, 2 C.L.J. 574.

(187)—Application of mortgage money to discharge a prior encumbrance—Whether mortgage binding on a non-executant whose interest was covered by prior mortgage—Mortgagee's right—Subrogation.—A portion of the mortgage money was applied in satisfaction of a prior encumbrance, which covered the entire mortgaged property, including the 6th defendant's share. The 6th defendant was no party to the execution of the subsequent mortgage. On the question of the 6th defendant's liability; held, that the subsequent mortgage was not binding on 6th defendant's interest in the property; and that plaintiff was not entitled to claim subrogation and stand in the shoes of the earlier mortgagee. CHELLAMCHERLA KALAGAYYA SUNDARAMAYYA v. (190)—Transaction originally a sale—Temporary conversion into mortgage for fraudulent purpose—Sale not affected.—Plaintiff sued for redemption of an alleged mortgage and for possession of the property and for reversal of the sale of the same. It appeared that the original transaction regarding the property in suit was a sale subsequently, for certain fraudulent objects touching third parties, converted temporarily into a mortgage, but voluntarily, as between parties to the fraud, restored to its old form and nature of a sale by a return of the ekrar executed on the part of the plaintiff, and that the defendants held the property not as mortgagees but as purchasers; and the plaintiff having no equity of redemption, his suit must be dismissed. On special appeal plaintiff urged 1st, that defendant cannot be allowed to plead his own fraud; 2nd, that the transaction being a mortgage, a mere return of the ikrar-namah of the plaintiff cannot get rid of the necessity of foreclosure. The High Court held that the finding of the lower Appellate Court was correct and legal. The transaction was in its inception a sale, but it was converted into a mortgage temporarily for certain fraudulent purposes, and, as between the parties to the fraud, subsequently voluntarily restored to its original bona fide state. As to the truth of the principle, "once a mortgage, always a mortgage," there could be no question, but in the present case the transaction was a sale only temporarily made a mortgage, and by the voluntary act of the plaintiff, such mortgage was restored to its original shape of a sale, and in such a case, therefore, there was no necessity of foreclosure. KANHYA LAL v. lower Courts found that this was a fact. Held that, upon the occurrence of a fraudulent transaction, the best rule was to prevent either party obtaining the assistance of a Court of law in recovering by virtue of it. ANOOBA v. BHAN SINGH, 65 P.R. 1871.

(192)—Mortgagee in possession—Account—Reg. XV of 1793.—A loan-transaction of 1837 was effected by two deeds—first a kobala or absolute deed of sale, and secondly, an ikrar-namah or deed of agreement, constituting a mortgage. The ikrarnamah provided that if the mortgagor paid, within ten years, a lump sum at the rate of 12 per cent. interest, he was to recover back the estate and the balance of collections, less charges. The mortgagee entered into possession. No interest on the principal sum was paid at the time stipulated and, in 1859, a suit for possession by redemption was brought by the mortgagor's heir. Held (1) that the ikrarnamah did not take the case out of an ordinary mortgage-transaction; (2) that Ben. Reg. XV of 1793 did not apply. An account was also directed to be taken of what had been received by the mortgagee, upon the footing, that the interest which accrued, from time to time, was to be set off against the rents and profits received, and the mortgagee only to account to the mortgagor for the rents, profits, and interest which he might have received over and above the interest then due to him on the mortgage. Semle: s. 6 of that Regulation is repealed by s. 7, Act No. XXVIII of 1855. RADHABENODE MISSER v. (193)—Collusive mortgage—Sale to auction-purchaser—Evidence.—A sued to recover property mortgaged to him by B, which mortgage he had foreclosed. In execution of the simple money decree which the Court gave him in the suit, he brought to sale the mortgaged property without mentioning his lien for future instalments. The purchaser at the sale, under such circumstances, having been left to suppose that he was purchasing the full proprietary title in the property, was held to have acquired it free of any lien. Ss. 237 and

287 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, clearly impose the duty on the applicant to disclose to the Court his own lien in his application for sale and, on the Court, the duty of specifying the same in the proclamation. Even, therefore, where the purchaser knew of the lien over the property, he would be entitled, in the absence of any notification to the contrary, to assume that the entire property free of any incumbrance has been intended to be sold, and where he has had no knowledge of any lien over the property, no duty is imposed on him by law to search the register for the purpose of ascertaining the existence of any lien over the property. RAM-CHANDRA VITHURAM v. JAIRAM, 22 B. 686. [R., 2 N.L.R. 106, 11 O.C. 206.]

(195)—Mortgage-debt paid at mortgagors' request by third person—Endorsement of payment on mortgage deed—Deposit of deed with third person—Creation of equitable mortgage by deposit in favour of such person.—At the request of the mortgagor, plaintiff, a third person, paid to the mortgagee, the principal sum of the mortgage, the mortgagor himself having paid over the interest. After endorsing such payment on the mortgage-deed, the mortgagee by the mortgagor's directions handed the endorsed deed together with another document of title to the plaintiff. A new mortgage—an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds—was held to have been created in favour of the plaintiff. But, whatever rights such deposit gave to the plaintiff as against the mortgagor, it could give him none as against the defendant and, as there was no contract or privity between the defendant and the plaintiff, the latter could enforce no right directly as against the defendant. His remedy was against the mortgagor. The lower Court's order to the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs was therefore right, but the lower Court was wrong in having held that, under the circumstances, plaintiff was entitled to get an assignment of the mortgage executed to him by the defendant. KHUSHAL v. PUNAMCHAND, 22 B. 164.

(198)—Mortgage of undivided share in joint property by one co-sharer—Subsequent partition suit by other co sharer—Mortgagee no party to suit—Fraud—Suit for recovery of mortgage-debt—Rights of mortgagee.—Allotment of mortgaged property to co-sharer other than mortgagor—Rights of such co-sharer—Re-opening of partition.—Where an undivided share in joint property has been mortgaged by a co-sharer without the knowledge of the other co-sharers, and, owing to fraud on the part of the co-sharer-mortgagor and the mortgagee, the latter was not made a party to a subsequent suit for partition brought by the other co-sharers, held that, in a suit for recovering the mortgage debt, the mortgagee could proceed only against that portion of the joint property which has been allotted to the co-sharer-mortgagor at the partition. [Appl., 8 M. L. T. 133=20 M. L. J. 394; R., 2 L. B. R. 167, 18 L. R. 187, 33 M. 429=7 M. L. T. 143=20 M. L. J. 330=5 Ind. Cas. 92.] W, one of four brothers, W, X, Y, Z, who owned certain property in common and who, for convenience sake were enjoying separate portions of the property, without any formal partition,—mortgaged two plots of land which were in his possession to the first defendant. The other three co-sharers had no knowledge of the mortgage. The two plots of land in the possession of W having been allotted to X and Y in the two suits for partition which they brought for division of their shares in the joint property and to which the mortgagee was no party, X and Y went to take possession, when they were obstructed by the mortgagee.—In the present suit for possession brought by X and Y against the mortgagee (first defendant) and the heirs of W (defendants 2 to 9), it having been found that the mortgagee defendant had held back his claim fraudulently and in collusion with the other defendants, the Court ordered that the partition which had been effected between the plaintiffs and the ancestor (W) of the defendants 2 to 9 should be re-opened, allotted the encumbered portion of the joint property to the share of defendants 2 to 9, and, in place thereof, assigned lands of similar value to the plaintiffs. LAKSHMAN v. GOPAL, 23 B. 385.

(199)—Mortgage—Sale of mortgaged property by mortgagee under power of sale—Oral promise by mortgagee to postpone sale—Admissibility of evidence in respect of—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso 4—Extension of time for performance of promise—Indian Contract, Act IX of 1872, s. 63.—The first defendant (mortgagee) sold the mortgaged property to the second defendant under the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed. The plaintiff mortgagor sued for a declaration that the sale was void and for redemption, contending that, on the day before the sale took place, the first defendant orally agreed to give him four days' time within which to pay off the mortgage debt and to postpone the sale, and that the second defendant had notice of this agreement prior to his purchase. Held that oral evidence of this agreement was admissible, because it did not fall within proviso 4 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act (1 of 1872), as being an agreement to modify any of the terms of the mortgage. But, it was merely an agreement by the mortgagee to forbear for a period of four days from the exercise of the power of sale contained in the mortgage. The mortgage-deed in the above case was executed on 28-12-1895 and the debt was re-payable on 28-12-1896. The sale took place on 12-5-1897. The mortgagee's promise to postpone the sale for four days, no doubt, involved a forbearance of the exercise of the power of sale, and a consequent extension for the same period of the mortgagor's right to redeem. But it was not an extension of the time for the performance of the mortgagor's promise to pay the mortgage-debt as fixed in the deed in the sense in which the expression "time for performance of the promise" is used in s. 63 of the Contract Act. The time for performance in that sense never ceased to be 28-12-1896. The time for performance of the contract must not be confounded with the time within which, notwithstanding default in performance, the mortgagor in default might still redeem. So, the mortgagee's agreement to postpone sale was not an extension of the time for performance of the mortgagor's promise to him, but an agreement to refrain from exercising for a stated period the right of sale arising from non-performance. That being so, s. 63 of the Contract Act did not apply. TRIMBUK GAN-GADHAR RANADE v. BAGWANDAS MULCH-AND, 23 B. 348.

(200)—Prior san-mortgage without registration—Decree on subsequent unregistered mortgage by one of the owners—Purchaser at sale in execution of decree—Sales of mortgaged property in execution of decree on mortgage and of money decree—Distinction between interests conveyed.—H and his sons B and C executed a san-mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in 1885. This mortgage was not registered. In 1886, C alone mortgaged the same property under an unregistered deed. Defendant was a Court purchaser of the property in execution of a decree obtained under the mortgage against C, and he held a registered sale-certificate. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff to have his san-mortgage realized by the sale of the mortgaged property. Defendant pleaded that, as against the plaintiff's unregistered san-mortgage, his registered certificate of sale was entitled to priority. Held, that the defendant purchased at the Court-sale the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor subject to existing equities against the property sold, and plaintiff's prior mortgage, though unregistered, was a valid charge. The defendant, as purchaser, knew that he was purchasing under an unregistered mortgage and therefore subject to unregistered incumbrances of prior date. The root of his title was the subsequent unregistered mortgage and he could therefore claim no better position than the mortgagee under whose mortgage he purchased. The registration of the defendant's certificate of sale cannot give it priority over the plaintiff's mortgage. The scope of the estate which the Court by its certificate had actually conveyed to the defendant could not be enlarged by the mere registration of the Court's conveyance. The following distinction has been held to obtain between a decree for the sale of mortgaged property obtained by a mortgagee upon his mortgage and a decree for the sale of such property under a money decree, viz., that notwithstanding the form of the words used in the proclamation of sale in the former case, the respective interests both of the mortgagee and the mortgagor (i.e., both of the plaintiff and the defendant) pass to the purchaser while, in the latter case, the interest of the defendant alone passes. It was by reason of the above distinction that the defendant in this case had to be regarded as having taken the interest of C's mortgagee as well as that of C in the property as it existed at the date of the mortgage, i.e., subject to all valid incumbrances existing at that date. MAGANLAL v. SHAKRA GIRDHAR, 22 B. 945. [R., 28 B. 153, 6 Bom. L.R. 1013, 1 N.L.R. 125, 12 O.C. 45=2 Ind. Cas. 57.]

(201)—Mortgagor, omission of, to plead failure of consideration—Effect—Subsequent suit for possession.—The omission by a mortgagor to plead in the foreclosure suit non-receipt of the whole of the consideration money would debar him from setting up that plea in a second suit for possession. AFZUL KHAN v. CHYTUN ROY, W.R. 1864, 206.

(202)—"Ubhayapattam" mortgage, meaning of—Clog on redemption—Covenant to renew mortgage perpetually—Transfer of Property Act, s. 98, Application of, to anomalous mortgage made before the passing of the Act.—An "Ubhayapattam" is equivalent to a kanom mortgage. A covenant to renew perpetually is a clog on the mortgagor's right to redeem and is inoperative, if it is entered into simultaneously with the mortgage. Where an anomalous mortgage was created prior to the Act, the question of its redemption has to be determined with reference to the law in force prior to that Act. It was observed that it was unnecessary to express any opinion as to the effect of s. 98, Transfer of Property Act, on similar covenants in anomalous mortgages executed after the passing of the Act. According to the rules of equity, which formed the basis of the course of decisions prior to the Act, but subsequent to 1858, any agreement entered into at the time of mortgage, having the effect of clogging the right of redemption, was inoperative. NEELAKANDAN NAMBU-DRIPAD, alias MURTHI KHANDAN v. ANANTHA KRISHNA IYER, 16 M.L.J. 462=1 M.L.T. 426=30 M. 61.

(203)—Mortgage—Mortgagee's right to make improvements—Further appeal—Rule IV framed under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, 1887.—Plaintiff sued for a declaration that the mortgagee was not entitled to improve the house mortgaged and that he be enjoined not to prevent the plaintiff from doing so. Held, that the mortgagee, whose mortgage had 17 years to run, was entitled to improve the mortgaged property if he did not claim the cost of improvements from the mortgagor. Held, further, that the suit comes under Rule IV of the rules framed under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, 1887, and that a further appeal lies. LAKHU v. SUNDAR DAS, P.L.R. 1900, 135.

(204)—Mortgage—Purchase of mortgagor's rights—Houses erected on land by purchaser—Mortgagee's lien not extended.—Where the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in the mortgaged land, took possession of the land under his purchase, and there being in the original agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee nothing to prevent him, built houses upon the land, the mortgagee's lien could not, upon any principle of equity, extend to such houses, especially where, as in the present case, the mortgagee, though he knew that the houses were being built on the mortgaged land, offered no objection at the time. MUHAMMAD NAWAZ v. UTTAM SINGH, 94 P.R. 1881.

(205)—Mortgage—Interest—Mortgagor bound to pay interest up to the date of payment—Mortgagee's right to compensation for repairs and improvements.—Held, that upon redemption of the property mortgaged by him the mortgagor must pay interest agreed by him, due up to the date of payment of principal and interest, independently of the provisions of the Limitation Act, which only affect the right of the plaintiff suing for it. Held also, that the mortgagor being bound to pay for ordinary repairs, and not having performed them, the mortgagee was entitled to make a reasonable charge for them on redemption, but he was not entitled to claim for alterations or improvements made by him without having obtained written permission from the mortgagor. MUSSAMMAT BHAGWANTI v. MELA MAL, 33 P.L.R. 1903.

(206)—Mortgage of Niawadari rights—Custom—Gandapur Tract, D.I. Khan District.—In the Gandapur Tract of the D. I. Khan District, a niawadari mortgagee may, by custom, acquire rights in the lands held niawadari by him, which are not extinguished by the redemption of the mortgage under which he holds. The mortgagors are entitled to redeem the niawadari mortgage, but such redemption does not give them any rights to immediate physical possession of any land held in cultivating possession by tenants, whether those tenants are the niawadars, whose mortgage is redeemed or others. MUHAMMAD HASSAN KHAN v. (207)—Mortgage—Payment of debt—Persons claiming under mortgagee, rights of.—Where a mortgagee allowed certain persons to occupy the property mortgaged to him (a house) and the mortgagors paid off the mortgage and sued to recover possession from the occupiers, held that the latter were bound to vacate as the right of the person under whom they came into possession had expired. BULDEO v. MOHUR SINGH, 18 P.R. 1866.

(208)—Act VIII of 1871, s. 17—Agreement to mortgage—Agreement not to alienate—Agreement not registered, how far valid.—Defendant, having taken a loan from the plaintiff, promised in writing to mortgage his land to the plaintiff, on the death of the defendant's father and also promised not to sell or mortgage the land. The agreement was not registered. Held that, so far as the agreement was one to mortgage, it did not require to be registered. The other part of the agreement, by which the defendant bound himself not to alienate the land until plaintiff's debt was paid off, was of a nature which required registration, inasmuch as it purported to limit in future defendant's rights and interests both vested and contingent in the land, of the value of more than Rs. 100, and therefore, under cl. 2, s. 17, of Act VIII of 1871, registration thereof was necessary. JAMEYAT RAI v. Mourusi Holding.

(1)—Mourusi holding, jointly acquired and cultivated—Survivorship.—An occupancy holding was acquired by two out of four brothers, and not by the common ancestor, the father. The two brothers, and their sons after them continued to cultivate jointly. On the death of the only son of one of the brothers, the sons of two brothers who had taken no part in the acquisition claimed to participate in the share of their deceased cousin. It was held that such share passed by survivorship to the sons of the brother who was the original joint tenant, and that the plaintiffs had no right to succeed. Held also that the "hereditary tenant," that is, the body of co-sharers, was not dead so as to open out a succession, and that neither the landlord nor any collateral heirs of the deceased had any foundation for claiming the interest in the holding enjoyed by the deceased. PREM SINGH v. of a mango garden planted by the defendants in their mourasi holding. Held that there was no custom proved by which a hereditary tenant, paying rent in cash, who plants a garden in his holding, becomes liable, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, to share the produce with the proprietors. MASSANIA v. (10)—Hypothecation of moveables—Law applicable—Registration—Notice—Tr. P. Act, ss. 53, 86, 88—Contract Act, s. 108—Applicability.—The Indian Contract Act and the Transfer of Property Act do not recognize the non-possessory hypothecation of moveables. The rights and remedies of the parties to such a contract depend in every case upon the legal stipulations going to make up that contract, subject to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. There can be no foreclosure decree, as the term is understood in Indian law, in respect of moveables. (13 C. 262, R.) If a subsequent transferee of moveable property has notice, at the time of his acceptance of the transfer, that such property is already hypothecated to a particular person for a lawful debt, he must be held bound by such hypothecation to the same extent as his transferor. Such notice must be actual notice. The transferee is not put upon inquiry of any kind if there are no circumstances going to raise a reasonable presumption that the transferor in possession of the property has no right to make the proposed transfer, or that the property is already subject to some liability. A prior hypothecation of moveable property without possession is not postponed to a subsequent transfer of such property by the person in possession thereof, if the subsequent transferee has actual notice of such hypothecation at the time of the transfer being made to him. Registration does not operate as notice of such hypothecation. NANHUJI v. CHIMNA, 7 N.L.R. 72 = 10 Ind. Cas. 869. (2 C.P.L.R. 108, 13 C.P.L.R. 43, 10 A. 133, F.)

(11)—Owner in possession—Creation of lien on property—Subsequent sale thereof—Passing of title to purchaser.—A good title to moveable property in the possession of the owner can be conveyed, notwithstanding he has created a lien on the property. RAMANNA SADASHEO GANDLI v. RAMJI, 2 C.P.L.R. 109, note.

(12)—Suit for recovery of specific moveables—Refusal of defendant to produce—Valuation put by plaintiff accepted.—The plaintiff sued for the recovery of certain specific moveable property, which he valued at Rs. 1,360, and produced evidence to show that this was the value. The defendant refused to accept the plaintiff's valuation, but would not produce the articles, which, he did not deny, were in his possession.

They can exercise the rights of landlords over the tenants who actually cultivate the land. Unless the cultivators can show that they have acquired a right of occupancy in the land, they must be liable to ejectment at the will of the ex-muafidar's heirs, with whom the settlement is made. The mere facts that the land is land owned in common by the whole village, and that some members of the proprietary body are the cultivators of the land do not give those cultivators right of occupancy under s. 5 (1) (b) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. It was also agreed that rent settled should not be reduced or enhanced. At the revised survey settlement the assessment was increased to Rs. 16-12-0. The Mulgar then having sued the tenant for the arrears of rent for six years preceding the suit, with interest, the tenant claimed refund of the increased assessment which he paid and for which the Mulgar was liable: Held, (1) that the amount of assessment Rs. 6-14-6, mentioned in the lease as being payable by the Mulgar, must be deemed to refer to the assessment as it then existed, irrespective of the question of its reduction or enhancement thereafter: that, therefore, the Mulgar remained liable to pay the enhanced assessment; (2) that, as the rent was payable in kind, the arrears of rent were not such a debt as was contemplated by the Interest Act, 1839, which required that there must be a debt or sum certain at the time when the promise was made to bring it within the operation of the Act; and there was no debt certain at that time because the market value of rice then need not have necessarily been the same as the market value at the time of the breach of the contract; (3) that neither was interest recoverable under s. 73, Contract Act, 1872, as damages for breach of the contract to pay rent: since a suit to recover the money value of the rent in kind was a suit to recover unliquidated damages which were measured by the market value of the goods deliverable under the contract on the day they ought to have been but were not delivered, and interest could not run upon unliquidated damages. Multifariousness.

See MISJOINDER.

(1)—Misjoinder.—It is illegal to join different causes of action in one suit against different parties, where each of these parties has a distinct and separate interest (e.g., a joint action, for price of timber, against persons who purchased, each one pair of timber from plaintiff separately from the other, is illegal.) BAROO SIRCAR v. MASSIM MUNDUL, 21 W.R. 206.

(2)—Separate causes of action against several defendants—Single suit whether maintainable.—It is the duty of the Courts to reject plaints when brought against several defendants for causes of action which have accrued against each of them separately, and in respect of which they are not jointly concerned. In the present case, the several defendants had no common interest in the land to the south of the boundary line which the plaintiff disputed, and it by no means followed that, because the line might have gone too much to the north in that part where the plaintiff's estate abutted upon the estate of one of the defendants to the south, it was also too much to the north in those parts where the plaintiff's estate abutted on those of the other defendants. Although it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule that all the defendants in a suit must have a joint interest in all the matters of the suit, yet the causes of action against the several defendants ought not to be, as they were in this case, wholly distinct and unconnected with each other. BABOO MOTEE LAL v. RANEE, THE WIFE OF MAHARAJ BHOOP SINGH, 8 W.R. 64=2 Ind. Jur. N.S. 245. [R., 11 W.R. 543, 11 W.R. 397, 9 C.P.L.R. 125; D., 11 W.R. 273.]

(3)—Multifariousness—Objection—Joinder of causes of action—Permission to withdraw—Procedure.—It is too late for defendants to object with effect to a suit on the ground of multifariousness, after it has been fully tried and decided on the merits; but the objection is one which a defendant has a right to raise on the settlement of issues, or on a motion to take the plaint off the file. (8 W. R. 61, R.) [F., 20 W.R. 147.] Where there has been a misjoinder of causes of action against different persons, and the proper stamp fee on the plaint having been paid, plaintiff prays for leave to withdraw his suit against all except one defendant, the Court may perhaps permit the suit to proceed against such defendant or defendants alone, but it cannot exercise that option for plaintiffs, who insist on their right to proceed against all the defendants. MUNSHI MANIRUDDIN AHMED v. BABOO RAM CHUND, 2 B.L.R., A.C., 341=11 W.R. 273. [F., 20 W. R. 147.]

for misjoinder of causes of action. Combined causes of action may be brought in the Court which has jurisdiction to the full amount of such combined causes of action. KINNOO MONEE DEBIA v. SHOHORAM SIRCAR, 3 W. R. 127. [F., 7 W. R. 409.]

(5)—One suit to set aside several transactions entered into by guardian with different persons—Misjoinder of causes of action—Objection not taken by parties—Dismissal of suit.—A guardian of a Hindu minor alienated the minor's property by mortgage and sale to different persons. A single suit was brought to set aside such alienations nine in number, and no relief was sought against the guardian. The suit was remanded by the High Court on account of the Sub-Judge not having properly framed the issues. Held that, as each of these alienations in fact constituted a separate cause of action, and inasmuch as they are supported by different defendants, they should have formed the subject of several suits, and that it was not necessary at that stage of the case in regular appeal to the High Court, to direct that the whole or any portion of the suit should be dismissed by reason of misjoinder, when no objection had been raised by the parties themselves. MATA PERSHAD v. MUSST. BHUGMANEE, 1 N.W.P. 128.

(6)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 9—Suit to set aside sale-deeds—Misjoinder of causes of action—Order of Court to file separate plaints, effect of.—D, the husband of the plaintiff, conveyed to her all his immovable property by a deed of gift after squandering away all his moveable property. As he continued to live at an extravagant rate, he became deeply involved and in order to clear off his debts, there were executed by him and one B, who professed to act as general attorney for the plaintiff, a succession of sales and mortgages, which resulted in the total dissipation of all the property comprised in the deed of gift. Consequently the plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendants and several other persons, claiming to invalidate the conveyances and sales, of which some had been confirmed by decrees, or had been made in execution of decree, and which related to land situated in two different zillabs. The Court of first instance, at the first hearing, passed an order, purporting to be one under s. 9, Civ. Pro. Code, for the trial of the several causes of action (alleged by the plaintiff) separately, and further directed the plaintiff to file separate plaints. On appeal, the High Court, though holding that the plaint as originally framed should have been rejected on the ground of misjoinder, nevertheless proceeded to dispose of the appeals as the parties did not object, and as the result of the order of the Court of first instance file separate plaints might be regarded as the institution of new suits. They accordingly dismissed the suits relating to the property in a district outside the jurisdiction of the Court of first instance, and in those suits in which, by reason of the value being less than Rs. 5,000, the appeal lay to the District Judge, they returned the appeals to the appellants for presentation in the proper Court. Held that the direction of the Court of first instance, was not within the scope of s. 9, Civ. Pro. Code, as that section does not require the plaintiff to file separate plaints, but provides for the separate trials of the several causes of action contained in the one plaint filed on the institution of the suit. MUSSUMAT RUTTA BEBEE v. DUMREE LAL, 2 N.W.P. 153.

(7)—Each alienation by guardian, a distinct cause of action—Single suit not maintainable to set aside several alienations.—In this case the High Court remarked, with regard to the suit generally, that the plaint had been framed in a manner greatly calculated to embarrass the defendants. Each alienation by the plaintiff's guardians constituted the root of a distinct cause of action, and the first Court ought not to have entertained a suit which combined several of them in one plaint. LOOLOO SINGH v. RAJENDRA LAHA, 8 W.R. 364.

(8)—Property in hands of several defendants under different alienations—Suit to recover—Distinct cause of action.—The property in dispute, in this case, was claimed by the plaintiff as having originally belonged to her husband and then to her son; she alleged that it had passed into the hands of the different defendants by several acts of wrongful alienation to them effected at different times. The first Court was of opinion that the causes of action sued upon were several and distinct as against the several defendants, but, nevertheless, tried the case, as a whole and gave a determination on the merits in favour of the defendants. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Principal Sudder Ameen ruled that, under the circumstances of the case there was no ground for the plaintiff bringing separate suits. Held that the Principal Sudder Ameen was entirely wrong in his conclusion, and that he should have given effect to the objection which was made before him, and tried the case as one made up of so many separate suits against so many different defendants. GOLAM MUSTAFA KHAN v. SHEO SUNDAREE BURMONEE, 10 W.R. 187. [R., 15 W.R. 304; D., 11 W.R. 397.]

(9)—Several Hindu widows, joint suit by, on dispossession—Purchaser defendants, distinct acts of taking possession by—Suit bad on account of multiplicity.—Three out of the five sons of a Hindu having died one after another, ever since their deaths, plaintiffs their widows, were holding possession of the respective shares of their husbands in co-parcenary with the co-sharer-defendants, the other two surviving sons. These co-sharer defendants created debts in collusion with the other defendants and the latter purchased the property at auction and dispossessed the plaintiffs of their shares therein. Plaintiffs accordingly sued jointly to recover possession of the said shares of their husbands. The Principal Sudder Ameen found that the husbands of the first and third plaintiffs both died before their father. It followed from such finding that the ladies never had any right in the property in question, and also that, though the second plaintiff's right to a share appeared to have been made out still, as she too had chosen to sue jointly with the other two plaintiffs to obtain 3-5ths of the property, as of joint right, she was not entitled in this suit to recover 1-3rd on another, namely, her several right. The taking possession of the property by the purchaser defendants was not one act but three distinct acts of three persons without concert with each other. The suit was thus in reality three suits against so many different defendants, and the lower Court ought to have sustained the defendant's objection that the suit was bad on the ground of multiplicity and should have insisted on the plaintiff's making election of a cause of action and of a defendant upon which and against whom they would proceed. HURRO MONEE DOSSEA v. ONOOKOOL CHUNDER MOOKERJEE, 8 W.R. 461. [R., 7 B. 289; D., 16 B. 608.]

(10)—Sales to different Vendees on different dates, single suit not maintainable to set aside—Misjoinder.—Admitting the validity of certain objections presented by the defendants under s. 348 of Act VIII of 1859, one of which was "that this suit being brought for cancelment of sale transactions of different dates in favour of different vendees, is multifarious and consequently liable to dismissal," the High Court confirmed the decree by which the lower Court had dismissed the suit on the merits, but, declared expressly that the High Court proceeded on the ground that there had been misjoinder and not on the merits. BANEE KRISHUN v. KOONDUN LAL, 2 N.W.P. 221. [R., 16 A. 279=A.W.N. 1894, 82.]

(11)—Joinder of causes of action—Claim against different portions of property.—Where the plaintiff claims to recover possession of two distinct portions of a property from which he has been dispossessed at different periods and under different circumstances, and claims them under the same title and from the same party, there is no impropriety in the two claims being joined in one suit. JANOKEE CHOWDHURANEE v. DWAR-KANAATH CHOWDHRY, 1 Hay 555.

(12)—Alienations by deceased member of undivided family—One suit against all the alienees.—A suit brought against a number of alienees of a deceased member of an undivided family, for the recovery of family property illegally alienated by him, is not bad for multifariousness. It is most desirable that the whole of the alienations should be at once before the Court called upon to decide the question in order to secure the soundness of the particular decision and perhaps the avoidance of discordant decisions in different cases upon facts very nearly the same. VASUDEVA SHANBHAGA v. KULEADI NARNAPAI, 7 M. H. C. 290. [Diss., 6 C. W. N. 585; F., 11 M. 106, 12 M. 234, 15 M. 19; R., 16 A. 279, 13 C. P. L. R. 9, 25 M. 736, 6 O. C. 379, 1 P. R. 1905=83 P. L. R. 1905, 9 O. (13)—Suit to recover estate held by several persons under several titles—Misjoinder.—A suit to recover an estate in the possession of several persons, who hold in differedt portions by virtue of several transactions, should be dismissed for misjoinder. TEWAREE RAGHONATH SAHAI v. SYED MAHOMED NAZEER, 4 N.W.P. 108.

(14)—Suit by auction-purchaser for possession—Misjoinder of parties.—In a suit for possession by the auction-purchaser of a talook, many of the former proprietors were added as parties who were themselves the cultivators of the soil, holding separate possession of specific portions of land, and having their houses on the land. Held that separate suits must have been brought against persons claiming separate portions of land. The whole community cannot be sued for all the lands in the village. RAM CHUNDER PAUL v. OMORA CHURN DEB, 16 W.R. 155.

(15)—Misjoinder of parties and causes of action—Test—Effect.—Plaintiff obtained a decree in a previous suit, establishing his title as proprietor of a number of villages constituting one talooqua. Now he sues for mesne profits a number of persons who were severally in possession of the several estates constituting the talooqua. Held that the suit was bad for misjoinder and must be dismissed. In considering a plea of misjoinder in a suit of this nature it is not the plaintiff's title which must be regarded but rather the wrongs alleged as the causes of action. If the alleged wrongs be distinct and separable committed by several persons and proceeding from no combination or conspiracy of such persons, the wrong-doers must respectively be sued separately in respect of their own misfeasance, and they cannot be sued collectively in respect of wrongs to which they have been neither directly nor indirectly parties. Nor is the similarity of the claim any ground for joining in one suit claims which, though similar, are several and distinct against several persons. Nor is the convenience of their trial by one Court. KOONDUN LAL v. RAE HIMMUT SINGH, 3 N.W.P. 86. [R., 16 A. 279.]

(16)—Misjoinder—Suit to set aside alienations made during minority—Purchasers, all of them joined in one suit.—A suit by a person against all the purchasers of his estate, in portions, at different times from his father's widows during his minority, to recover the whole estate on the ground that the alienations are not binding on him, is not bad on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action. The plaintiff claims his share of the family property. The plaintiff's cause of action, the right, is his relation to the family to which the property appertains, and on this right if established, and if he is not otherwise barred from recovering, he will be entitled to that share wherever found. The fact that various persons during his minority have affected to purchase parcels of the property, does not destroy the unity of his ground of action. It will lie upon those who purchased, upon the establishment of his right, to show that the sales which they set up are binding upon him. SAMI CHETTI v. AMMANI ACHY, 7 M. H. C. 260. [R., 6 O.C. 379, 9 O.C. 339, 33 B. 293 = 11 Bom. L.R. 34.]

(17)—Cause of action—Multifariousness.—The suit was for a declaration that certain properties were liable for the amounts of certain decrees. The plaintiff alleged that the properties were those of his judgment-debtor, which had passed intact to the admitted representative of the judgment-debtor, the principal defendant in the suit. The other defendants were nothing better than so many men of straw fraudulently set up by the principal defendant as ostensible purchasers. Held that, if the plaintiff could prove his allegation, it could not be said that he had joined several causes of action against different parties in one suit, for, in reality, he had but one cause of action against one party, the principal defendant. Even if this were otherwise, the plaintiff could not be non-suited on account of the multifariousness of his suit. MR J. P. WISE v. GUREEB HOOSEIN, CHOWDHRY 13 W.R. 271.

(18)—Misjoinder of causes of action—Appellate Court, competency of, to try misjoined suits separately.—In this case the first Court held that there was no misjoinder, as the suit was one for possession against both defendants who opposed plaintiff's possession, and thus also opposed plaintiff's title by purchase; further, that the defendants set up one and the same description of title (viz., putnee leases) against plaintiff and that, consequently, plaintiff had a common cause of action against both defendants. The first appellate Court, however, held that each of the two defendants had separate putnee leases of separate dates each lease conveying to each defendant a separate and distinct putnee right not common to the other, defendant, who, on his part, had his own distinct right under another putnee lease, that thus the defence of each defendant on his title might be entirely different, and that, therefore, plaintiff could not join both defendants in one action. The Judge further observed that he could not make separate trials in the case, on appeal, and dismissed the plaintiff's whole case as against both defendants. The High Court held that, even if there had been a misjoinder of parties, the Judge need not, on that account, have dismissed the suit. He was in error in supposing that he had not the same authority in appeal as Courts of original jurisdiction have. He could have separated the misjoined suits and tried them separately. The powers conferred on the Appellate Court by s. 39 of Act XXIII of 1861 are comprehensive enough to include such action on the Judge's part. SHOROP CHUNDER PAUL v. MOTHOR MOHUN PAUL CHOWDHRY, 4 W.R. 109. [D., 12 W.R. 11.]

rent due separately upon each, and the defendants at the earliest possible time put in a plea of misjoinder, the Judge not only framed an issue upon it, but other issues upon the question of fact involved in the suit, and, after taking the evidence upon the different issues, dismissed the suit upon the ground of misjoinder: Held that the Judge was right in having done so. IMRITNATH JHA v. ROY DHUNPAT SING BAHADUR, 9 B.L.R. 241 = 18 W.R. 288. [R., 7 B. 289.]

(20)—Suit for possession—Dispossession—Cause of action.—In a suit to recover possession on the ground of dispossession by all the defendants in consequence of certain (Act X) decisions, held that there is but one cause of action, and that the fact that the defendants each claim to hold portions of the property under different titles cannot make the suit bad for misjoinder. MUSSAMUT ACKJOO BIBEE v. LALLAH RAMCHUNDER LALL SAHAI, 23 W.R. 400.

(21)—Suit for declaration that lands were wakf—Defendants holding under distinct titles.—In a suit instituted for a declaration of the Court, under s. 15 of Act VIII of 1859, that certain lands and premises in Calcutta were wakf lands, under a certain towliatnamah executed by the ancestor of the plaintiff, the authenticity of which was admitted, and that the defendants who were in possession might be restrained by injunction from recovering the rents of, or intermeddling with, the said lands or premises, and that it might be referred to the Court in chambers to appoint a proper person to act as mutwalli under the said towliatnamah, and that such mutwali, when so appointed, might be declared entitled to the said lands and premises, the causes of action were alleged to have arisen at various times within the last twelve years, and were distinct as to the several defendants who held by different titles. On objection having been taken to the frame of the suit, the Court held that it was informal, as there was a joinder in one suit of several distinct causes of action, and no grounds were disclosed for relief in a suit in equity, and that the proceeding should have been by way of ejectment against each of the defendants. The suit was accordingly dismissed. If the defendants in such a suit be intruders and strangers, there is no common cause against them, and they must be turned out by action of ejectment against each separately. MUZHUR HOSSAIN v. DINOBUNDHO SEN, Bourke, O.C. 8 = Cor. 94.

(22)—Fabrication of document—Ouster—Misjoinder of causes of action.—Where the plaintiff sued for possession, alleging that the defendants had fraudulently combined to avail themselves of a fabricated jamabundee paper as evidence for supporting their mokurraree claims, and had thus ousted him (plaintiff) from the full enjoyment of his milkyut right, held that there was only one cause of action and that the suit was not bad for multifariousness. GUJADHAR PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH v. SAHEB ROY, 19 W.R. 203. [Expl., 13 C. 147.]

(23)—Landlord and tenant—Suit for khas possession by landlord—Plea of mokurruree title—Jamabandi papers relied on by defendant impeached by plaintiff—No proof as to forgery—Right to obtain declaration denying defendant's right to hold land at fixed rent.—Plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants possession of certain land, which was occupied by them and to which they set up a mokurruree title upon the footing of some Jamabundee papers. The plaintiff said that these papers were fabricated and had been fraudulently made use of by the defendants with the knowledge that they were forged for the purpose of supporting their alleged mokurruree title. On this ground, he asked to have these papers declared forgeries and to recover possession of the land. He however failed to prove either that the papers were fabricated or that the defendants made use of them knowing their character as such. Having failed in this, he however asked for a declaration that the defendants had no right to occupy the land, which was the subject of the suit, at a fixed rent. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to have a declaration of this kind for two reasons; firstly, a declaration of this kind could rightly be asked for only in a separate suit against each separate occupant of the land; secondly, the plaintiff having chosen to prove a specific fraud against the defendants and having made his cause of action entirely dependent upon that, he could not be allowed at the trial to succeed upon a matter which was entirely collateral to the fraud, and in the face of a finding that no fraud had been established. SAHEB ROY v. GUJADHAR PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH, 22 W.R. 221.

(24)—Misjoinder of parties—Rent suit—Suit on engagement by different defendants.—Plaintiff sued to recover rent on engagements entered into separately with the different defendants. The Court passed a decree making each of the defendants liable for the whole sum claimed in the suit. Held, that there had been misjoinder of defendants which had affected the decision. Held, also that, if the decree had been passed making each of the defendants liable in proportion to the amount of rent which he had engaged to pay, the High Court would not have interfered with the decision. MOHUNT JAMONA DOSS v. BABOO POOKHUR SINGH, 22 W.R. 133.

(25)—Co-defendants jointly charged with costs—One defendant compelled to pay whole costs—Suit for contribution instituted—Plea of misjoinder.—In a former suit brought against the present plaintiff and defendants which was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, the defendants were charged with costs relating to causes of action with which they had no concern. Plaintiff who was one of those defendants having been compelled to pay the whole of the costs in the said suit, instituted the present suit to recover the balance from his co-defendants in the former suit after deducting his own proper share. On appeal by the plaintiff who was dissatisfied with the decree of the lower Court the respondents appeared and objected that the suit was bad for misjoinder and the High Court accepted the objection and gave effect to it, observing that it was for the interest of all parties that the share that each party to the suit was equitably bound to contribute in respect of the costs paid by the plaintiff can be better ascertained and any defences which he may make can be properly considered in a separate suit and that the combination of the claims against several contributors in one suit is a misjoinder of causes of action. BENI RAM v. HIDAYAT HOSSEIN, 7 N.W.P. 82.

(26)—Cause of action—Misjoinder.—Where one of two decrees was based on an ikrar signed by a person not involved in the other, and lower Court held, in a suit for recovery of money in satisfaction of both decrees, that the cause of action in each was distinct, held by the High Court that a common cause of action was found in the joint liability of the parties. MAHOMED MIRZA v. KHAJAH ABDOOL KAREEM, 25 W.R. 41.

(27)—Usufructuary mortgage—Suit for possession of mortgaged property by redemption pending suit to establish title by purchase of equity of redemption—Different causes of action.—S the father of the defendants held as usufructuary mortgagee a ten biswas share of a certain village. Half of his share was recovered and held by the plaintiff as proprietor. The remaining half, $\frac{2}{3}$ of which had originally belonged to D and $\frac{1}{3}$ to H, was in the possession of the defendants. The plaintiff sued for possession of this half with mesne profits on the allegation that the mortgage had been redeemed by the usufruct, and that he had acquired the rights of D and H, the one by auction-purchase in 1848, and the other in 1873 by purchase from the sons of H, respectively. The defendants pleaded that they held those lands as proprietors, having purchased the rights of D and H in 1847 and 1851 respectively. They further pleaded that as the plaintiff's suit against H's sons in respect of the sale by them was pending, the claim for possession in respect of that portion could not be maintained in the suit and also that, as the rights of D and H had been acquired under separate sales, the plaintiff could not join these claims in one suit. The plaintiff replied that, assuming the claim to H's share could not be maintained on the basis of the alleged sale to him, he was nevertheless entitled to its possession in virtue of his right to D's share, both shares having been jointly mortgaged. The High Court, in remanding the case to the lower Appellate Court, held that, as the defendants had failed to establish the sale of D's share to S (their father), the plaintiff was entitled to have an account taken of the mesne profits, which, on taking the accounts, might be found to have accrued within six years before suit; that the plaintiff was entitled to call upon the Court in the same suit to determine his claim to the possession of H's share and to any surplus mesne profits which might be found due in respect of that share on taking the accounts. The pendency of a suit to establish his purchase did not deprive him of the right to sue to recover possession from the mortgagees, although it might be necessary to determine incidentally in the suit the question at issue in the other suit, and that, assuming the plaintiff to have established his right to D's share but failed to prove the purchase of H's share, he could not, in the same suit, obtain possession of that share on the ground that it was mortgaged jointly with shares they already held, and with the share of D, for, according to his own averment, the mortgage-debt had been redeemed and there was no longer any common liability which they were required to discharge. MOHUN LALL v. JHUMMUN LALL, 6 N.W.P. 246.

(28)—Separate causes of action of several plaintiffs—Irregular joinder of, in one suit—Prayer for single relief—Specific direction in decree.—The plaint permitted to be filed in the first Court contained two separate causes of action on the part of two distinct plaintiffs, and the two plaintiffs purported to sue together as if they were joint plaintiffs seeking a remedy upon one cause of action. The plaint, notwithstanding that it was double in its nature, contained but one prayer, viz., for the delivery up of nekasi papers. Without passing any specific decree, the first Court simply passed an order that the claim be allowed. Held that to allow such a plaint to be filed was not merely a technical irregularity, but an incorrect proceeding liable to lead to the committing of injustice to the defendant. Held, also that it was not sufficient for the lower Court to have merely passed such a vague order, but that it should have passed a decree amounting to a specific order upon the defendant to deliver up the papers. RAM COOMAR SIRCAR v. KALEE KOOMAR DUTT, 10 W.R. 279.

(29)—Distinct causes of action against different defendants—Single suit not maintainable—Misjoinder of causes of action.—Plaintiff, the prayer of a hoondi, instituted this suit to recover the amount of the same making four persons defendants—the drawer of the hoondi, the acceptor of the hoondi, his own endorsee of the hoondi, i.e., the person to whom he had endorsed it, but who afterwards re-conveyed it to him, and finally a person whom he alleged to be the person of whom the drawer was the agent. The High Court remarked that the combination of four such distinct suits in one and the same suit ought not to have been allowed by either of the lower Courts. HABEEL BEPAREE v. (31)—Pre-emption—Misjoinder of causes of action—Misjoinder of parties—Irregularity not affecting merits or jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 45, 578.—In a suit for pre-emption against a number of defendants, it was sought to impeach two different sales, each of which gave a distinct and separate cause of action against different defendants; there was therefore misjoinder both of parties and of causes of action. The Court of first instance in which no objection was raised, gave a decree for the plaintiff, which was reversed by the District Judge on the ground of such misjoinder. Held that the District Judge was wrong, as the defect was not shown to have affected either the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (s. 578, Civ. Pro. Code). Held also that there would be no misjoinder where two different sales to the same person are sought to be impeached in one suit. KALIAN SINGH v. GUR DAYAL, 4 A. 163. (32)—Suit for specific performance and possession—Subsequent purchaser—Misjoinder.—The cause of action in a suit for specific performance of contract to sell land and for possession of land, concerns both the vendor and the subsequent vendee, and a suit against both is not bad for misjoinder of parties or causes of action. KRISHNASAMI v. SUNDARAPPAYYAR, 18 M. 415 = 5 M.L.J. 164. [R., 11 Bom. L.R. 545.]

(33)—Suit for declaration that mortgage-decree affects property comprised in mortgage, in which others have since become interested severally.—Where, in a suit, by the mortgagee of properties for a declaration that his mortgage-decree affected some of such properties, against the mortgagor and other persons, who had become interested in separate portions of such property severally, at sales in execution of other mortgage-decrees in respect of it, held that, as the plaintiff sued in respect of a single transaction affecting several items of property upon a single contract as between himself and his mortgagor, and as the plaintiff was compelled to sue by reason of the fact that, subsequent to the execution of his mortgage, several other persons had become interested in different portions of the property, which, as a whole, was the subject of his mortgage-bonds, the suit was not bad for multifariousness. BUNGSEE SINGH v. (35)—Suit for possession with alternative relief for rent—Misjoinder of parties and causes of action—Procedure—A suit for possession against several defendants, with a claim, in the alternative, for arrears of rent, was properly framed and not bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action, even where it appeared that the claim for possession was sustainable only against some of the defendants, and that a portion of the claim for rent was directed against some defendants, the other portion being directed against all the defendants. Having regard to the provisions of ss. 31 and 45 of the Civ. Pro. Code (1877) even when distinct causes of action are improperly joined, the Court, instead of dismissing the suit, should proceed to separate them and try them separately. JANOKINATH MOOKERJEE v. RAMRUNJUN CHUCKERBUTTY, 4 C. 949. [R., 4 M.L.J. 288 = 19 M. 211, L.B.R. 1872-1892, 355, 31 B. 516 = 9 Bom. L.R. 482.]

(36)—Parties—Multifariousness.—The plaintiffs who were the purchasers at an auction sale for arrears of rent were resisted by the defendants when taking possession. They sued one of the defendants only at first, as he claimed a particular portion of the lands under the tenure. The suit was eventually dismissed on the ground that all the persons who were claimants of any part of the lands ought to have been joined as defendants. Then the plaintiffs brought the present suit against all the defendants. To this suit the latter set up various and distinct defences. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for multifariousness. Held that there was no multifariousness as the plaintiffs' claim was to recover possession against persons who were alleged to be joint trespassers. SHEIKH OMUR ALI v. (40)—Misjoinder of parties and causes of action—Relief asked common to the defendants joined—Practice—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 28.—The plaintiff owned a godown in Bombay. He agreed with Messrs. Khimji Visbham (defendants Nos. 1—6) to let the godown from 1st May 1906 for a fixed term of 12 months. At the date of the agreement, the godown was in the occupation of Messrs. Nensy Khairaz & Co. (defendants Nos. 7, 8). The plaintiff sued the two sets of defendants to recover from either the one or the other set a sum of money for rent of his godown. Messrs. Khimji Visbham alleged that they did not get possession of the premises in terms of the agreement, that they obtained possession of only one compartment out of three on the 22nd May 1906, in consequence of which they had to hire other premises. The second set of defendants, Messrs. Nensy Khairaz & Co. contended that there was an oral agreement with the plaintiff that they should occupy the godown till the end of May 1906, that they gave up possession of a portion of the godown before the 22nd May 1906, and on the 22nd May 1906 they gave up possession of the remaining portion to the plaintiff and the first set of defendants, Messrs. Khimji Visbham & Co. It was objected to this suit that it was bad by reason of misjoinder of parties and causes of action:—Held, disallowing the objection, that the subject matter in respect of which the plaintiff sought relief against both sets of defendants was rent of his godown. It was the same matter as regards both sets of defendants and both sets of defendants were interested in the adjudication of questions involved in the suit and there were many questions of fact which were common to the case of both sets of defendants. The object of s. 28 of the Civil Procedure Code is to avoid multiplicity of suits if it could be done without embarrassment to any of the defendants. The general principle governing the joinder of defendants would seem to be that there must be a cause of action in which all the defendants are more or less interested although the relief asked against them may vary but that separate causes of action against separate defendants quite unconnected and not involving any common question of law or fact cannot safely be joined in one action. MAVJI v. KUVIRJI, 9 Bom L. R. 482 = 31 B. 516. [R., 11 Bom. L.R. 499, 18 M.L.J. 238 = 31 M. 252.]

(41)—Practice—Misjoinder of parties—Misjoinder of causes of action—Plaint, amendment of, in appeal—Plaintiffs and first defendant are members of a joint Hindu family. The second defendant was given in adoption to a different family and the third defendant is the adopted son of the second defendant. Plaintiffs alleged that there was a partition of their family properties except certain portions, and that their family was entitled to a half share in the trade carried on by the second defendant. The plaintiff prayed for partition among themselves of the properties which still remained undivided and also for the dissolution of the trading partnership of which the second defendant was a member. Held, per Sankaran Nair, J. that (a) there was no misjoinder of parties, because there is no provision of law that precludes the plaintiffs from making defendants, 2 and 3, parties to the suit, to make any declaration of the rights of members of plaintiff's family binding on them. (b) but that there was no misjoinder of causes of action, because the dissolution of the trading partnership was unnecessary for the partition of a family property, and the questions that arise for determination in a suit for dissolution of partnership are entirely different from these arising in a partition suit and (c) that in appeal, the plaint might be allowed to be amended by withdrawing the claim for partition and converting the suit into one for dissolution of partnership. Held, per Pinhey, J., that the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action and that the defect was one that cannot be cured, because it was one affecting jurisdiction, and not a mere irregularity. PULAVARTY VENKANNA v. JUPUDY SARAYYA, 5 M.L.T. 117 = 19 M.L.J. 102. (23 B. 597, Appl.)

(2)—Act IV of 1873, s. 19—Suit against Municipal Committee—Limitation.—It was contended for the plaintiff in this case that Act IV of 1873 had no application to the suit which was one founded on a contract and plaintiff was therefore not bound to bring his suit against the defendant Municipal Committee within three months from the accrual of the cause of action. It was held, however, that the defendant acted or purported to act under the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1873 and the provisions of s. 19 of the Act were clearly applicable. The contention that the suit was one founded on a contract was held to be untenable; for, there was no legal contract—a contract in writing as required by s. 18 of the Act—consequently, the suit could not be alleged to be founded on a contract. S. 19 of the Act has been framed in order that all questions between persons and Municipal Committees regarding matters in which the Committees acted under the provisions of the Act could be disposed of without delay and, that being so, the present suit should have been lodged in accordance with the provisions of the section within three months of the accrual of the plaintiff's right to sue. *TIKKU SUDH v. (1)—Resumption by Government of Jaidad tenure—Suit by representatives of prantee—Jurisdiction of Municipal Courts—Arms and ammunition, claim to.—Maharajah Scindia granted a Jaghire to a Begum S, on a jaidad tenure, i.e., upon a grant of a certain district and the revenues thereof, on condition of the grantee keeping up a military force to be employed in the service of Scindia, whenever called upon. The whole administration of the Jaghire including the exercise of Civil and Criminal jurisdiction therein, vested in the grantee, who exercised a sort of delegated Sovereign authority. On Scindia's authority being ceded to the East India Company, the grantee of the jaidad tenure entered into a treaty with the Company, under which she was to hold the tenure under the Company during her life-time. As long as she was alive, British law and jurisdiction were excluded from her dominions. After her death, the Regulation Law, was introduced therein by order of the Governor-General, under Act XVII of 1836. Since the death of the Begum, the Government, acting in the Political Department, resumed the Jaghire and seized the arms and ammunition of the Begum. The representatives in interest of the Begum claimed in this suit the Jaghire and to hold the same free from the payment of any revenue to Government. They also claimed, in another suit the arms and ammunition seized by the Government. The defence was that the suits were not maintainable in the Civil Courts on the ground that the resumption and seizure were acts of State. Held that the resumption was not an act of State, because it was not the seizure by arbitrary power, of territories which, up to that time, had belonged to another Sovereign State. On the contrary, it was the resumption of lands previously held under the Government under a particular tenure, upon the alleged determination of that tenure; the possession being taken under colour of a legal title, which was a title, in the Sovereign Power, to resume and retain or to assess to the public revenue all lands previously held rent-free. If, by continuance of the tenure or other causes, a right be claimed in derogation of this title of the Government, that claim, like any other arising between the Government and its subjects, would prima facie be cognizable by the Municipal Courts of India. (1 M.I.A. 476, D.) Held, upon the evidence, that the plaintiffs failed to establish their title to claim the lands in this suit. It appearing in evidence that the Begum had purchased the arms and ammunition and there appearing nothing to disprove her title thereto, a decree was given in favour of the plaintiffs for the value thereof with interest. (3)—Act III of 1864, B.C., s. 73, expenses of clearance of jungle recoverable under, by Municipal Commissioners.—The Commissioners of a Municipality sued the defendant under s. 73 of Bengal Act III of 1864 for recovering expenses incurred by them in clearing certain jungle which the defendant, in spite of notice to him to clear, failed to do so. Defendant pleaded that he was not liable, as the notice required to be served under s. 73 had not been served upon him by the Commissioners. The Small Cause Judge submitted for the High Court's consideration the question whether the notices issued were legal or not, stating, as his own opinion, that the Commissioners had no authority in law to delegate to their subordinates the power of deciding what jungle was insalubrious and what not and the power to thereon issue the necessary notices. He was also of opinion that the Commissioners, before issuing the notice, were found in each case to satisfy themselves that the particular premises served under the notice were, by reason of thick or noxious vegetation in a state injurious to the salubrity of the town, and holding that, because they neglected to do so, the notices issued were illegal, dismissed the case subject to confirmation by the High Court. The High Court was of opinion that Municipal Commissioners were not bound to go to each particular spot of land personally and individually to ascertain by evidence, or upon their own view, whether the jungle growing there was injurious to the health of the inhabitants or not. They had to ascertain in the best way they could, with the assistance of their officers, whether there was any jungle growing in the town which was noxious and injurious to health, and, if so, to have it removed; if they were obliged to clear

(5)—Act III of 1864 (B.C.)—Suit against Municipality to recover possession—Cause of action.—Plaintiffs, as proprietors of a share of a certain Zemindary, sued the Chairman of the Howrah Municipal Committee to recover possession of certain land on the allegation that the defendants had ousted them by stacking stones thereon and that the cause of action arose when the Commissioners refused to remove the stones, referring the plaintiffs to their legal remedy, if so advised. The defendants' case was that the land had all along been in possession of Government, till Act III of 1864 (B.C.) was extended to Howrah, that the Municipal Commissioners had since then held the lands, that the plaintiffs were barred under s. 87 of the said Act and that the suit was barred by limitation. Held (by Bayley, J.) that the cause of action must not be taken to be the refusal of the Municipal Commissioners to remove the stones which they made in their letter which was simply one in reply to plaintiffs' attorney in the ordinary course of business, and that the Municipal Commissioners properly acted under the law and that they were entitled to the application of s. 87 of the Act. Held, (by Phear, J.) that if the plaintiffs were strictly suing the defendants for damages consequent on the wrong done by them in the reasonable belief that they were exercising the powers conferred upon them by Act III of 1864 (B.C.) the defendants would be entitled to invoke the protection provided by s. 87 of the Act, and that this section did not apply where the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of property kept away from them by the defendants. POORNO CHUNDER ROY v. The mistake of a few rupees in a notice, caused by an obvious error in the addition of the various items, is not a sufficient ground for impeaching or affecting the demand, where the directions of the act have been substantially complied with, as s. 48 of Act III of 1864 protects the Municipal Commissioners against any mistakes in the amount of assessment due, where the directions of the Act have been substantially complied with. GOPEE KISHEN GOSSAIN v. (9)—Act II of 1865 (Bombay)—Act XV of 1867 (Bombay)—Owner—Occupier—Municipal land tax—Liability of Railway Company to pay—Principle of rating in Bombay.—The true mode of construction of enactments is, if it be reasonably possible, to give to a word the same construction throughout the enactment, unless there be something in the context repugnant to that construction. In s. 2 of Act II of 1865 (Bom.), there is nothing in the context to render it imperative upon the Court to hold that the term "owner" necessarily includes a lessee. The definition of owner in that section is perhaps not a very happy one, but the Legislature itself, by ss. 47 and 48, has greatly aided that definition, and showed that the rent spoken of in s. 2 means rent receivable, or which might be receivable, under an original letting, and not a subletting, otherwise, indeed, every temporary occupier who sublets would become an owner and liable to be rated in that capacity—a result which it would not be reasonable to hold as within the intention of the Legislature without some more clear declaration of it than can be discovered in the Act. [R., 34 B. 618 = 12 Bom. L.R. 34 = 5 Ind. Cas. 621.] Where the Government had made over, to a Railway Company, free from all charges and for a number of years, the land required for the Company's Railway, the Government and not the Railway Company constitute the "owners" of such land within the scope of the Bombay Municipal Act, but the latter admittedly liable as "occupier" could be rated as such by the Municipality in respect of their not earnings from the portion of the Railway line within its jurisdiction. In Bombay "the principle upon which the Railway Company is liable to be rated as occupiers is to take the gross earnings of the portion of the line which is within the City (Island) of Bombay, and to make therefrom the following deductions:—1. The expenses of working that portion of the line. 2. The repairs of rolling stock, etc., used on that portion of the line. 3. An allowance for renewal of it. 4. An allowance for a compensation fund. 5. Interest upon the capital necessary for working that portion of the line. 6. Tenant's profit on that capital. "But the income tax is not a proper deduction." (10)—Suit in ejectment against Municipality—Act II of 1884 (Bombay District Municipal Act amendment Act), s. 48—Act VI of 1873 (Bombay District Municipal Act), s. 86—Construction.—The expression "in the case of any such action for damages," as used in s. 48 of Act II of 1884 (Bombay District Municipal Amendment Act) shows clearly that it was contemplated that there might be actions of another description to which the provisions in the former paragraph would be applicable. In other words, there is no reason for concluding, upon the language of the corresponding section of the former Act, (i.e., s. 86 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, VI of 1873) that the section only contemplates "suits to recover monetary compensation for a wrongful Act." A suit in ejectment, not being a suit brought to recover damages "for an act done or intended to be done," was excluded under s. 86 of Act VI of 1873, but "being an action for an act done," that act being the dispossession by the Municipality, with a view to being restored to possession, falls under the provisions of para 1 of s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Act (II of 1884). NAGUSHA v. (13)—Civil Court—Jurisdiction.—Where, in the assessment of a house-tax by a Municipality no breach of the prescribed rules has been committed, the Civil Courts, in the absence of any proof of mala fides, perversity or manifest error, cannot interfere on the mere suggestion that the valuation is too high. Civil Courts have jurisdiction to interfere in cases where the plaintiff's complaint is not merely that the valuation, for the purposes of assessing house-tax, is wrong; but that it has been arrived at in contravention of the rules which are by law applicable. KASANDAS v. ANKLESHWAR MUNICIPALITY, 3 Bom. L.R. 882 = 26 B. 294.

(15)—Water-connection — Rules framed by the Municipality—Construction of the rules.—The plaintiff, the owner of a house in Surat, took in 1898 a water connection from the main pipe laid by the defendant Municipality. Under the rules, he was chargeable with one rupee a month for the water supplied to him and the condition was that his house was not to be inhabited by more than three families. The defendant Municipality made a new set of rules in 1905, under which they called upon the plaintiff to take a separate water connection for each of the families living in his house; and they threatened to cut off the connection in case of non-compliance. The plaintiffs brought this suit to restrain the Municipality from so doing: Held, that under the rules so long as the plaintiff occupied a house not inhabited by more than three families, he was entitled to the water supply. THE SURAT CITY MUNICIPALITY v. (17)—Suit against Municipal Board for declaratory decree to be entered in list of candidates for election as members of Board—Allegation of mala fides against revising tribunal—Maintainability of suit against Board.—Plaintiff sued for a declaratory decree against the Municipal Board in its corporate capacity, to the effect that he was entitled to be entered in the list of candidates for election as members of the Board and for damages. His allegation was that the revising tribunal, on account of their partiality to a rival candidate, passed an order mala fide, striking off the plaintiff's name from the list of candidates for membership. Held that, whether the plaintiff had a right of suit or not in a Civil Court, the Municipal Board in its corporate capacity cannot be made answerable for the misconduct and wrongful acts of the revising authority in preparing the lists, and that the suit, if it can be instituted at all, should have been brought against the revising authority. ABDUR RAHIM v. They must rigidly keep within the limits of the authority committed to them. If they act beyond their powers, they have to make compensation to the person sustaining damage by reason of their unlawful proceedings. An Act like a Municipal Act, which touches the private rights of individuals, must be most carefully construed "without unwarrantable severity on the one hand or unjustifiable lenity on the other" (27 B. 221, R.) Any action to be taken or order to be passed or notice to be issued in the exercise of powers conferred by the Central Provinces Municipal Act, 1903, must be taken, passed or issued, respectively, by the Committee, by means of a resolution passed at a meeting convened and conducted under ss. 15 to 19 inclusive. But, in cases of emergency, the President, or, in his absence or during the vacancy of his office, a Vice-President, may direct the execution of any work or the doing of any Act which the Committees are empowered to execute or do, and the immediate execution or doing of which is, in his opinion, necessary for the service or safety of the public; under s. 66, no power is given to a Committee absolutely to deprive owners of the legitimate use of their lands, but the Committee can only impose conditions to ensure the safety and sanitation of the building and suitability of its structural appearance relatively to neighbouring buildings, and also to conserve the health, safety or convenience of the public, or of persons dwelling in the vicinity. Under s. 67, a Committee cannot require any projection or structure over any public drain to be removed, if the projection or structure has been lawfully in existence at the date of the commencement of the Act, without making reasonable compensation for damage caused by such removal. (23 B. 248, R.) But power of removal of projections without compensation is limited to cases of altogether new structures, and does not extend to structures taking exactly the place of pre-existing structures. (25 C. 160; 21 M. 4; R.) Any projection, in the absence of any rule declaring it a public or common nuisance under the former Act, and in the absence of any action by way of civil proceedings for its removal by the Committee, must be held to be lawfully in existence. Before a Committee can acquire a power to pull down a building erected or re-erected in violation of the provisions of s. 66, it must give a notice to remove under sub-s. (5), and also a second notice under s. 153 (3) if the first notice is not complied with. The exercise of its discretion by an authority like a Municipal body, in respect of a matter within its jurisdiction, when that discretion has been honestly and bona fide exercised, cannot be controlled by an action in Court. But if the discretion is capriciously or perversely exercised, and injury results to the plaintiff, he may then have a cause of action, and not till then. (25 M. 118, 26 C. 811, 22 B. 230, R.) Where a chapri was in existence for 20 years, and plaintiff took down the roof and the posts, and, after fixing new posts, put back the roof in its old place, held, the renewal of the old posts, and then to put back the roof in its old position can scarcely be called rebuilding a building. Plaintiffs having thus failed to comply with the terms of the rule regarding the levy of Octroi on Government stores passing a Municipal barrier, held that, in the absence of any special agreement between them and the Octroi contractors, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the refund of the duty paid by them. Also, the practice followed in previous years by other octroi contractors could not be treated as binding on the defendants. CHUHAR SINGH v. GOKAL CHAND, 97 P.R. 1882.

(21)—Act XXVI of 1850—Rule of Municipal Committee to forfeiture of land left unbuilt, ultra vires.—The rule passed by the Municipal Committee in this case to the effect that land, not built upon within two years, should be forfeited—involving as it did a power in the Commissioners to compel forfeiture for any omission to so build upon any piece of land within the town or its suburbs within the Municipality—was not a rule within the powers conferred by Act XXVI of 1850 passed with the object of enabling improvements to be made in towns and also limiting the penalty for any breach of any rule under the Act to Rs. 50. POWELL v. JEHANGEER AND CO, 36 P.R. 1869.

(22)—Act XXVI of 1850—By-law XIV—Not ultra vires.—By s. 6, Act XXVI of 1850, the Municipal Commissioners were given authority to prepare rules for effectually accomplishing the purposes for which they were appointed. One of the objects for which the rules must provide was the definition and prohibition of nuisances within the town or suburb. By-law XIV, the legality of which was in question, provided that the Commissioners might cause the removal of an obstruction after a specified term had passed. Held that as the by-law certainly gave the Commissioners the power of carrying into effect the purpose for which they were appointed, it was not ultra vires of the Commissioners, nor was it beyond the power of the Government to sanction. When a Municipality has not obtained such sanction of the Government upon its certificate that it had a bonded warehouse system, it has no authority to levy octroi upon "through" goods or goods in transit. Though a person is a member of a Municipal Committee, he is still entitled to insist on the necessity of express notice of the bonded warehouse rules of the Municipality, as such fact does not dispense with proof of such notice. AHMED BUKSH v. Murder.

(1)—Murder of person by one who would be his heir, effect of.—The point whether a Hindu who has murdered a person is prevented by the murderer from succeeding to his estate is one left untouched by the Hindu Law; but it is a rule of universal application that no one should derive an advantage from that which deserves punishment. The effect of the murder is not to exclude the murderer from the inheritance so as to prevent the very vesting in him thereof but merely to disentitle him to any beneficial interest in the inheritance. Such beneficial interest will vest in those who would be entitled to the inheritance if the murderer were out of the way. VEDANAYAGA MUDALIAR v. VEDAMMAL, 27 M. 591. [R., 32 B. 275 = 10 Bom. A defined share of an estate can be the subject of a valid gift, and mutation of names in the donee's favour is equivalent to giving him possession, though the donor manages the estate on the donee's behalf. *SIRMAST KHAN v. Mutiny Act, 1857.

(1)—Act of State—Seizure of property during Mutiny of 1857—Subsequent restoration—Subsequent seizure—Validity of—Restoration by Agent of Government—How far effective—Ratification of the Act by Government—Effect of Act IX of 1859.—The plaintiff, a Mahomedan British subject, resided in Delhi during the Mutiny of 1857, and was expelled in common with all the residents of that city in September, 1857. The immoveable property of the plaintiff was seized and held under military occupation until 11th January, 1858, when the management of the city was transferred to the Civil authorities. On the 27th September, 1857, Mr. Egerton, Collector of Delhi, recorded a proceeding to the effect that, by a general order, the houses of the Mahomedans in the city of Delhi had been attached and the Kotwal had been instructed to seal up each house. The plaintiff then went to Sonapat. There he was arrested and taken before the Magistrate of Panipat who ordered his release on his giving security for his appearance. Afterwards, his name having been entered in a list of the rebels of Delhi, he was tried before the Special Commission, which, under Acts XI, XIV and XVI of 1857, held Courts at Delhi in July, 1858. On giving security for his appearance, he was set at liberty. On a petition by the plaintiff, Mr. Egerton, the Deputy Commissioner, ordered that the name of the plaintiff should be struck off the list of rebels. In December, 1858, the plaintiff presented a petition to the Commissioner of Delhi praying for the restoration of his houses in the city of Delhi and for a ticket permitting him to reside in the city. A copy of this petition was sent to the Deputy Commissioner for report. A report was submitted, but no order was passed on it. Up to this time plaintiff's endeavours to obtain the release of his household property had been unsuccessful, and the property had remained in the possession of Government from the date of the fall of Delhi. Then the Queen's Proclamation was issued extending clemency to all offenders except those who had been convicted of having directly taken part in the murder of British subjects, and, in Letter No. 848, dated 29th December, 1859, the Governor-General wrote to the Lieutenant-Governor that the attachment upon the houses of the Mahomedan residents in the city of Delhi might be removed. On the 24th January, 1860, the Kotwal of Delhi, wrote to the Deputy Commissioner to the effect that the plaintiff was applying for the release of his property with reference to the 'general order of release.' The Deputy Commissioner passed an order on this petition on the 9th March, 1860, that the plaintiff should be informed through the Kotwal that he could not take advantage of the general order of release and that it could not affect his property. On the 11th March, 1860, the plaintiff petitioned the Deputy Commissioner that he had been cleared of all complicity in the rebellion and prayed that a ticket of release of his property might be given him under the general order of Government. This was referred to the Kotwal who reported that he was entitled to get back his property. On 27th March, 1860, Mr. Plowden, the Officiating Deputy Commissioner, passed an order that the applicant's property should be released. The Kotwal put him in possession of the property. The plaintiff then petitioned the Punjab Government for permission to travel where he pleased in the exercise of his profession as a Hakim. On the 8th June 1861, the Punjab Government granted him the permission sought. On 18th July, 1861, however, Mr. Cooper, Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, sent a memo that the order of 27th March, 1861, required re-consideration. The Commissioner forwarded this to the Judicial Commissioner who, in a letter dated 29th July, 1861, replied that the release of the property was void on account of the non-competency of the party to be released. On receipt of this letter, the Deputy Commissioner was instructed to attach the property and explain the order to the parties concerned. On the 15th August, 1861, the plaintiff petitioned the Punjab Government against the re-attachment of his property. The Government declined to interfere with the order of the Judicial Commissioner. Petitions by the plaintiff to the Government of India and the Secretary of State proved equally unsuccessful. Hence the present suit for possession and mesne profits. Held that, although the plaintiff might have had no right to maintain a suit against the Government before possession was actually made over to him in 1860, yet, after that possession he was entitled to be maintained in it until dispossessed in due course of law. The Government must show itself to have been in a position rightly to take the immoveables back from the plaintiff in 1861 by reason of the strength of its own legal title to them. The act of War or State in reference to the immoveables of Delhi in 1857-58 would not give the Government a valid title unless they could show that the act of restoration was altogether inoperative and a perfect nullity. As it was clear from the first occupation of the town, the Deputy Commissioner ex officio exercised no little control over the questions relating to property and its disposal, and as the general attachments of 1857 and 1858 were both effected by the order of the Deputy Commissioner and the orders of the Governor-General in Council issued in December, 1859, to the effect that the time had come for restoration in certain cases, were sent to the same officer for his information by the Commissioner to whom the Letter No. 848 was sent directly by the Secretary to the Government, and as, when the general order had been thus issued by the Governor-General in Council, there being no organised department to which it was issued, the Deputy Commissioner was as much authorised to carry it out as the Commissioner, the act of Mr. Plowden in restoring the property to the plaintiff was not without legal operation when viewed from the point of view of a third party—one of the public—claiming a right to insist upon the act as binding against the Government. Even if Mr. Plowden did exceed his authority, the Government acquiesced in his act as it was not possible that the transfer of the property by the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi should have remained unknown to the Government for the space of a year, and as, to a certain extent, the plaintiff brought home to the Government actual notice of the restoration of his property in 1860. At all events, the neglect on the part of Government to inform itself of the mode in which the Delhi immoveables were being dealt with in 1860 and 1861 could afford no excuse for the absence of the repudiation of Mr. Plowden's act of restoration within a reasonable time. Therefore the effect on the plaintiff's rights of the order of restoration and of the counter-order and of the actual possession enjoyed by the plaintiff between the dates of the two orders was to entitle him to succeed unless he was barred by Act IX of 1859. But that enactment contemplated property actually remaining under seizure in the hands of the Government, whereas in this case, the plaintiff, as soon as he recovered possession of his property, was so placed that it would have been useless, if not impossible for him, to have taken proceedings to have his title declared. Thus plaintiff was entitled to a decree with costs. He would also be entitled to mesne profits for 6 years previous to the date the suit was lodged and to the date he might obtain possession under the decree. (Per Melville, J., dissenting): The original act of seizure of 1857 was an act of State and the Court had no jurisdiction to question the validity of that act of seizure. Though there was no express order for the confiscation of the plaintiff's property, the confiscation was not the less complete. The repeated refusals of the Deputy Commissioner to restore the property indicated clearly the intention to retain the property as confiscated to Government. The letter of the Government of India No. 848 could not be held to have a higher force than the Queen's amnesty, and as the latter had no retrospective effect, neither had the former. The Deputy Commissioner was not entrusted by the letter No. 848 with authority to release at his pleasure and without reference to Government, property which had been declared to be confiscated, whether such confiscation had been formally adjudicated or whether it had been declared by executive orders passed by his predecessor. Mr. Plowden, then, was not acting within the scope of his authority, and the Government could not be bound by his act, nor could it be held that his act was ratified by the Government. The plaintiff could not have contested in a Civil action the original confiscation of 1857-58, and the mere accident of the irregular and unwarranted restoration of 1860 could not be held to invest the plaintiff with the title of which he had been previously deprived. The title of the Government was therefore valid as against the plaintiff. HAKIM SAADUDDIN v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, 12 P.R. 1874.

(2)—Mutiny Act, s. 99—Cognizability of suit against Military officer not affected by provisions of s. 17, Civ. Pro. Code.—The defendant who was a Military officer on duty at Dehra Dun was sued for money due on a promissory note executed by him at Mian Mir. The Judge refused to receive the plaint, on the ground that although the cause of action had arisen at Mian Mir, and the amount was within the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of his Court, he was debarred from hearing the suit by the provisions of s. 99 of the Mutiny Act, as the defendant was doing duty at Dehra Dun and could only be sued there. The Chief Court was also of opinion that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The provisions of the Mutiny Act were in no way affected by the new Civ. Pro. Code. If the defendant was residing within the local jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court, that Court alone would have jurisdiction to try the suit against him. If he was not so residing within the local jurisdiction of any Small Cause Court, the suit would be cognizable only by a Court of Requests. The Court of Small Causes at Mian Mir within which the defendant did not reside, at the time of the institution of the suit in that Court, had therefore no jurisdiction to try the suit. JAMSETJI'S SONS v. DATTATRAYA, 4 Bom. L.R. 743=27 B. 363.

(2)—Capacity to hold property.—A math, like an idol, is, in Hindu Law, a judicial persona capable of acquiring, holding and vindicating legal right, though of necessity it can only act in relation to those rights through the medium of some human agency. When the property is vested in the math, then litigation in respect of it has ordinarily to be conducted by, and in the name of, the manager, not because the legal property is in the manager, but because it is the established practice that the suit should be brought in that form. A person in whose name a suit is thus brought has in relation to that suit a distinct capacity: he is therein a stranger to himself in his personal and private capacity in a Court of Law. In connection with the property of a math there are two distinct classes of suits: those in which the manager seeks to enforce his private and personal rights and those in which he seeks to vindicate the rights of the math. The rights of the math cannot ordinarily be prejudiced by the result of a suit of the former class. BABAJIRAO v. LUXMANDAS, 5 Bom. L.R. 932=28 B. 215.

(2)—Mootawallee holding office, right of worshippers in mosque to restrain acts of—Mootawallee, if competent to determine by himself whether particular act is or is not for benefit of mosque.—Plaintiffs, the worshippers at a certain mosque, alleged that the defendant, the mootawallee of the mosque, had encroached upon the boundaries of the mosque, and prayed for the removal of the defendant from his office. The Chief Court held that the proper remedy was not his removal from the trust. It was quite consistent that the mootawallee should continue in the trust while the worshippers might have the right to restrain him by an order of Court from doing a particular act. The powers of mootawallee are very considerable and he has the right to decide what, in his opinion, is beneficial for the mosque, and, that some of the worshippers took a different view from him could not make any difference. *WULLEE OOLA v. applicable to the parties was the law by which their family was governed before its conversion to Christianity, and that it was not shown to what caste or religion the family belonged before conversion. Held, (1) that the law prior to conversion was a point on which it might not be necessary to give any evidence at all, because the convert might by his course of conduct after conversion show by what law he intended to be governed. The Judge ought to have taken evidence and considered the will made by the plaintiff's father, the language, wording and nature of which could not be ignored. (2) The law applicable to the succession of any individual depended on his personal status, which again mainly depended on his religion. In every case, for the purpose of determining the status personalis, regard was to be had to the mode of life and habits of the individual, and to the usages of the class or family to which he belonged. (3) If no specific rule could be ascertained to be applicable to the case, then the Judges administering justice were to act "according to justice, equity and good conscience." Per RANADE, J.—The convert's course of conduct after conversion by attaching himself to a class which has a personal law of its own, or by personally observing such usage or custom, must determine the question of what law he has preferred to attach himself to. HASTINGS v. GONSALVES, 1 Bom. L.R. 53=23 B. 539.

(4)—Family living jointly—Presumption—Senior member cannot have status of manager of joint Hindu family—No authority to bind other members—Agency—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865).—The senior member of a native Christian family governed by the Indian Succession Act cannot have the status of the managing member of a joint Hindu family even if all members of the family live together and the senior manages the affairs of the family. A Native Christian cannot borrow on the credit of others living with him so as to bind their estate, without authority or agency. Such an agency cannot be implied by the mere fact of his acting for other member. APPAJU UDAYAN alias SAVARIMUTHU UDAYAN v. SUSAI UDAYAN, 15 M.L.J. 235.

Native Laws.

(1)—Law administered by British Courts when parties are natives.—It cannot be said that when this country was brought under English rule, the English law became the territorial law of the country. Such was not the case even as regards what may be called Indo-English law, i.e., that modified form of English law which is usually administered in Indian Courts, when it is at all administered. In fact, in all matters of inheritance and of contract used in the widest sense of the terms, it was the native laws and usages that were administered by the British Courts in India in suits between natives, the general Mahomedan law being administered as the personal law of the Mahomedans, and the general Hindu Law as the personal law of the Hindus. This privilege of the natives to have their own personal laws administered to them, was recognized by Statute 21, George III, C. 70, s. 17; and although the section only provided against specific mischiefs which had arisen in the exercise of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, yet it must be interpreted not as exhausting by enumeration the classes of rights which it specifically guards, but rather as recognizing the larger general principles on which these rights stand, by forbidding any such encroachments on them for the future as actual experience had in the past shown to be possible. This rule is also in accordance with the general principle that the private law of a community is not to be affected by a change of rulers, although there may be points to which, while it comes into contact with the public law, it has to yield. But the establishment of a Court to administer the law "according to justice and right" does not of itself imply any change in the law to be thus administered. Therefore, amongst Hindus, within the Island of Bombay, all private relations must in their whole range be taken to rest still on the basis of the Hindu law, except where the public law or the direct commands of the legislature have abolished or modified it. In re KAHANDAS NARRANDAS, 5 B. 154.

(3)—Location of British troops in—Power of Cantonment authorities as to grant or user of land—Treaty, absence of—Power restricted to military purposes—Land belongs to State—Parsi Tower of Silence, grant of land for—Control of Cantonment authorities.—The Hyderabad Subsidiary Force which had its headquarters in the Secunderabad cantonment, was a force in the employment of the East India Company and commanded by the Company's officers, but maintained, by agreement, in Hyderabad territory for the protection of the Nizam. There never was in existence any treaty prescribing the limits of the powers of the Nizam's officers on the one hand, and the military commander commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force on the other, with respect to the management, control, and disposition of the cantonment and the land comprised in it. When the Nizam's Government admitted a British force within its territory, and allotted to it Secunderabad cantonment as its head-quarters, it no doubt, by necessary implication, conveyed to the military authorities all powers of jurisdiction, control and management incident to maintaining the efficiency and the discipline of the troops, the peace and good order and convenient use of the cantonment. But it would be going long way beyond this to hold that the officer commanding the troops was empowered to alienate, in perpetuity, land forming part of the cantonment and undoubtedly Hyderabad territory for a purpose wholly unconnected with military requirements. The appellants, who were members of the Parsi community, claimed that the founders of the Parsi Tower of Silence, which stands on a portion of certain land, situated in the Secunderabad cantonment, were in their lifetime owners of the land in question, and that the property had devolved upon themselves as descendants, and representative in title, of the original founders. The respondents, who were also members of the Parsi community, contended that the land in question had been granted to the whole Parsi community for a public purpose, and to enure for the benefit of the community generally for all time by the cantonment authority. The most important document relied upon by the appellants was issued by an Officer of the Hyderabad State and purporting to express a transaction, by which the State had assented to the grant of the land in question to the founders, and directed possession of it to be delivered to them. Another document in evidence also obtained on behalf of the founders, through their agent, purported to be issued by the authority of the Brigadier commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force and to certify that the Parsis of Secunderabad had permission to enclose the land in question, which was given for a tower to be built on it. Held—That the considerations set out above must be borne in mind in estimating the effect of the two documents; that the first, emanating from the State, purported to deal with and enforce, a grant of the land to the founders by name and the delivery of possession to them; that the second document, emanating from the cantonment authorities, did not deal with title or possession, but gave permission to use the land, already conveyed, for the particular purpose of a Tower of Silence, and to enclose the land, which were matters obviously within the discretion of the commanding officer, and that the effect of the two documents, was to show a good title in the founders, and not in the Parsi community. (1)—Nawab of Tank—Punjab Ruling Chiefs—Succession—Primogeniture—Settlement of lands by British—Effect—Election—Grant by the Chief to second son for maintenance—Transfer by Government on the death of the Chief, to his second son, of a portion of cash allowance allowed to the late Chief.—The country known as Tank proper belonged to the chief for the time being, who was both ruler and proprietor. Succession devolved upon the direct son of the Chief, the members of his family being entitled to maintenance only. At the introduction of British rule in 1849 in the Punjab, the settlement of the country was made under which the occupiers of the soil were recognised as the proprietors of their respective lands. At that time the proprietary title of N was recognised by seven villages by virtue of his Chiefship. After N's death, there was a claim for a half-share in the villages under an allegation of custom in the family, by his younger son from the grandson of the deceased, who was appointed successor to the Chiefship. Held, that the effect of the settlement in 1849 was not to create a fresh estate subject to the ordinary law of inheritance, but to continue to the Chief for the time being, as it were jure coronae, the proprietorship of the villages which had been founded by his ancestors, and the succession to which had therefore been regulated by the custom of the family. [R., 47 P.R. 1908=77 P.W.R. 1908]. Where on the death of the Chief, the Government while conferring the chiefship on the late Chief's eldest son's son, transferred a portion of the cash allowance allowed to the late Chief to the late Chief's second son to whom a grant of a village for maintenance had already been made by the late Chief, held, that the second son need not be required to elect which he would take as between the two allowances, the same having arisen from different sources independent of each other. MAHAMMAD AFZAL KHAN v. the Guardians and Wards Act, the minority of the Ward does not cease till he attains the age of 21 years, and it is immaterial whether the guardian dies or is removed or otherwise ceases to act (31 B. 590, D.; 11 A.W.N. 118, 13 B. 285, Not Appr.; 17 C. 944, Expl.; 12 C. 612, 3 A. 598, 21 B. 281, Rel. on.) The question as to what are necessaries is a mixed question of fact and law. The word "necessaries" is not confined in its strict sense to such articles as are necessary to support life, but extends to articles fit to maintain the particular person in the state, degree and station of life in which he is. (3 W.R. 217, 6 A. 417, R.) The infant's need of things may sometimes depend upon the peculiar circumstances, under which they are purchased and the use to which they are put. Thus articles, which, under ordinary circumstances, may not be deemed necessaries, may be so regarded when purchased for the infant's wedding. A person cannot recover, when he has supplied an infant with an article of which at the moment the latter was not in actual need, though the article might be otherwise suitable to his means and requirements, e.g., when he was already plentifully supplied with such articles. A person, who takes upon himself to supply necessaries to an infant, assumes for the purpose the business of a guardian, which he is bound to execute as a prudent guardian. He should as such make himself acquainted with his necessities and circumstances. The mere fact that an infant has a father, mother or guardian, does not prevent his being bound to pay for what was actually necessary for him when furnished, when neither his parents nor his guardian did anything towards his care or support. JOYRAM MARWARI v. MAHADEB SAHOY, 13 C.W.N. 643=36 C. 768=1 Ind. Cas. 724.

(2)—Goods supplied—Necessaries—Liability—Property in possession of heirs—Hindu law.—This was a claim brought by a cloth merchant for goods supplied to the late S against the son and widow of S. The lower appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the grounds that S was incapable through drunkenness of managing his affairs when the goods were supplied and that all the articles were articles of luxury and there was no proof that any one single item in the account was ordered by S or purchased with his knowledge and consent. Held on appeal that, although S was a great drunkard, there were intervals during which he was sufficiently in the possession of his faculties to admit of his attending to business and to family affairs, that plaintiff had been in the habit of supplying goods to S and his family and the goods now charged for were delivered by the plaintiff generally in the presence of S, who on one occasion at least acknowledged that he owed money to the plaintiff. There was no article adapted to the mere personal gratification of S apart from his position as head of the family, and it was therefore held that all the property left by S including ancestral immoveable property must be liable

(1)—Injury to neighbour's land—Trenches in one's own land—Rain-water percolating—Damages.—Before a person can be held liable in damages for injury caused to his neighbour's land by water either flowing from the former's land to the latter's or percolating from the one into the other, it must be shown that the water was brought or collected on his land by him voluntarily for his own purposes in a non-natural user of it. with weeds, silt, and such other things, the rain-water collected in the creek was carried away and flooded the plaintiff's property. Held, that the Municipality was liable for the misfeasance since it turned their works by their negligence into a nuisance. RAJENDRA LAL MANEK LAL v. SURAT CITY MUNICIPALITY, 10 Bom. L.R. 498 = 33 B. 393.

(3)—Minors—Negligence in bringing water upon the premises—House consisting of several floors let out to different tenants—Water brought upon the top floor for the use of those occupying the floor—Leakage of water into the lower floors.—A minor is liable to an action in tort, but where negligence is an essential ingredient of the action, it must be proved that the negligence complained of was the negligence of the minor. Where a person constructs a house and accumulates water in a reservoir for its purposes, he subjects himself to the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, negligence or no negligence, if the water escapes on to his neighbour's property. As between him and his neighbour he has brought the water to his land for his own purposes and he must keep it in at his peril. But where the house consists of floors one above the other some of which are let to occupiers, the rest being occupied by the owner himself as between those who occupy the house it must be taken as a place of habitation in the case of which the accumulation of water is a necessity and for a natural purpose. Water is brought there by the owner as a natural adjunct, so to say, to the house and each occupier takes the premises he occupies as it is, with all its risks. The mere fact that a particular occupier does not use that water is immaterial, because the water is there in the natural and ordinary mode of enjoying the house. To such a case the doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher does not apply. BOMANJI v. MAHOMED ALI, 7 Bom. L.R. 713.

(4)—Negligence—Master and servant—Death of child—Contributory negligence—Damages—Deduction for maintenance of child—Funeral expenses—Act XIII of 1855.—A man-hole was opened for the purpose of inserting a flushing door in a sewer in a lane in Bombay. The sewer was vested in the Municipality of Bombay and was under the control of the Municipal Commissioner by virtue of ss. 220 and 289 of the Bombay Municipal Act of 1888. When such man-holes are opened it is the duty of the Municipal Commissioner under s. 321 of that Act to have them properly fenced and guarded. The hole in question, was at first properly fenced; at 4-30 P.M. on a certain day, the superintendent in charge of the work gave orders to cease work and close the man-hole for the night. Immediately afterwards the plaintiff's unmarried daughter, eleven years old, fell into the man-hole and was found dead. Plaintiff sued for damages. The deceased child's mother who was seated about four yards from the man-hole selling cucumbers admitted that before the accident occurred, she knew the fence was down and the hole open. Various contentions were put forward. Held (a) that s. 321 (b) of the Municipal Act imposed on the Commissioner the statutory duty of having "all places, where the street is opened, fenced and guarded," and his default in taking this precaution made him liable in damages for the consequences of his negligence; and whatever instructions may have been given to the employees of the Municipality, such liability remains unaffected (Grey v. Pullen, 34 L.J.Q.B. 265; Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., 1 H. and C. 526, R.); (b) that, although the mother of the child might have been guilty of negligence, which contributed to the accident, yet, if the defendants could, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the mischief which happened, her negligence would not excuse them. (Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. (N. S.) 573; Radlye v. London and N.W.Ry. Co., L.R. 1 App. C 758, R.). As regards damages, in cases of this nature, distinct evidence of the loss sustained or benefit expected is not necessary. But the jury may look at all the circumstances of the case, and especially at the position of the parents and the age of the child and call in aid their own experience in arriving at their conclusions. Where damages are allowed, a reasonable sum should be deducted on account of maintenance of the child for such a period as the deceased might reasonably have been expected to live with her parents. In an action under Act XIII of 1855, no sum can be awarded in respect of funeral expenses, whether for the mere removal and disposal of the body or for the outlay for ceremonial or obsequial purposes. NARAYEN JETHA v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER AND THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY, 16 B. 254. [F., 2 C.W.N. 609.]

COLLINS*, 2 Hydr 79.

(7)—Action for damage caused—Negligence—Authorized act—Railway Company.—Negligence causing damage gives a cause of action, but, unless there be negligence, there is no action for damage caused by acts within the scope of the express or necessarily implied authority conferred by the law. In a suit by a Railway Company against K for damages sustained by the Company by reason of injuries caused to one of their lines of Railways by the bursting of tanks belonging to K, where no negligence on the part of K was alleged in the plaint, and where it was found (1) that the tanks were existing before living memory, (2) that they were breached by an extraordinary flood, (3) that they were tanks constructed in the ordinary manner with the escapements sufficient for all ordinary floods, and were such as are universally employed, (4) that these tanks were absolutely necessary to human existence, so far as it depended upon agriculture, and (5) that the Railway was constructed with a full knowledge of their existence, held that the Company were not entitled to damage. THE MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE ZAMINDAR OF KARVATINAGUR, 6 M.H.C. 180. [Affirmed on appeal, 1 I.A. 364, P.C. = 14 B.L.R. 209.]

(8)—Railway Company — Overshooting of station—Station not properly lighted—Injuries sustained in alighting—Suit for damages—Negligence.—The plaintiff was travelling in a first class carriage of the defendant Railway Company with two gentlemen, S and J. On the train stopping at the station, S and J got out, opening the door of the carriage for themselves. The plaintiff proceeded to follow them. He was in the act of putting his foot to the ground when J called to him to take care as the train was moving. At the same time almost his foot touched the ground and he felt that the train was moving back. In the darkness he could not see the platform distinctly, and being afraid to alight, he tried to stop himself and to recover his position on the step of the carriage. In attempting to recover himself, he stepped and fell between the platform and the train and in consequence his leg was broken and he received other serious injuries. Held, that the Railway Company was guilty of negligence in not keeping the station properly lighted, in allowing the train to overshoot the station, and in not warning the plaintiff against alighting, that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff were caused by such negligence, and that the plaintiff did not, by his own want of care, contribute to the accident. WOODHOUSE v. THE CALCUTTA AND SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, 9 W.R. 73.

(9)—Railway Company—Doors of a carriage, shut or unfastened—Passenger injured in shutting them—Injury—Liability of the Company.—Leaving a door of a carriage open or unfastened amounts to negligence on the part of a Railway Company for the consequences of which the Company is liable to the passengers. If any inconvenience or danger is caused by the negligence of a Railway Company, a passenger may lawfully attempt to get rid of such inconvenience or danger, provided in doing so he runs no obvious risk, disproportionate to the inconvenience or danger, and is not himself guilty of any negligence, and that if in such attempt he is injured, the Company is liable in damages. BROMLEY v. G. I. P. RAILWAY CO., 1 Bom. L.R. 254 = 24 B. 1.

(10)—Railway Company—Trains overshooting the platform—Injury to passenger—Damages.—In determining the question as to whether there has been negligence or not on the part of the Railway Company, the Court must have regard to all the circumstances of the case. No general hard and fast rule can be laid down. All the facts of the case have to be taken into consideration. The mere overshooting of the train beyond the platform is not in itself negligence. The mere fact that the station is not sufficiently lighted is not in itself negligence. There must be something more in order to entitle the plaintiff to claim damages on the ground of the negligence of the Railway Company. KESSOWJEE v. G.I.P. RAILWAY CO., 6 Bom. L.R. 673.

(11)—Railway Company—Trains overshooting the platform—Invitation to alight.—In order to establish negligence arising from invitation to alight, against a Railway Company, it is not sufficient to prove that the carriage in which the plaintiff was travelling did overshoot the level portion of the platform and was drawn up alongside the slope, and that the plaintiff's injuries were received by a shock or fall on alighting and not by a fall after he had alighted. But the plaintiff must go further and show that the situation in which he was placed by the invitation to alight at the particular spot exposed him to danger which was not visible and apparent, or that he was invited to alight in an unsafe and improper place. Mere overshooting, even with an invitation to alight, is not necessarily or by itself negligence; to constitute negligence there must be on the part of the Railway Company, some further act or omission which exposes the passenger to a danger not visible and apparent, in other words such a danger as a passenger of ordinary caution could not reasonably be expected to avoid. G.I.P. RAILWAY CO. v. KESSOWJI, 7 Bom. L.R. 119, on appeal to Privy Council, see 9 Bom. L.R. 671.

(12)—Municipality—Digging of trench—Rainfall excessive—Act of God—Damage—Proximate cause of damage.—In the middle of June, 1900, the defendant Municipality excavated a trench for a pipe drain in a public lane. This trench remained open till the first of July, 1900. From 24th June to 1st July, 1900, there was a very heavy fall of rain. The rain-water collected in the trench and by percolation or saturation, caused, on the 1st July, 1900, a landslip and collapse of the plaintiff's houses which were close by the trench. Plaintiffs sued the defendant Municipality to recover damages, alleging that the Municipality was negligent in digging the drain in the month of June when a heavy rainfall might be expected and leaving the trench open for many days so as to permit rain water to get into it and to percolate through or to saturate the sub-soil and thus to cause a landslip and to undermine the foundation of the plaintiffs' houses. The defendant contended that the damage was due not to the drain but to the heavy rain which fell for some days prior to the 1st July, 1900, and to the giving way of the retaining wall of an adjacent tank, from which water, mud and silt was removed only on the 30th June,

1900: Held, (1) that it would not reasonably be said that the removal of the water from the tank was alone, without anything else, sufficient to produce the accident; nor could it be contended that the rainfall could of itself have produced the land slip; that, therefore, the trench contributed materially to the accident; (2) that even if the removal of water from the tank be a contributory cause of the damage, the Municipality would not be relieved of its liability unless such removal was the whole cause and the drain had nothing whatever to do with it; (3) that the heavy rainfall by the end of June is nothing very extraordinary for Bombay; and hence, it could not be regarded as an act of God, which would absolve the defendant from his liability; (4) that whether there was percolation or saturation the drain was the chief cause of the damage to the plaintiffs' houses; this percolation or saturation was due to the trench which the defendant had dug and to the negligence of the contractors in digging and keeping it open for several days: the defendant, was, therefore, liable to make good the damage. VITHALDAS v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER OF BOMBAY, 4 Bom. L.R. 914.

(13)—Vis major—Neglect to provide for ordinary contingencies—Injunction—Practice—Vis major, to afford a defence, must be the proximate cause, the causa causans, and not merely a causa sine qua non of the damage complained of. Neglect to provide for conditions not exceptional may involve liability although vis major or exceptional conditions be also established. Where the damage caused was due to the insufficiency of precautions taken by the defendant, in constructing bridges and embankments in a creek for carrying a duct line, to cope with conditions which might reasonably have been anticipated, the defendant is liable. The mere fact that vis major co-existed or rather followed on the negligence is no adequate defence. Before an act of God may be admitted as an excuse the defendant must himself have done all that he was bound to do. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY v. VASUDEO, 6 Bom. L.R. 899.

(14)—Negligence—Exercise of statutory powers—Damage—Extraordinary fall of rain—Vis major—Municipality—Reclamation of old tank site—District Municipal Act (Bom. Act III of 1901), ss. 50, 54.—The Municipality of Hubli, a body corporate under s. 50 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, 1901, took steps in 1904 to provide a Municipal cotton market in Hubli. They selected for the purpose the site of a large and ancient tank which had largely silted up, and the southern boundary of which was an embankment. A smaller tank was formed in the south-east corner of the area, whence the water would discharge eastwards over the old weir which it was proposed to deepen so as to allow of the passage of a large body of water. The part of the southern embankment which was not useful to the new tank was removed and utilised to fill in the area marked out for the market. The plaintiffs occupied a ginning factory immediately to the south of the area or the old tank and adjoining the new market, and used it for the purpose of storing ginned and unginned cotton, cotton-seeds and cotton-bales. It was at a lower level than either the market or the bed of the old tank the water of which was prevented from flooding the factory by the southern dam. The reclamation caused no trouble during the monsoons of 1905 and 1906. On the 7th June, 1907, however, there was a sudden and extraordinarily heavy fall of rain which practically over-flooded the whole of the Municipal area and washed away or damaged a quantity of cotton in the factory. The plaintiffs instituted an action against the Municipality to recover damages, alleging negligence on their part in carrying out the reclamation works. The defendants denied the plaintiff's allegation and contended that the damage complained of was due to the extraordinary and excessively heavy rainfall on the 7th June, 1907, and that no precaution on their part could have averted the damage:—Held, that the suit was not maintainable. The onus of proof of negligence lay on the party alleging it and if neglect in the execution of their statutory powers and duties was not brought home to the Municipality, a suit against them must fail as being unsustainable in law, however great the damage the plaintiffs might have suffered from the extraordinary flooding uncontrolled by the old tank dam. (27 L.J. Ex. 25, 1872, L.R. 3 Q.B. 42, F.) Per Rao, J.—The damage was mainly, if not wholly, attributable to the extraordinary fall of rain. It was an occurrence in the nature of a viz major, for which the defendants were not responsible. THE MUNICIPALITY OF HUBLI v. RALLI BROTHERS, 13 Bom. L.R. 1138

(15)—Gross negligence—Liability of heir.—The liability of a lambardar to account for profits unrealized owing to his gross negligence or misconduct, being a personal one, such claim cannot be pursued against his heirs unless it is shown that in consequence of that negligence any assets came to the hands of such heirs. It is immaterial whether the suit is brought against the lambardar himself personally or against the heirs, in the first instance, after his death. BIR NARAIN v. GIRDHAR LAL, 20 A. 74, Note. (A.W.N. 1886, 32, F.) [R., 20 A. 73.]

(16)—Vendor and purchaser—Setting aside of sale—Possession with vendee—Accident to property before delivery by vendee—Liability for damages.—A and B were partners in a cotton press. B sold the press for Rs. 35,000 to X who was put into possession on his paying the earnest money (Rs. 5,000). A thereupon instituted a suit for dissolution of partnership against B (making X also a party to the suit), and prayed for the issue of an injunction restraining X from working the press and for the appointment of a receiver. The Court refused to grant the injunction and appoint a receiver, but ordered X to pay the balance of purchase-money (Rs. 30,000) so that it may be in the Court's deposit till the disposal of the suit. The suit coming on for hearing, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to set aside the sale to X, the same having been made to him without authority. The decree further directed that X should be repaid Rs. 30,000, that, on such payment, X should forthwith give over possession of the press to the plaintiff and B (his vendor). X thought of preferring an appeal, but before he handed over possession, a fire broke out which caused much damage to the press. The press was afterwards handed over to the plaintiff in its damaged condition. The plaintiff thereupon filed the present suit against X to recover from him Rs. 50,000 as damages for the injury caused to the press by the breaking out of fire. He also alleged that the working of the press by the defendant after the passing of the decree in the suit for dissolution of partnership was a trespass, and that the defendant was liable to make good the loss caused to the press, although the breaking out of fire was not due to the defendant's negligence. Held that the maxim volenti non fit injuria applied to the circumstances of the case. The defendant was a trespasser in having kept possession of the press until the decree in the suit for dissolution of partnership, but he was not such subsequently to the passing of the decree, because the press was worked by him with the plaintiff's consent. The suit was dismissed, no negligence having been proved against the defendant. JAMSETJI BURJORJI BAHADURJI v. EBRAHIM VYDINA, 13 B. 183.

(17)—Burden of proof.—When the facts are equally consistent with the presence or absence of negligence, plaintiff cannot recover damages; defendant is not bound to show that there was no negligence. KOEGLER v. YULE, 5 B.L.R. 401 = 14 W.R. O.C. 43.

—1.—General.

(1)—Hundis—Analogy between hundi and bill of exchange—Application of English law.—Where the analogy between native hundis and English bills of exchange is complete, the English law is to be applied. SUMBOONATH GHOSE v. JUDDOONATH CHATTERJEE, 2 Hyde 259.

(2)—Negotiable security—Debt—Payment of.—The giving of a negotiable security by a debtor to his creditor operates as a conditional payment only and not as a satisfaction of the debt unless the parties agree so to treat it. And the presumption ordinarily is that the effect of giving or taking a bill or note is that the debt is conditionally paid. CULLIANJI v. RAGHAWJEE, 6 Bom. L.R. 879 = 30 B. 27.

(3)—Right of holder to give title to—Negligence does not affect the title of a person taking a negotiable instrument in good faith—Good faith, meaning of—Estoppel affecting the holder of negotiable instrument.—The holder of a negotiable instrument has power to give title to any person honestly acquiring it, and it is the very essence of a negotiable instrument that the person in possession of it may be treated as having authority to deal with it, be he agent or otherwise, unless something is known to the contrary. Mere negligence does not invalidate the title of a person taking a negotiable instrument in good faith and for value. If there be anything which excites suspicion that there is something wrong in the transaction, the taker of the instrument is not acting in good faith if he shut his eyes to the facts presented to him and puts the suspicions aside without further inquiry. If the holder of negotiable instruments give them to another with authority to that other to raise money upon them for his own purposes, he is estopped from setting up his right to the negotiable instruments adversely to those who have lent money on the security of the instruments and the faith of the authority of the owner. RAGHAVJI v. NARANDAS, 8 Bom. L.R. 921.

(4)—Presumption as to payments by—Payment of interest on amounts secured by—Instalment payments of debt when allowable.—Though the general effect of giving and taking a bill or a note is that the payment by the instrument is conditional, there is nothing to prevent its being given and taken as absolute payment, if the parties so intend. It is a question of fact what the intention of the parties was. Where cheques or bills are eventually honored, the payment then made relates back to the time when the document was delivered (26 M. 526, 30 B. 27, 28 A. 54, 3 M.I.A. 422, P.C., R.) In such case, interest on the amount paid runs from date of the delivery of the document. Under s. 210, Civ. Pro. Code, the Court may grant an instalment decree only on sufficient reasons shown. Mere inability to pay, or the fact of being hard pressed, is, by itself, no sufficient reason for not requiring prompt payment (2 A. 129, R.). Where a defendant shows bona fides, by offering to pay a fair proportion of his debt, a reasonable time may properly be granted to enable him to pay the residue. MOHOMAD AKBAR KHAN v. R. B. KASTURCHAND DAGA, 2 N.L.R. 179.

(5)—Negligence of party taking negotiable instrument—Defective title.—The rule laid down in the case of Gill v. Cubit (3 B. & C. 466) and Down v. Halling (4 B. & C. 330)—that the negligence of a party taking a negotiable instrument fixes him with the defective title of the party passing it—observed upon, and those cases overruled. THE BANK OF BENGAL v. MACLEOD, 5 M.I.A. 1.

(6)—*Promissory note, What is—*A promissory note does not lose its character as such merely because it contains a promise to pay at a certain place. DEVA RATNA v. FAKIR ADAM, 4 Bom. L.R. 428.

(7)—*Issue of, in discharge or satisfaction of pre-existing debt—Effect—Acceptance as novation—Extinguishment of debt—Substituted contract—Failure of—Debtor's default—Old cause of action—Revivor—Remedy under the new contract—Alternative prayer under old contract—Joinder of—Validity—Civ. suspending the original remedy. If the debtor can prove that it has been accepted as a complete novation of the original liability—and of such proof, the onus is on him—it will afford, while it stands, a complete defence to an action by the creditor upon the original debt. But whether the acceptance of the bill or other instrument be conditional pending payment, or in absolute novation of the old contract, there can be no doubt of the creditor's right to revive the latter, if, for any reason for which the debtor is responsible, the substituted contract fails. (26 M. 526, 29 M. 111, 5 C. 215, 11 A. 13, 4 A. 330, 18 M. 126, 3 C. 314, R.) A claim on the original contract, made in the alternative to a claim against the same defendants for the same debt on a substituted contract which has failed, cannot be held to be other than a perfectly proper and convenient joinder of the kind allowed by s. 45, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. NATHU SA v. PHULCHAND SA, 8 N.L.R. 7.

(8)—Dishonoured bill—Plaintiff taking it up and paying it—Plaintiff's right to sue.—After a bill was dishonoured, the plaintiff, who had endorsed it over, was called upon to take it up, and he did take it up. He had given it as conditional payment to his endorsee, and on its being dishonoured he paid the endorsee, and got back the bill. Held that, under such circumstances, the plaintiff had a clear right to sue. ALAGAPPA CHETTY v. —2.—Bill of Exchange.

(1)—Bill of exchange, one of the parties to, a native of India—Applicability of English law—Holder of Bill of Exchange, rights of—Notice of dishonour—Liability of maker.—The strict English law regarding bills of exchange is not applicable to transactions in which one of the parties is a native of India, and the circumstances do not show that they were dealing with reference to the English mercantile custom. [F., 12 C.L.R. 333.] In order to entitle him to sue the maker, the holder of a bill of exchange must give notice of dishonour or non-payment within such reasonable time as shall enable the maker to protect himself. If the maker, for want of notice, has been subject either to injury or to material risk of injury, he is no longer liable. MR. T. W. PIGUE v. GOLAB RAM, 1 W.R. 75. [F., 12 C.L.R. 333; R., 7 B.L.R. 431, 3 B.L.R. 198.]

(2)—Hundis or bills of exchange, extent of liability of drawers of—Absence of notice of dishonour, effect of.—In this suit to recover the value of a hundi drawn by the defendants, they urged on second appeal from the decree passed against them, that the hundi, not having been accepted by the drawee, was not a negotiable instrument and that in any case they, the drawers, were not liable, as they had no notice of the dishonour. The first objection was held to be untenable. A bill of exchange is not the less valid, because it has not been accepted by the drawee. It depends on the will and pleasure of the payee to carry the bill to the drawee for acceptance; and the mere neglect of the payee to present it for acceptance cannot affect the drawer's liability should the bill happen to be eventually dishonoured. The High Court, however, allowed the second of the above objections. The holder of a bill, to be entitled to sue the maker, must give him notice of dishonour or non-payment within such reasonable time as will enable him to protect himself; and, in the present case, it was an admitted point, that no such notice reached the drawers, and the omission to give notice was held to be fatal to the action against the drawers, the present defendants. JEETUN LALL v. SHEO CHURN, 2 W.R. 214. [F., 12 C.L.R. 333.]

(3)—Bill of exchange—Notice of dishonour.—According to Muhammadan Law notice of dishonour is not necessary in order to render the drawer of the bill liable to the holder of a hundi. GOPINATH v. ABBAS HOSSEIN, 7 B.L.R. 434, Note. [R., 7 B.L.R. 434.]

(4)—Negotiable instrument—Dishonour—Notice—Laches.—Ordinarily, notice of dishonour of a bill drawn in India and payable in England should be posted by the very next mail which leaves England after dishonour. If five or six mails are allowed to go out without the despatch of such notice, then the person whose duty it is to give notice is unquestionably guilty of unreasonable delay. THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE BANK, LTD. v. FREDERICK DUFFIN, 3 N.W.P.H.C. 99.

(5)—Evidence of dishonour and of presentment—Noting on bill.—The mere noting on the bill, even if it disclose the name of the notary in full, is not evidence of the presentment or of the dishonouring of the bill. BOMBAY CITY BANK v. MOONJEE HURRIDOSS, Bourke O. C. 274.

(6)—Hoondie—Notice of dishonour.—A promise to pay, indorsed upon a hoondie, after it has been dishonoured, although not amounting to a waiver of notice, is the very best evidence, if supported by other evidence, that the endorser has received notice of dishonour; and his promise to pay evinces a consciousness and knowledge on his part that the other party has a right to call upon him to pay the bills. SYAD ALI v. GOPAL DASS, 13 W.R. 420.

(7)—Bill of exchange, action against indorser and acceptors of—Notice of dishonor.—A suit was brought in the Patna District against the indorser and acceptors of a bill of exchange, after a part payment by the acceptors. No objection was raised as to the misjoinder of defendants, and the Judge omitted to find whether the indorser had received notice of dishonor or not. Held that the case must be remanded to ascertain, (i) whether notice had been given within reasonable time, and if not, whether (the strict rule of mercantile law of England not being applicable to transactions in bills and hundis as amongst natives of this country), the indorser had been injured or exposed to material risk of injury; and (ii) whether, by the usage of merchants at Patna, a part payment by the acceptors and receipt by the plaintiff discharged the indorser from liability. GOPAL DAS v. SHEIKH SYAD ALI, 3 B.L.R. A.C. 198. (1 W.R. 75, R.) [R., 7 B.L.R. 431.]

(8)—Bill of exchange endorsed to one party—Dishonour—Re-endorsement to drawer, if a condition necessary to drawer suing the acceptor.—J drew a bill of exchange to his order and S accepted the bill. J endorsed the bill to C. & Co. When the bill was presented for payment, it was dishonoured and duly protested for non-payment. Then C & Co., debited J's account with the amount of the bill and returned the bill to J without re-endorsing it. In a suit by J, to recover the amount of the bill from S, the acceptor, objection was taken that, as C. & Co. did not re-endorse it to J, J had no right to sue. Held, that, even in the absence of a re-endorsement to J, he was entitled to sue the acceptor, who has failed to carry out the agreement he entered into under the terms of the bill. JAMES & CO. v. SCOTT, 36 C. 291=1 Ind. Cas. 972.

(9)—Ss. 30, 37, Act XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments), scope of—Drawer's liability before dishonour.—By s. 30 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the drawer of a bill of exchange is bound, in case of dishonour by the drawee or acceptor thereof, to compensate the holder, provided due notice of dishonour has been given to or received by the drawer as provided by the Act. The drawer only undertakes to pay the amount of the bill, in case of dishonour either by non-acceptance or non-payment. There is no demand or debt until dishonour and the dishonour is not the natural result of the drawing, [R., 20 B. 133.] S. 37 of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that the drawer of a bill of exchange is liable thereon as principal debtor and that other parties thereto are liable thereon as sureties for the drawer. This only refers to their respective liabilities, and is enacted for the purpose of only distinguishing those liabilities. It does not give any new right of action. It must be read with s. 30 of the Act, which provides for the liability of a drawer, who has no liability until dishonour. A. B. MILLER v. THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, 19 C. 146.

(10)—Bill of Exchange—Drawer and acceptor, liability of—Accommodation acceptor—Ss. 132, 139 of the Contract Act—Evidence Act, s. 92—Subsequent substantial consideration—Principal and surety—Deed for the benefit of the creditor—Effect on surety's position.—The liability undertaken by the drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange is in no sense a joint liability; but they contract severally in different ways and subject to different conditions. Neither the provisions of s. 132 of the Contract Act nor those of s. 92 of the Evidence Act preclude the acceptor of a bill from proving that he never received any consideration for the bill but that he accepted it only for accommodating the drawer or some other party. [D., 8 C.W.N. 101; R., 13 M. 172.] An acceptor of bills, who, though, in the first inception of the bills, he may have put his name to them only for the drawer's accommodation, has since received such a substantial consideration for them as to be no longer in the position of a mere surety, would not be entitled, as against persons, who have honestly advanced money in good faith upon the security of the bills, to the equitable rights of a surety. The fact that a certain creditor assented to and executed a trust-deed, whereby the debtor conveyed all his properties to the Official Trustee for the benefit of his creditors, though it would, under English Law, be sufficient to discharge a surety, would not, under the provisions of s. 139 of the Contract Act, so operate as the trust-deed, instead of impairing the surety's "eventual remedies" against his principal, tended to improve them most materially. POGOSE v. THE BANK OF BENGAL, 3 C. 174. [D., 13 M. 172.]

(11)—Bill of Exchange—Decree obtained by drawee against acceptor—Drawer, liability of.—The drawer of a bill of exchange is not exonerated from liability, by the mere fact of a decree being obtained by the drawee against the acceptor, but not satisfied. MR. T. M. FIGUE v. RAM JUSHUNT, 1 W.R. 95. [D., 17 W.R. 442.]

(12)—Bill of Exchange—Endorsement of—Dishonour by drawee—Liability of endorser.—Every endorser of a bill of exchange is in the nature of a new drawer and is liable to every succeeding holder in default of acceptance or payment by the drawee; and an endorser's liability is not absolved by the fact of the drawee not having been impleaded. JUMNA DASS v. endorsement which is legally no endorsement, cannot be held to be a 'holder in due course.' GOBINDA v. MAYA DAS, 28 P.R. 1884.

(14)—Drawer and acceptor of a bill of exchange.—The holder of a bill of exchange can join the drawer and acceptor thereof as co-defendants in the same suit. FESTONJEE EDULJEE GURDUR v. MIRZA MAHOMED ALLY, 3 C. 541.

(15)—Endorser's right to security on payment to holder—Rule applicable to the endorser of a bill of exchange is also applicable to the endorser of a pro-note.—It is a rule of equity, that if the endorser of a bill of exchange pays the holder of it, he is entitled to the benefit of all securities given by the acceptor, which the holder has in his hands at the time of the payment and upon which he has no claim except for the bill itself. The same rule is applicable to the endorser of a pro-note. AGA AHMED ISPAHANI v. JUDITH EMNA CRISP, 19 C 242, P.C. = 19 I.A. 24 = 6 Sar. 109. (6 I.A. 1, R.)

(16)—Foreign bill of exchange payable after sight—Acceptance—Time—Reversal of finding of jury—Question of fact.—A foreign Bill of Exchange, payable after sight, must be presented for acceptance; and although there is no limited time defined by Statute for presentment, and no usage of trade to fix the time, yet such bill must be presented within a reasonable time. What constitutes a reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact for the determination of the Court and the jury. A Bill of Exchange was drawn at Calcutta on the 16th of February, 1848, by L.R. and Co. on D. and Co. at Hong Kong, payable sixty days after sight, and endorsed by L.R. and Co. to M. or order. M., in consequence of the depressed state of the money market at Calcutta, and the unsaleableness of Bills on China at that time at Calcutta, kept the Bill for five months and nine days, and then sold it to R. M., who did not present it for acceptance at Hong Kong till the 24th of October in that year, when D. and Co. refused to accept it. Held, that the presentation of the bill for acceptance was not made within a reasonable time, and that L.R. and Co., the drawers, were discharged. That the want of presentment was not executed by reason of the drawers continuing solvent from the date of the bill to the presentment, or that no actual damage was caused them by the delay. This Court will not reverse the finding of a jury or of a Court that sits as a jury upon a question of fact, unless perfectly satisfied that they were wrong, as, from their knowledge of the local circumstances and the character and appearance of the witnesses, they are better able to form a correct opinion than the appellate tribunal. RAMCHURN MULLICK v. consigned by drawer—Indorsee accountable to acceptor.—In this suit by the plaintiff Bank, as indorsees of certain bills of exchange drawn on and accepted by the defendant, the latter was held to be liable to the Bank for the amount sought to be recovered from him, except in so far as he might be entitled to credit for the net sums realised by the plaintiffs by the sale of certain goods entrusted to them as a collateral security for the moneys advanced by them to the drawer. The plaintiff Bank had no right to a double realisation on its own account, nor could it retain the proceeds of the said sale on behalf of the drawer, who, at the time of negotiating his bills, had realised the whole of what he was entitled to. THE AGRA BANK, LTD. v. ABDUL RAHIMAN ISAC, 6 B. 1.

(18)—Letter of credit—Change of the bill from document against payment to documents against acceptance—Change made without the consent of the drawer—Drawee refusing to pay—Liability of drawer.—The plaintiff purchased a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant on the firm of Schmolze Richman & Co. of London in terms of a letter of credit issued by the latter at the instance of T. Smart & Co. of London. The bill of exchange was accompanied by bills of lading and invoice of the consignment and was sent to the plaintiff's office at London. It was marked D. P., i.e., documents to be delivered against payment of the bill. The drawees refused to accept the same, on the ground that the terms of the letter of credit was D. A., i.e., documents against acceptance. The plaintiffs, with the consent of the agent T. Smart & Co. of London subsequently changed the bill into D. A., which was then accepted by the drawees. The bill fell due on the 13th February 1901, when the drawees having failed in the meanwhile refused payment. The plaintiffs then brought a suit to recover the amount of the bill of exchange from the defendant. Held, that the common intention of the parties was that the bill should be treated as D.P., and the alteration made in London without the consent and confirmation of defendant made it impossible for the plaintiff to recover. MESHA v. NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, 5 Bom. L.R. 524.

(19)—Bill of Exchange—Cheque taken in lieu of—Discharge of bill—Notice of dishonour.—The mere taking of a cheque which is subsequently dishonoured, after having been presented in due course of business, does not operate as payment of the bill. To operate as a discharge, the cheque must be taken and accepted in full satisfaction of the bill. The contract on a bill of exchange between endorser and endorsee is, that if the acceptor does not pay, the endorser will pay. The rule that want of notice of dishonour discharges is a matter of comparatively recent practice in the English law. Among Hindus the rule is that want of notice will not discharge unless the party to be rendered liable has been prejudiced. SOMARIMULL v. BHAIRO DAS JOHURY, 7 B.L.R. 431. [R., 12 C.L.R. 333.]

(20)—Post-dated cheque—Bill of Exchange—Insufficient stamp—Admissibility in evidence.—Where a cheque bearing a stamp of one anna was found to have been post dated by 17 days, and it was contended that it was really a bill of exchange payable 17 days after date and as such inadmissible in evidence as insufficiently stamped, held, that it was admissible in a suit to recover the amount of the cheque on its being dishonoured. RAMAN CHETTY v. MAHOMED GHOUSE, 16 C. 432. [R., 6 Bom. L.R. 699.]

(21)—Negotiable instrument—Bill of Exchange by way of discharge of debt—Conditional discharge, presumption of—Execution of formal receipt—Endorsement on back of pro-note—Effect.—A bill of exchange or hundi given for a debt operates only as a conditional discharge of the debt (26 M. 526, Rel. on), although it might be proved that, in any particular case, it was taken unconditionally in satisfaction of a debt. The execution of a formal receipt for the amount carried by a bill of exchange is not sufficient to rebut the presumption of the discharge being only conditional. Nor does the endorsement of receipt on a pro-note stand on a higher footing. PALANIAPPA CHETTY v. ARUNACHELLAM CHETTY, 21 M.L.J. 432 = 9 M.L.T. 482.

(22)—Rights of remitter of bills for sale for a specific purpose—Misapplication of proceeds of sale by Agent.—Where bills of exchange are remitted for sale, and the proceeds directed to be applied to a specific purpose, the property in the bills remains in the remitter until the purpose for which they were remitted is satisfied. And, where the money realized by the sale was wrongfully applied by the agent, it was held by the Judicial Committee (affirming the judgment of the Court at Calcutta) that the remitter was entitled to recover the value of the bills in assumpsit, upon an indebitatus count, from the purchaser of them who had notice of the purpose for which they were remitted, and the misapplication of the proceeds by the agent. MUTTYLOLL SEEL v. DENT, 5 M.I.A. 328.

(23)—Bill of exchange not drawn expressly as by agent—Pleas open to drawer—Want of notice of dishonour, effect of.—This action was brought against the defendant, as the drawer of some bills of exchange, against a Company. One of the defences was that the defendant was merely the agent of that Company in drawing the bills and was therefore not liable, and the Court held that when a man draws a bill and it does not appear on the face of it that he drew it as agent, he could not set up the defence that he drew the bill as an agent.

The further question was whether the defendant was discharged from the liability to pay the bills on the two grounds of defence set up by him, namely, 1st, that the plaintiff had discharged the acceptors (the Company) and 2ndly, that no notice of dishonour had been given to the defendant. It appeared that the goods on the faith of which the bills had been accepted were subsequently attached as the goods of the defendant for a debt due from him, and, on the sale of the goods, such debt of the defendant was discharged to the extent of the value of the goods realized. After the goods had thus been sold in payment of the debt due by the defendant, he could not have sued the Company against which the bill had been drawn and no damage accrued to him by not having had notice of dishonour or by the arrangement by which the Company were discharged, and the lower Court was therefore correct in having decreed the plaintiff's action and in having ordered payment of all costs by the defendant. MR. T. M. PIGUE v. RAM KISHEN, 2 W.R. 301. [F., 12 C.L.R. 333.]

(24)—Managing agent, authority of—Liability of principal—Indorser and acceptor.—Where a certain banking company, who were the managing agents of the defendant company and authorised to "draw, accept, endorse and negotiate all such cheques, promissory notes, &c., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the company," drew a bill of exchange upon themselves as managing agents of the defendant company (which was accepted) and endorsed it to the plaintiff's bank, but the amount was drawn out by personal cheques without reference to the defendant company, held that the defendant company were not liable as acceptors, there being no proof of the money having been applied for the purposes of the company. THE ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION v. THE BAREE TEA CO. LTD., 9 C. 880 = 13 C.L.R. 412.

(25)—Bill of Exchange—Transferability—Rights of transferee—Suit on—Cause of action—Limitation.—A bill of exchange is transferable and the assignee or endorsee thereof may sue in his own name. The cause of action with respect to a bill of exchange accrues when the bill becomes payable and the acceptor refuses to pay. So, a suit to recover the amount due under a bill of exchange, brought more than 6 years after the due date of the bill, was held to be time-barred. *MOHENDRO LALL BOSE v. (1)—Order directing servant to make payment to payee, not a cheque transferable by payee to third party.—An order purporting to direct a servant to pay, at an uncertain time, a certain sum of money to the payee, on account of advance, is not a cheque; and, the mere fact that the party to whom the payee transferred it believed it to be a cheque, or that it was so represented to him, could not give such party a right of action against the drawer of the order. Also, such a document cannot amount to evidence of a debt so that the transferee might contend that, by the sale to him, he acquired the interest in the debt due by the writer of the order to the payee. (2)—Hundi—Dishonour—Notice—Right of purchaser to sue indorser alone.—A purchaser of a hundi on its being dishonoured is bound to present the same for payment within a reasonable time and give reasonable notice of dishonour, i.e., within the time within which it is ordinarily given according to the custom of the merchants and bankers of the district, not the immediate notice required by English law in cases of bills of exchange. The purchaser may sue his endorser alone and it is not absolutely necessary to implead the acceptor and drawer in the same suit. He does not lose his right of suit against the drawer and acceptor, if he does not sue them at once, as long as he sues within the time allowed by the law of limitation. GOPAL DASS v. SEETA RAM, 3 Agra 268.

(3 & 4) — Hundi—Dishonour—Notice—Applicability of English Law.—Although strict rules of English Law are not applicable to hundi transactions in this country, still, on a refusal by the acceptor to accept a hundi or to pay after acceptance, it is necessary that some notice of dishonour should be given to the immediate endorser or drawer within a reasonable time. (5)—Native hoondies—Notice of dishonour—English rule of prompt notice by return of post, if applicable.—The English law of prompt notice "by return of post" is inapplicable to cases of native Hoondies drawn by natives upon natives, and endorsed by natives. In the case of such Hoondies, however, before holding the endorser or drawer responsible for the consideration of a Hoondie dishonoured by the drawee, some reasonable notice is essentially necessary to be given to the party who may be asked to pay. RADHA GOBIND SHAHA v. CHUNDER-NATH DOSS SHAHA, 6 W.R. 301. See SUMBOONANTH GHOSE v. JUDDUNATH CHATTERJEE, Cor. 88.

(6)—Hundis—Dishonour—Notice—Applicability of English Law.—In a suit to recover the balance due on a hundi brought by the drawee against the drawers upon the insolvency of the acceptor, there was evidence, not only that the drawers were merely the ordinary gomashtas of the acceptor, but also that they had no interest whatever in the bill when drawn; that by local custom they were not liable for the defections of their principal; that the money when procured on the hundi was applied solely to the purposes of the acceptor; that the drawees received part-payment of the hundi from him and gave him time to pay the remainder; and that the notice of dishonour was not sent to the drawer till ten months afterwards. Held that the drawers were not liable. Although strict rules of English law are not applicable to hundi transactions in this country, still, on a refusal by the acceptor to accept a hundi or to pay after acceptance, it is necessary that some notice of dishonor should be given to the immediate endorser or drawer within a reasonable time. HARI MOHAN BYSACK v. KRISHNA MOHAN BYSACK, 9 B.L.R. App. 1=17 W.R. 442. [F., 14 C.L.R. 333.]

(7)—Hundi—Notice of dishonour—Consideration, want of—Onus of proof.—In a suit against the indorser of a hundi, absence of formal written notice of dishonour is not a sufficient defence, unless it is also shown that, by the absence of such notice, the defendant has been prejudiced. Where, in a suit by the indorsee of a hundi against his immediate indorser, the defendant pleads want of consideration, the onus is on him to prove his plea. GOVINDRAM MARWARI v. MANTORA SAHOO, 1 C.L.R. 429.

(8)—Hundi—Option of holder.—The holder of a hundi, or in other words, of a bill or note, is not bound, in the event of its dishonour, to sue all the parties liable to him under it, but he may, at his option, select his defendant or defendants, as he may judge best, for recovery of the money. *BASANT RAM v. payable on a fixed date, dishonour by non-acceptance constitutes now, as it has always done, part of the cause of action in a suit against the drawer. Although the English law does not require presentment for acceptance of a bill payable after a fixed date to be made by the holder before such fixed date arrives, still it was not only allowable but was strongly advisable to do so. And the Negotiable Instruments Act XXVI of 1881 has made no alteration in this respect. RAM RAVJI JAMBHEKAR v. PRAHLADDAS SUBKARN, 20 B. 133.

(10)—Money lent, suit for—Acceptance of hundi for the loan—Hundi dishonoured and unpaid—Suit on the original loan—Maintainability.—A sued B for the recovery of a sum of money lent and repayable on a certain date. B also gave a hundi for the sum. A brought a suit on the hundi, which failed by reason of defect in the stamp. A brought the present suit on the original loan for recovery of the sum lent, costs, etc. Held that the plaintiff's claim to recover his loan is not barred by his acceptance of a hundi, payment of which was refused. GOKULDAS v. PARMANAND, 6 N.L.R. 125=8 Ind. Cas. 281. (23 C. 851, 28 A. 298, 24 B. 360, F.; 7 C. 256, Cons.; 8 C. 721, 26 A. 178, Diss.; 29 M. 111, R.)

(11)—Hundi—Dishonour—Surrender—Fresh opening of account—Right to sue on surrendered hundi.—Two hundis were drawn by the defendant and transferred to the plaintiff and were dishonoured. The plaintiff then surrendered the hundis to the defendant and charged his amount as the opening debt in a new account in which subsequent entries were made. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff was held not entitled to sue on the surrendered hundis. BIRJ LAL v. ARJAN DAS, A.W.N. 1883, 135.

(12)—Shahjog hundi.—A Shahjog hundi, unlike a hundi payable to bearer, is payable only to a respectable person. LALLA MAL v. KESHO DAS, 26 A. 493=A.W.N. 1904, 100=1 A.L.J. 254. (5 C.W.N. 313, R.)

(13)—Hundi (shajoog)—Special endorsement and special acceptance—Rights of bearer.—In considering the right to a hundi, the Court is as much bound to put a reasonable construction upon the words of an endorsement or an acceptance as upon any other part of the document. When a hundi-maker or rightful owner of a hundi payable in terms to the shajoog, endorses it as sold or sent to A, he obviously means to pass the right of dealing with the hundi to A alone. It may well be that, according to Hindu customary law, A can transfer his right to a third person B by word of mouth or mere delivery, notwithstanding that the special endorsement to himself is in writing. The term "shajoog" should be subordinate to the directions of the successive owners and should mean "the right men to be paid" according to the tenor of the document which must include both the endorsement and acceptance. There is no rule of Hindu law, customary or otherwise, which would have the effect of making the word "shajoo" mean payable to bearer, quite independently of the endorsement. There is no principle of mercantile expediency, having the force of law or otherwise, which would be served by the Court disregarding the direction of the endorser and treating a specially endorsed and specially accepted hundi as if it were an English negotiable instrument made payable to bearer, and, as such, part of the currency of the country. THAKUR DAS v. FUTTEH MULL, 7 B.L.R. 275 = 16 W.R.O.C. 3. [R., 18 B. 570, 5 C.W.N. 313.]

(14)—Hundi—Suit to recover—Forged endorsement—Shajoo hundi.—The plaintiffs being holders of a hundi, sent the same to their koti in Calcutta without endorsement. The hundi was lost or stolen in the way, and came into the defendants' hands as endorsees, the endorsement of the plaintiffs having been forged. The defendants without notice of the forgery, paid full consideration for the hundi. Held, on appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the hundi from the defendants. [D., 18 B. 570; R., 5 C.W.N. 313.] A hundi payable to "shajoo" would pass by delivery merely, without regard to the authenticity or otherwise of any special endorsement which might be upon it. GOURSIMULL v. DHAN-SUK DAS, 7 B.L.R. 289, Note. [R., 5 C.W.N. 313.]

(15)—Shajoo hundi—Endorsement and transmission to drawee for payment—Theft in transmission—Drawee making payment to wrong person—Rights of owner of hundi—Liability of drawee.—A, residing at Sholapur, bought the plaint hundi, which was drawn upon B (who was residing at Bombay), endorsed it to R and transmitted the same to the latter by post. The hundi having been stolen in the course of transmission by T, the latter, obliterating the name of R and substituting his name on the hundi, presented it for payment to the drawee B at Bombay. The amount due under the hundi was paid to T, without the drawee making any inquiries in respect of the respectability or position of T. Thereupon, the present suit was brought by A, the owner of the hundi, against B, the drawee, for recovering its value of the hundi from the latter. Held, (1) that the defendant had been guilty of conversion of the hundi and was liable to the plaintiff (the lawful owner thereof) in trover; (2) that the defendant was liable to refund to the plaintiffs the amount of the hundi; (3) that the hundi being payable by endorsement to T, the defendant was not discharged by such payment; (4) that the hundi continued to be a shajoo hundi after being endorsed to a particular person. GANESDAS RAMNARAYAN v. (16)—Hundi payable "to a respectable person"—Negotiability.—A number of hundis drawn by H on himself were accepted by him in the following terms.—"Hundi accepted by H in favour of S." They were all made payable to "a respectable person." S transferred the hundis by endorsement to B who brought this suit against H. Held that the phrase "a respectable person" meant the same thing as the phrase, "the bearer" and that they were perfectly good and negotiable instruments. The plaintiff's suit must therefore be decreed. BALMUKAND LAL v. THE COLLECTOR OF JAUNPUR, A.W.N. 1884, 3.

(17)—Necessity for endorsement—Hundi given for particular purpose—Hundi payable to order.—A party, who receives a hundi for a particular purpose, must apply the same accordingly, and neither he nor any third party knowing the facts can, by afterwards receiving the amount, detain the same from the principal. Quære—Whether a hundi made payable to "order" is according to Hindu law and the custom of native merchants, negotiable without a written endorsement by the payee. RAJROOPRAM v. BUUDOC, 1 Ind. Jur. O.S. 93 = 1 Hyde 155.

(18)—Right of suit—Dishonoured hoondie—Suit by endorser without re-endorsement.—Where the plaintiff purchased from the defendant's firm a hoondie in his favour which was payable by the firm of the defendant at Benares and sold the hoondie to two persons to whom it was endorsed by him, and the defendant's firm at Benares having refused to accept or pay the hoondie on presentation, it was returned to the plaintiff by the said purchasers and there was no formal re-endorsement in favour of the plaintiff by the said purchasers, held, in a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for the value paid by him, that the plaintiff had a right to sue if it was established that the hoondie was returned to him by the purchasers. BYJNATH SAHOO v. RACHARAM, 5 W.R. 86.

(19)—Hundi—Consideration—Burden of proof—Revision under s. 70 (a) of Act XVIII of 1884.—Held, that, where a man executes a Hundi, he must pay the money or must prove that no consideration passed. This law may at times secure decrees for money to plaintiffs who never paid the quid pro quo, but this is immaterial. The Legislature, in the interest of the business community generally, has adopted a policy, and, in pursuance of that policy, the onus in such cases is laid upon the person who promises to pay upon a negotiable instrument. A person is not bound to keep careful proof of matter which the law says he need not prove. Held, also, that a finding of fact by wrongly throwing burden of proof on a party can be questioned in revision under s. 70 (a) of Act XVIII of 1884. KISHEN CHAND v. JAMNA DAS, 25 P.W.R. 1910 = 24 P.L.R. 1910 = 5 Ind. Cas. 891.

(20)—Hundi—Liability of each endorser to subsequent endorsees—Liability of acceptor—Local custom making last endorser liable to last endorsee.—Under ordinary circumstances, the failure of the last endorsee to present a hundi for payment at the proper mercantile time for doing so, would have absolved all the antecedent parties thereto, with the exception of the acceptor. But the law which, according to English principles, would otherwise be applicable, would be subject to the local mercantile usage that might be proved to exist. In this case, a local custom was proved to exist by which, altogether independent of the question whether a hundi had been presented to the acceptor for payment or not, the last endorser remained liable to his endorsee, should the instrument remain unpaid. Such a custom should be taken as imported into the contract entered into between the parties when the endorsement took place. HARLAL v. THULSHI DAS, A.W. N. 1882, 35.

(21)—Suit against endorser of Hundi—Loss of hundi in transit—Loss not ascertained by plaintiffs with due diligence—Drawer's insolvency before notice of loss—Defendant not liable to plaintiffs for amount of hundi.—Plaintiffs sued the defendant who had endorsed to them a hundi drawn on a Delhi Firm on the 4th August, 1878, by one Firm in Cawnpur in favour of another Firm there, to receive the amount of the hundi with interest. The bill was payable after 21 days, and on the 14th of August, during the currency of the above term, it was endorsed by the defendant to the plaintiffs. On the following day, plaintiffs forwarded it by bearing letter to a correspondent at Bhawani in payment of an account. Their correspondent forwarded his accounts eleven months afterwards and plaintiffs then discovered that the bill had not been credited to them, and inferred that it had been lost in transit. In September 1879, when nearly 13 months had elapsed, they called upon the defendant to get them a duplicate or to re-pay the amount of the hundi. The defendant communicated with his immediate endorsers in order to procure a duplicate. The endorsers to the defendant replied that they had communicated with the payees from whom they had received the hundi, but they replied that the term of the hundi was 21 days, and 14 months had elapsed and no previous notice of loss or nonpayment had been received, and the drawer of the bill had become bankrupt 4 months ago and therefore no duplicate could be obtained. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim in full. On appeal, the Commissioner reversed the decree holding that there was no such evidence of the loss of the bill as would satisfy the parties liable upon it that, if they paid without its being produced, they might not have to pay a second time, and that the plaintiffs' gross carelessness and supineness deprived them of any right to redress in a Court of law. On further appeal, plaintiffs urged that the loss of the hundi was satisfactorily proved, that the defendant could be protected against any future liability upon it by requiring the plaintiffs to give him a guarantee indemnifying him against such liability, and that there was no laches on the plaintiffs' part, as they did not become aware of the loss of the hundi until they settled accounts with their correspondent at Bhawani. Held, that, assuming the loss of the hundi to be proved, the defendant had done all that, under the circumstances, he was bound to do, and was not liable to the plaintiffs for the amount of the hundi, which could not be recovered because the plaintiffs did not use due diligence in ascertaining that their correspondent had received it, and because the drawer became insolvent before the loss was brought to notice. HAIT RAM v. (23)—Suit by endorsee against acceptor—Notice not to discount, effect of—Bona fide holder for valuable consideration. To an action by the endorsee against the acceptor of a hundi, the defence was a certain verbal contract between acceptor and payee, of which the plaintiff had notice; and that by the custom of shroffs the defendant was exonerated by such notice. Held that it is the custom of shroffs to make enquiries of the acceptors of hundies before discounting them, and that a mere notice by the acceptor not to discount does not affect his liability to a person who takes a hundi bona fide and for valuable consideration after such notice. KHOSAL CHUND v. (24)—Suit by holder of hundi—Presentment of hundi at bank to acceptor's authorized agent—Validity of presentment under local usage—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 70, 71.—Suit by the holders and indorsees of a hundi. The defendant, who was the payee and the indorser, pleaded that the presentment of the hundi, for payment, at the bank, to the authorized agent of the acceptor, was not a legally sufficient and valid presentment and that the suit must therefore fail. The lower Court had found (1) that the hundi was presented for payment to the authorized agent of the acceptor at the Bank on the due date; (2) that the said agent refused payment and informed the Bank that the acceptor would not pay that hundi and (3), that the usage or custom in the locality was to present the hundis for payment at the Bank and for acceptors of hundis to call the Bank on the due date to effect settlement. On the question being referred for the opinion of the High Court, whether under the above circumstances, and with reference to the proviso as to local usage in s. 1 of the Act, the presentment of the hundi in this case satisfied the requirements of the Act, the question was answered in the affirmative. The local usage or custom found to prevail in the locality did not exclude the usual presumption which accords with the law as laid down in s. 75 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, that what a person can himself do he can do by an authorized agent, and the presentment of the hundi to such an agent of the acceptor was a good and valid presentment. IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA v. (26)—Assignment of hundi—Bills of Exchange Act, V of 1866.—A Hundi, which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee and accepted by him, is within the terms of the Bills of Exchange Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement, if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. (27)—Hundi accepted for accommodation—Transfer for value—Liability of person accommodated to drawee.—A person, who accepts, for accommodation, a hundi drawn upon him, is entitled to recover, from the drawer, the amount he had had to pay to a transferee of the hundi for value, but not from persons, who merely cashed the hundi at his hands at the request of a holder for value. NAND RAM v. SITLA PRASAD, 5 A. 484 = A.W.N. 1883, 62.

(28)—Payment of debt by means of hundi—Payment whether absolute—Liability of debtor thereafter.—Where a note or a bill is given in payment of a debt, it is a question of fact whether the parties intended the same as an absolute or conditional payment, and the presumption as to the effect of giving and taking a note or bill is that the debt is conditionally paid. In this case, the fact that a comparatively high rate of discount at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was allowed to plaintiff taken with the other circumstances, was held to prove that plaintiff had accepted the hundis given to him as absolute payment and was consequently held not entitled to sue upon the original debt. JAMBU CHETTY v. (29)—Indorsement to agent and banker for collection—Credit in agent's accounts—Holder for value—Dishonour of Hundi by drawee—Usage of shroffs—Consideration—Indorsement.—An agent and banker to whom a hundi is sent with the indorsement 'sent by A to B for recovery on my (A's) account' and who gets it accepted and credits the sender with the amount in his accounts, becomes a holder for value, the indorsement being no more restrictive than the usual "do the best for me" in English bills. Under the circumstances mentioned above, although the hundi is dishonoured by the drawee at the due date, the agent is entitled, according to the practice followed by shroffs, to treat his constituent as still entitled to credit for the hundi, and himself as holder for value. A hundi drawn in favour of A by B and delivered to him, though not presented for acceptance or payment, forms a sufficient consideration for A's indorsing another hundi to B. MULCHAND JOHARI MAL v. (30)—Hundis sent to agents for realization, property in.—Suits to recover possession of two hundis for Rs. 2,500 each, or their value and damages for their detention and for an injunction restraining the defendant from negotiating or otherwise alienating them. The hundis were drawn by two up-country firms upon firms in Calcutta, and were made payable to the plaintiffs 61 days after date. The plaintiffs sent them without endorsement to their Calcutta agents S.R., with instructions to procure their acceptance, and to realise them at due date. S.R. had previously to this accepted hundis to the value of Rs. 12,000 drawn upon them by a branch house of the plaintiffs' firm; and the plaintiffs had at different times sent them hundis amounting in value to Rs. 11,400, the two hundis, the subject of the present suit being among the number, with instructions to realise them and apply the proceeds towards payment of the Rs. 12,000. Of the hundis so sent for realization, S.R. had realized Rs. 6,400, and they had paid Rs. 7,000 out of the Rs. 12,000 for which they had given their acceptances, when they stopped payment, and the plaintiffs thereupon became liable to the holders of the remaining acceptances. The two hundis sued upon had not then matured and remained unpaid in the hands of S.R. After the bills became due, a meeting was held at S.R.'s place of business, which a number of the creditors and neighbours of the firm attended; and in compliance with a resolution come to at that meeting, S.R.'s gomasta endorsed the two hundis over to the defendant, who undertook to hold them for the benefit of the Calcutta creditors of S.R. The plaintiffs demanded the two hundis from the defendant, but the latter declined to give them up on the ground that he had received them from a committee of creditors, without whose authority he

—II.—ACCEPTANCE OF HUNDIS.

(1)—Acceptance of hundi, communication of, to drawer or previous holder, binding on acceptor.—A communication of the acceptance of a hundi made to the drawer or previous holder, binds the acceptor as a communication of it to the present holder thereof, because the acceptance enures as well for their benefit as for that of the actual holder, and the primary contract is between the drawer and the acceptor. PRAGDAS THAKURDAS v. (2)—Hundi, suit on — Execution denied—Endorsement admitted—Issues—Procedure of Court.—Where plaintiff sued on a hundi as endorsee thereof from the 2nd defendant, in whose favour it was drawn by the 1st defendant, and the latter denied execution while the former admitted his endorsement and added that he so endorsed it as surety for the 1st defendant, held that the Court should try whether the signatures of the defendants were genuine or not, and that, if it be found that the signatures were genuine, both the defendants would be separately liable to the plaintiffs, and that their two cases must be distinguished and tried separately. DOOLAR CHAND SAHOO v. MOHABEEN SURUN RAM, 19 W.R. 303.

(3)—Hundis payable to depositor.—A hundi payable to the depositor, is payable to no receipt but that of the drawer or his endorsee; but it may become in fact, a hundi payable to bearer, provided the banker exercises due caution, and pays to a respectable person, as where the drawer and the person to whose receipt the hundi was paid are uterine brothers and members of an undivided Hindu family, the presumption arises that the latter is entitled to act for the former. VELIET DOSS v. against endorsee—Not payable to bearer—Effect of endorsement for realisation—Delivery of such hundi—Title.—A hundi payable to Shahjogi (to the respectable holder) was endorsed by the drawer [“hundi sent for realisation by G (drawer) to B of Calcutta (plaintiffs),” and sent by him to the plaintiffs]. The plaintiffs banded the hundi to one S, the plaintiffs’ jemadar, who had been in the habit of taking hundis on their behalf for acceptance and payment to be taken by him to the defendant for acceptance. S took the hundi to the defendant, but subsequently, one R who had no authority from the plaintiffs to receive payment, acting on information either from S or from some other source, represented himself to the defendant as a jemadar of the plaintiffs, wrongfully obtained the hundi from the defendant, forged the plaintiffs’ signature to it and obtained payment. The defendants, before such payment, had made no enquiries as to the position or respectability of R, and paid the hundi on the faith of the forged signature. Held, that such endorsement coupled with the delivery of the hundi entitled the plaintiffs to sue for and receive payment of the hundi from the acceptors, though, as between the drawer and the plaintiffs, the latter were mere agents or parties with a defeasible title. Such an endorsement is in the nature of a restrictive endorsement, giving the endorsee the right to receive payment of the hundi, and, if necessary to sue the acceptor for the amount, but not to transfer his rights as endorsee to anybody else. Plaintiffs are entitled to claim the amount of the hundi from the defendants, unless they were guilty of such negligence or carelessness as would estop them from disputing the validity of the payment to R. Even if S colluded with R and fraudulently obtained payment from defendants, there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiffs in entrusting the hundi to S. Even if such an act was negligent the negligence was not so immediately conducive to the payment of the hundi as to estop the plaintiffs from saying that R had no authority from them to receive payment and that the payment had not been made to them. Any defence which would be available to the acceptor against the drawer would be available against the endorsee. A hundi payable shahjogi is only payable to the Shah (the respectable holder), and it is not equivalent to a hundi payable to bearer. (7 B. L. R. 275, R.) [F., A.W.N. 1904, 100=26 A. 493.] A Shahjogi hundi continues to be such even after an endorsement for realization. (2)—Hundi drawn on one's own factory, delivery of, to another—Evidence of indebtedness—Drawer not entitled to claim as item of credit.—In this suit in which plaintiff sought to have credit for a hundi which he gave to the defendant, it appeared that the hundi had been drawn on plaintiff's own factory and it was held that the drawing of a hundi by the plaintiff on his own factory, and the delivery of it to the defendant, though it may be evidence of the indebtedness to the amount of that hundi, was not an item for which the drawer of the hundi, i. e., the plaintiff would be entitled to credit. (1)—Hundis—Notice of dishonour.—As regards notice of dishonor in connection with hundi transactions, the endorsee is bound to give the endorser notice within a reasonable time of his intention to come upon him. The question as to what is reasonable notice, must be settled by local custom, and the prejudice to a party for the want of such notice is to be taken into consideration. ANUNT RAM AGURWALLA v. R. D. (2)—Negotiable instrument—Hundi—Hindu law merchant—Liability of indorser to holder—Notice of dishonour.—Where a hundi has been dishonoured, the holder must give notice of dishonour to the indorsee in order to make him liable. A mere demand of a peth is not equivalent to a notice of dishonour. MEGRAJ JAGANNATH v. GOKALDAS MATHURADAS, 7 B.H.C. O.C. 137.

(3)—Hundi—Notice of dishonor.—Previous formal written notice of dishonor is not necessary before suit brought, unless it could be shewn that the parties charged have been prejudiced by such omission. GOBIND RAM MARWARY v. MATHOORA SABOOYA, 3 C. 339. [R., 12 C.L.R. 333.]

(4)—Native hundis—Notice of dishonour—English rule of prompt notice by return of post, if applicable.—The English law of prompt notice "by return of post" is inapplicable to case of native hundis drawn by natives upon natives, and endorsed by natives. In the case of such hundis, however, before holding the endorser or drawer responsible for the consideration of a hundi dishonoured by the drawee, some reasonable notice is essentially necessary to be given to the party who may be asked to pay. RACHARAM, 5 W.R. 86 = 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 76.

——VI.—PRESENTATION OF HUNDIS.

See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—HUNDIS—GENERAL.

(1)—Hundi payable after sight—Presentation for acceptance within reasonable time, when condition precedent to suit.—In the case of a hundi or bill payable after sight, it is however a condition precedent to a right of action on the bill or hundi, that it must have been presented for acceptance within a reasonable time. The reason of the rule is that the longer the delay the greater the risk the drawer runs of the insolvency of the drawee. And therefore, when the drawer has had no assets in the hands of the drawee, the reason of the rule ceases to apply; and the question of presentation within reasonable time is immaterial. NILKUND ANANTAPA v. MENSHI APURAYA, 10 B. 346.

——VII.—MISCELLANEOUS.

(1)—Act XIV of 1859, s. 1, cl. 16, limitation under, applicable to suit by holder of hundi against acceptor—Reg. XX of 1812, s. 5, not applicable to cases of negotiable mercantile securities.—This suit was instituted by holder of a hundi against the acceptor within six years from the date of the acceptance, but more than three years from that time, and was decided by the appellate Court to be barred by limitation under the provisions of cl. 10, s. 1, Act XIV of 1859, under which a limitation of three years was provided for suits on unregistered written agreements or contracts where the law has provided means for the registration of the writings. The Judge held that the hundi might have been registered under Reg. XX of 1812, and that, not having been so registered, no suit could be maintained upon it after three years. The High Court, however, held on second appeal that the above Regulation was not applicable to hundis, or any other similar mercantile securities negotiable by usage. The three years' limitation was therefore not applicable and the present suit was therefore subject to the limitation of six years under cl. 16 of Act XIV of 1859. BOISTUB CHURN DOSS v. In order to be a promissory note, the instrument must contain in words an unconditional undertaking to pay a sum of money. A mere acknowledgment of receipt of money or of indebtedness, and an admission that the executant was accountable to the other party, will not constitute the document a promissory note. KARUTHAPPA ROWTHAN v. BAOA MOIDEEN SAHIB, 2 M.W. N. 1911, 380 = 10 M.L.T. 531. (22 B. 986, R.)

(5)—Acknowledgment—Stamp.—An acknowledgment containing an express promise to pay the principal with interest on demand, amounts, to a promissory note and should be stamped as such. MATHURBHAIR v. DALPAT, 3 Bom. L.R. 839.

(6)—Act XXXVI of 1860, sch. A, cl. 4—Instrument in the nature of promissory note—Amount of stamp duty payable.—An instrument contained the following:—"We bind ourselves to pay with interest to . . . the sum of rupees . . . being the balance of dealings held with your firm and the amount received this day from you in cash on account of stamp." Held that the instrument, though not a bond or hundi, was in the nature of a promissory note and came within the description in cl. 4, Sch. A, Act XXXVI of 1860. HUTUMAN SAHIB v. HUSAIN SAHIB, 1 M.H.C.R. 152.

(7)—Promissory note not negotiable—Assignment by separate document—Right of assignee to sue upon the note.—A non-negotiable promissory note may be assigned by means of a separate document; an endorsement in writing on the note itself is not necessary for the validity of an assignment. The assignee can maintain a suit on the note. A debtor executed a document in favour of the creditor promising to re-pay the amount borrowed to the latter on demand three months after date. There was no provision in the document for payment to the order of the creditor. Held that the instrument was a non-negotiable promissory note. SUGAPPA v. GOVINDAPPA, 12 M.L.J. 351.

(8)—Deposit of title-deeds—Collateral security—Promissory note.—An instrument which runs thus, "On deposit of title-deeds I promise to pay you or order Rs. 160 for value received" is a negotiable instrument. Deposit of title-deeds as a collateral security does not make a promissory note the less a negotiable instrument. RAMCHANDRA ROW v. SESA AIYANGAR, 3 M.L.J. 225. (4 Ad. & E., 790, F.)

(9)—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 4—Promissory note—Unconditional promise to pay—Specified person—Intention to make promissory-note not necessary.—Where a document executed by one person to another contains an unconditional promise to pay a certain sum of money to the latter, who is sufficiently indicated, the document is a promissory-note, and it is not necessary to show that the maker of the document intended to make a promissory-note. PARAMASIVAM v. SANKARAYA, 8 Ind. Cas. 352.

(10)—Pro-note, liability on—Description of maker in the body of pro-note as manager of temple—Personal liability.—Where the maker of a pro-note described himself in the body of the document as the honorary manager of a temple: Held, that this did not affect his personal liability to pay. AIYATHURAI AIYAR v. DHARMA SIVA IYER, 8 Ind. Cas. 843 = 9 M.L.T. 205.

(11)—Negotiable instrument—Pleading of own fraud.—Held, under the circumstances reported, that blank printed forms of an "on demand" promissory note in the Tamil characters, on the face of which certain Chinese characters had been inscribed, should be read as if such characters filled up the blanks in the printed form; that, if the executor was acting honestly, it must have been his intention to make a promissory note, but that, if such was not his intention, then, he acted fraudulently and is barred from pleading his own fraud. V.K.K.C. KOTIYAN CHETTY v. AUNG YIN, L.B.R. 1893—1900, 395.

(12)—Pro-note—What.—A document containing a promise to pay money and paddy is not a promissory note for the purpose of the General Stamp Act, 1869, s. 28. MUTHU v. MUTHAN, 4 M. 296, F.B.

(13)—Document containing request to borrow on certain conditions—Promissory Note—Proposal—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 4—Stamp duty.—Where a document contains a request to borrow a certain sum of money on certain conditions, it is not an unconditional undertaking to pay, but constitutes only a proposal under s. 4 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). Not being a promissory note, it is not liable to stamp duty. DHONDBHAT NARHAR BHAT v. V. ATMARAM MORESHWAR, 13 B. 669. [E., 7 M.L.T. 220 = 23 M. 156, 14 M.L.J. 65 = 27 M. 1; D., 16 M. 283.]

(14)—Promise to pay, essential to constitute promissory note—Implied promise not sufficient.—Suit to recover money as due under a document, styled a 'khata,' (an account) and stamped with a one-anna stamp. The lower Court was of opinion that the document was a pro-note and refused to admit it because of insufficiency of stamp. The High Court, however, held that, as the document in question did not contain any express promise to pay, it could not be treated as a promissory note but simply as an acknowledgment of liability and was therefore, as such sufficiently stamped with a one-anna stamp. GOVIND v. BALWANT RAO, 22 B. 986.

(15)—Promissory note—Adjustment of previous disputes.—Where a promissory note is executed by a person to another in adjustment of disputes, and it is found that there were no disputes at the time of the execution of the note, but that the disputes referred to in the note were long before settled by a decree of Court and there was no "res dubia" or "lis incerta," the note cannot be said to be supported by consideration. NAMASIVAYA GAUNDAN v. KYLASA GAUNDAN, 7 M H.C. 200.

(16)—Promissory note unenforceable, being inequitable.—Where the pro note contained a false statement as to the consideration, which was far less than the amount expressed therein, interest at a certain rate from the date of the note up to the due date having been deducted by the lender from the sum lent, the defaulting interest being exorbitant, and there being nothing to show that the borrower understood the real nature of the transaction, held the note was not one that could be enforced in a Court of Equity. MACKINTOSH v. HUNT, 2 C. 202. [D., 4 C. 137=2 C L.R. 433.]

(17)—Promissory note, assignment of—Negotiable Instruments Act—Endorsement, not the only means of transfer.—A promissory note may be assigned by the holder just like any other chose in action, and there is no reason why in India an assignee of this particular sort of chose in action should not enjoy the rights which attach to the assignee of a debt and be allowed to sue in his own name. There is nothing in the Negotiable Instruments Act to exclude any other mode of transfer than by endorsement. RAMACHANDRA RAO v. KUPPUSAMI AIYAR, 8 M L.J. 262.

(18)—Negotiable Pro-note, suit on—Chose in action, assignment of—Must be in writing—Transfer of Property Act, ss. 130 and 137.—In a suit by the plaintiff on a negotiable pro-note, executed in favour of the managing member of his family, it was held, (1) that, if the suit was regarded as one of the pronote, the suit must fail, as there was no endorsement in plaintiff's favour (30 M. 88, F) and (2) if the suit be regarded as one by the assignee of the chose in action, then the assignment must be in writing as required by s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. (24 M. 654, R.) In the latter case, he could not be regarded as suing on a negotiable instrument, and, therefore, would not come within the exceptions in s. 137 of the Transfer of Property Act. ARUNACHALA REDDI v. SUBBA REDDI, 17 M.L.J. 393=3 M.L.T. 7. [Doubted, 8 M.L.T. 449=8 Ind. Cas. 33.]

(19)—Promissory-note—Transfer of ownership—Want of endorsement—Purchaser in Court auction—Right of purchaser to sue—Vesting order—Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 80 and 81.—In order to effect a transfer of ownership of a negotiable instrument, an endorsement is not in general required by law. A purchaser of a promissory note in Court auction, who obtained a vesting order before date of his decree, is entitled to a decree in suit on the promissory note, even though there was no endorsement on it. KUTHALALINGAM PILLAY v. PACKIYAM FERNANDEZ, 8 Ind. Cas. 17=8 M.L.T. 448. (6 B. 139, R.)

(20)—Promissory note—Negotiable instrument—Transfer without consideration—Burden of proof—Claim against the estate of the deceased—Uncorroborated evidence of plaintiff.—The Negotiable Instruments Act applies to Government Promissory Notes. The onus is in the first place on the transferor of a Government security to establish that the transfer of the Promissory Note by him in favour of another was without consideration. When a claim is put forward against the estate of a deceased, the evidence of the plaintiff, though uncorroborated, may be acted upon, but such evidence must be carefully tested and scrutinised. HIRA LAL CHATTERJEE v. RAJKUMAR MOOKERJEE, 12 C.L.J. 470=8 Ind. Cas. 796.

(21)—Negotiable Instruments Act—Payee—Description as agent.—The description in a promissory note of the payee as agent of another denotes the character in which the note was executed. VEERAIYAN CHETTIAR v. PONNUSAMI CHETTIAR, 2 M.W.N. 1911, 340=10 M.L.T. 328. (28 M. 544, Expl.)

(22)—Extent of agent's authority.—Where promissory notes made by an agent, acting for himself and for his principal, were secured by the deposit of title deeds of property, belonging to the principal, in the hands of the Bank, which discounted the notes, and the latter were paid at maturity by an endorser, held, that the endorser was entitled to a transfer of the deeds to him as security without further assent from the owner on the ground that, as a fact, the agent, acting within the principal's authority had agreed that, in consideration of his paying the amount of the notes to the holder, he should have this security, the Bank assenting. AGA AHMED ISPAHANI v. JUDITH EMMA CRISP, 19 C. 242, P.C.=19 I.A. 24=6 Sar. 109.

(23)—Endorsement on—Intention to effect a transfer.—When the direction to pay is endorsed upon an instrument, which is not negotiable under s. 13 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, so that both are handed over together to the endorsee, the intention to effect a transfer must be inferred, and the endorsement operates as a valid equitable assignment. RAMA IYEN v. VENKATACHELLAM PATTAR, 1 M.L.T. 329=16 M.L.J. 554=30 M. 75. [F., 1 Ind. Cas. 212.]

(24)—Suit by person other than a payee of a promissory note—Payee being made defendant in the suit, effect of.—Under the Negotiable Instruments Act, the only person entitled to sue, on a promissory note, is the payee, or the holder. Any person, other than the payee, has no right of suit thereon, whether the same is negotiable or not. The fact that the payee named in the note is made one of the defendants in the suit does not alter the principle. SUBRAMANYA TEVAN v. ARUNACHALA TEVAN, 18 M.L.J. 186. (28 M. 205, 30 M. 88, F.) [F., 5 M.L.T. 210.]

(25)—Payable to order—Indorsement and delivery for collection—Rights of holder—Ss. 8, 46, 50, 78, Negotiable Instruments Act.—In this case a pro note was drawn by R in favour of K. K indorsed it, handed it over to V for collection and then died. V sued R on the note. It was argued on behalf of R that, as the note did not pass for consideration and as V's authority ceased on the death of K, he could not recover the money without a letter of administration or a succession certificate. Held, that, by K's indorsement and delivery to V, the property in the note passed to V under ss. 46 and 50 of the Act, and he became the holder of it, and that by s. 78 payment had to be made to him, and that he therefore had the right to sue for the same. RAMZAN ALI v. VELLASAWMI PILLE, 5 L.B.R. 198.

(26)—Death of drawee without endorsing the note in favour of any one—Right of members of Tarwad to sue upon—Negotiable Instruments Act, s. 6.—A pro-note was executed in favour of X, a member of the Tarwad, who died without endorsing the note in favour of any one. A suit was then brought on it by the members of the Tarwad, on the ground that the money advanced on the note was the money of the Tarwad, and not of X. Held, if X were alive, she alone could have sued on the note, and her death cannot give the plaintiffs who were not suing as representatives of X, the right which they had not in her life time. NEELU AMMAH v. KRISHNA PANIKAR, 8 M.L.T. 85.

(27)—Absence of consideration for the making of the note—Rights of a bona fide holder in due course for consideration and without notice of want of consideration.—Notwithstanding the fact that a promissory note was executed without consideration, a bona fide holder in due course for consideration, and without notice of any want of consideration for the making of the note, is entitled to a decree on the note. SANTHANA GOPAULASAWMI ODAYAR v. SUNDARASAWMY ODAYAR, 1 M.L.T. 393.

(28)—Promissory note—Allocation in partition—Want of endorsement—Right of person to whose share it falls to sue—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 130, 137—Instruments negotiable by custom—Assignment in writing—Partition list.—A member of a Hindu co-parcenary, to whose share, on partition, a promissory note executed in favour of the manager of the family, was allotted, can sue on the promissory note, even though there was no endorsement on it. S. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to the case, as the instrument was, by custom, negotiable. Even if an assignment in writing was necessary to create a right of suit, the partition list in the case was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. CHANDANA v. MAJATI, 8 Ind. Cas. 33=8 M.L.T. 449.

(29)—Collateral agreement not to sue for a time—Such covenant by distinct letter no bar to suit on the note within the time—On N executing to W the promissory note sued on, the latter handed over a letter to the former agreeing not to sue for the money due under the pro-note except on the fulfilment of the conditions or the happening of the contingencies specified in the letter. Admittedly, when they were entering into the above arrangement, W did not consent to what was stated in the letter finding a place in the pro note itself. Held, N having consented to the agreement being effected by two distinct instruments, it cannot possibly be taken that the intention of the parties was otherwise than to keep the two documents as evidence of two separate contracts, the letter operating only as a collateral covenant not to sue on the pro-note until a specified time. Such a distinct covenant cannot be pleaded in bar to an action on the pro-note or can it suspend the right of action on the same even until the time specified in the letter. SOMASUNDARAM CHETTIAR v. NARASIMHACHARIAR, 16 M.L.J. 103=29 M. 212.

(30)—Promissory note payable to order—Discounted with a bank—Bank returning the note to maker, it not being paid—Subsequent endorsement in blank and delivery to another without striking out first endorsement—Delivery again to plaintiff to enable him to sue upon it—Whether plaintiff was holder in due course—S. 50, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881.—A promissory note was given by the defendant to P.S., in connection with some partnership transactions between them, on those transactions being brought to an end. P.S. discounted the note with the Bank of Bengal; when it was not paid, the Bank returned the note to him. He subsequently handed the note to one C.J. to whom he owed money, and wrote his second signature on the back of the note. C.J., handed it to his clerk, the plaintiff, in order that the latter may file a suit on it. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the amount. Held that the plaintiff was not a holder in due course of the note and did not become the possessor of it for consideration; the legal title to it was in the Bank of Bengal, since the endorsement to it was an endorsement in full, and there was no endorsement by it to any one else in full or in blank. Held, also, that the plaintiff had no right at all to sue upon it, as he did not prove his title to it either (1) by negotiation, for the note was payable to order and was indorsed to order, and that endorsement was not struck out; a note in such condition could only be negotiated by indorsement and delivery by the last indorsee to order. The title by negotiation must be taken to be that shown by what was on the back of the note, and the Bank of Bengal, not having endorsed it, either in full or in blank, the title by negotiation stopped with it, or (2) by assignment, for C. J. handed the note to the plaintiff to enable him to file suit on it and the plaintiff said that he simply filed the case under the instructions of C. J. The note having been discounted with the bank and the indorsement not containing express words restricting or excluding the right of further negotiation, the indorsement was not for collection, as contended. (28 M. 544. R. & Disc.). In order that a right of further negotiation may be restricted or excluded in respect of a promissory note, s. 50 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, requires that an indorsement must contain express words to that effect. BABU GORIDUT BOGLA v. EBRAHIM (SOLAIMAN) ESOOF DOOPLEY, 14 Bur. L. R. 25.

(31)—Lottery Act V of 1844—Act XXI of 1848—Act V of 1866—Pro-note—Consideration—Plaint—Written statement—Principal and agent.—In a suit under Act V of 1866, on a promissory note part of the consideration for which was legal and part illegal, held, (per Couch, C. J.), that plaintiff could not sue on the note, but that he might amend his plaint, and recover so much of the consideration as was not illegal. The agreeing not to enforce a contract which is void for illegality is an illegal consideration, and the contract is void. Held by Markby, J., that the note was good, inasmuch as the promise contained in it did not spring from, nor was it the creature of, the original illegal agreement, but was a separate agreement. An agent who has sold goods for his principal, and received the price is bound to pay it over to his principal, although the contract of sale is illegal and void. JOSEPH v. SOLANO, 9 B. L. R. 441 = 18 W. R. 424. [F., 2 C. 1 = 25 W. R. 425, 22 C. 692, 25 W. R. 425; Appr., 12 B. 422; R., 20 W. R. 6, 18 B. 144.]

(32)—Negotiable instrument—Pro-note—Subsequent agreement by payee not to sue—Maker whether entitled to set up such agreement—Bar of suit.—The maker of a pro-note is at liberty to plead that the payee is debarred by a subsequent written agreement from suing on it, until he does a certain thing. SHAIKH IMAM v. ISHAK ALI, 7 N. L. R. 39. (29 M. 212, D.)

(33)—Act IX of 1850, s. 24, Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Promissory note payable by instalments—Cause of action.—Where a promissory note is payable by monthly instalments, it is incumbent on the plaintiff, when two or more instalments are due at the time he brings his suit, to sue for them in one action, and he is not at liberty to sue separately for each instalment or for some of them. The plaintiff in this action sued to recover the fifth instalment due on a promissory note; but it appeared that he had, on the 4th October, 1872, sued and recovered a judgment for the fourth instalment only, when he could have sued for the entire amount of the bond which had then fallen due. Held that the judgment which plaintiff recovered on the 4th of October was a bar to the present suit. MACKINTOSH v. GILL, 12 B. L. R. 37 = 20 W. R. 358. [F., 8 Bom. L. R. 547, 12 C. 339.]

(34)—Note payable to bearer on demand—Right to recover—S. 24, Paper Currency Act (1905).—Where the amount mentioned in the note is by its terms payable to the bearer of it on demand, the note infringes the provisions of s. 24 of the Indian Paper Currency Act of 1905, and it is a contract forbidden by law and consequently the payee could not recover on it. MAUNG PO THAV. L. D. ATTAIDES, 5 L. B. R. 191 = 8 Ind. Cas. 962.

(35)—Negotiable security, when a conditional payment of a debt—When debtor can be sued as though he gave no security.—The title of a creditor to a bill given on account of a pre-existing debt, and payable at a future day, does not rest on the implied agreement to suspend his remedies. A negotiable security given for such a purpose is a conditional payment of the debt, the condition being that the debt revives if the security is not realized. The doctrine is as applicable to one species of negotiable security as to another; to a cheque payable on demand, as to a running bill or a promissory note payable to order to bearer, whether it be the note of a country bank, which circulates as money, or the note of the debtor or of any other person. The security is offered to the creditor and taken by him as money's worth. Until it is proved unproductive, the creditor ought not to be allowed to treat it as a nullity and to sue the debtor as if he had given no security. EBRAHIM BYMEAH ISMAILJEE v. CHAS COWIE & CO., 5 L. B. R. 199 = 8 Ind. Cas. 967.

(36)—Negotiable instrument—Promissory note executed in the name of benamidar—Suit by real owner against executant and benamidar—Decree against the former—Appeal by the former—Neither appeal nor memo of objection by real owner—Suit dismissed—Legality.—A executed a promissory note in favour of B who was benamidar for C. C as real owner brought a suit on the pro-note against A and against B who admittedly had received the money. The Munsiff passed a decree against A alone. On appeal by A, the District Judge dismissed the suit. C preferred neither an appeal nor a memo of objections, nor did he ask the Judge to pass a decree against B. Held, on second appeal the suit was rightly dismissed as against both A and B. No case has been cited in which it has been held that the Judge was wrong in not passing a decree not asked for at all in any manner. ASUNDI BASANVA v. BAREDDI GOVINDAPPA, 7 M.L.T. 178=20 M.L.J. 369=5 Ind. Cas. 927.

(37)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVII—Suit on pro-note—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Unconditional agreement—Evidence to vary terms—Object of pro-note.—In a suit on a promissory-note under Civ. Pro. Code, O. XXXVII, the defendant admitted execution but contended that the note formed part of an account and mutual dealings between him and the plaintiff and other partners: Held, that, the contract embodied in the note being an unconditional agreement by the defendant personally and individually to pay to the plaintiff personally and individually, and the genuineness of the note being admitted, it was not open to him to contradict or vary its terms by showing that the contract sued on was a conditional agreement: Held, further, that, in summary suits governed by O. XXXVII, Civ. Pro. Code, it was impossible for the Court to go into the partnership account, when all the partners are not impleaded and the accounts have no relevancy to the issues in the case. The object of a pro-note is to show that the particular transaction represented by the note is a separate transaction, and it is intended that the remedies in respect of that transaction, should be separately pursued. KISHOMAL KIRPOMAL v. VISHINDAS SUKRAMDAS, 9 Ind. Cas. 299. (30 C. 627, F.)

(38)—Suit for money lent independent of pro-note—Liability of other partners on a pronote signed by one of the partners.—Where money is advanced in consideration of a promissory note, a suit for money lent, independently of the note, is not maintainable, if there is no evidence of any intention to create a liability otherwise than under the note. Where a partner of a firm executed a promissory note in consideration of an advance made on account of the joint trade, the other partner who had not signed the note was held not liable, as the promissory note did not purport to have been signed by the partner as partner or on behalf of the firm. SOMASUNDARAM v. KRISHNAMURTHI, 17 M.L.J. 126. (7 C. 256 and 10 M. 94, F.; see also 15 M.L.J. 84=29 M. 111 and 28 A. 298.) [F., 9 M.L.T. 120=8 Ind. Cas. 851.]

(39)—Execution of promissory note not proved—Decree for the sum lent when loan admitted—Onus of payment when defendant admits execution—Cause of action—Suit for money lent.—A certain sum of money was due to the plaintiff's father from one T, under a mortgage and some decrees for arrears of rent. The defendants settled the amount, on behalf of T with the plaintiff's father, by paying him something in cash and executing a promissory note for Rs. 500, in his favour. The plaintiff sued the defendants for the recovery of money due on the promissory note. The defendants admitted the execution of a promissory note for Rs. 500 on the same date and in terms identical with the promissory notes set up by the plaintiff but pleaded that the debt had been discharged and the promissory note had been returned to them duly endorsed with a receipt written by plaintiff's father. They, however, denied the genuineness of the promissory note filed with the plaint. The lower Courts found that the endorsement on the back of the promissory note set up by the defendants and the fact of the payment were not proved. Held, that the promissory note was the sole cause of action in the suit and the plaintiff had not sued and could not sue on the ground of defendants' liability independently of the promissory note set up by the plaintiff and, having failed to prove the payment, the onus of which lay on them, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. SYED HUSAIN v. BABU DURGA CHARAN, 9 O.C. 315. (23 C. 851, 6 O.C. 16, 5 C.W.N. 56, 7 C. 256, 26 A. 178, R.)

(40)—Construction of word "than" in—Loan and execution of pro-note contemporaneous—Pro-note unstamped—Suit on original consideration—Maintainability.—In this case, the promise to pay was to one L, described in the 3rd person by the word “தான்” (than). Held that the word was used in the sense of ‘you.’ Where the loan and the execution of the pro-note are contemporaneous and constitute one transaction a suit based on the original consideration would not be maintainable. CHINNAPPA PILLAI v. MUTHURAMAN CHETTIAR, 9 M.L.T. 281. (10 M. 94, F.)

(41)—Promissory note—Material alteration—Signed by some of the apparent makers at different places and times.—A promissory note ran as follows: “We the undersigned jointly and severally promise to pay, etc.” Held that any body, who signed beneath the signatures of the original makers, would, on the face of the note, appear to be also a maker, and such signature would be a material alteration which would render the note void if made without the consent of the parties to the note at the time the alteration was made, unless it was made in order to carry out the common intention of the parties, and that it would make no difference if one of the makers signed it at another time and place. MA SEIN v. U. V. C. T. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTY, 9 Ind. Cas. 463. (1 L.B.R. 255, R.)

(42)—Signing of—Execution—Proof of.—If for any reason a promissory note is excluded, the person suing on the note is entitled to succeed on proof of the original consideration, unless it appeared that the case is of the exceptional kind where the promissory note is itself the original cause of action (U.B.R. 1892—1896, Vol. II, 303, 462, R.). A man may sign a promissory note by getting some one else to write his name for him. NGA MYAT THIN v.

(43)—Promissory note—Decree for money lent on promissory note when its execution not proved—Suit for money lent on promissory note.—If a plaintiff alleges in his plaint that he lent money to the defendant, for which the defendant executed a promissory note, a decree may be passed for the amount which is proved to have been lent, even if the execution of the promissory note is not proved. Such a suit is not based on the execution of a promissory note, but primarily on the loan of which the promissory note is alleged to be evidence. BACHU LAL v. KANDHAI LAL, 6 O.C. 16. (51)—Oral contract of guarantee—Contradictory pleadings.—Plaintiff, the holder of a pro-note, sought to make the defendant, who had not signed it, liable on one of two grounds—one ground being that, at the time when the ostensible maker gave the note, the defendant entered into an oral agreement that he would pay, if the maker failed to pay the amount due under the note; the other being that the maker signed it as the agent of the defendant. Held that the defendant could not be both principal and surety, and that the maxim "allegans contraria non est audiendus" applies to such a case. SUBRAMANI CHETTY v. note was executed in favour of his mother on account of his estate, held that, without any endorsement in plaintiff's favour by his mother, the payee under the note, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree, he being the real owner of the money due under the note. GURUMURTI v SIVAYYA, 21 M. 391. (3)—Promissory note invalidly endorsed, suit maintainable as for original debt.—Plaintiffs became assignees of certain promissory notes in the course of their purchase of the assets of a bank in liquidation. On a suit on one of the notes which had not been endorsed over until the bank had been wound up and had ceased to exist, the endorsement having been invalid, plaintiffs were held entitled to sue, as for the original debt in respect of which the note had been given, but not under the promissory note as such. *RAMACHANDRA ROW v. (9)—Suit on promissory note—Overdue note—Equities between payee, and maker binding on indorsee—Demand of payment—Notice.—In a suit by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note payable on demand, it was contended in defence that there were dealings in skins between the payee and the defendant, and an agreement was made between them that the defendant should supply the payee with skins from time to time and that the latter should pay the defendant the sum of Rs. 4,500 to be held by him in deposit as security for re-payment to himself of such monies as might be due to him on account for value of such skins, that the payee did pay him in pursuance of the said arrangement, the said sum of Rs. 4,500 to be held by him in deposit as security as aforesaid, and as an acknowledgment of the receipt of such deposit, the defendant made the promissory note sued on in favour of the payee. The defendant also stated that, after the making of the note, the defendant and the payee had large dealings and that the state of the accounts showed a balance in favour of the defendant; and it was further stated in defence that the plaintiff had notice of these facts. It appeared that the endorsement was made to the plaintiff two years and eleven months after date. Held that, though notice to the plaintiff was not proved, the note when endorsed was an overdue note, and that the plaintiff took it subject to the then state of accounts between the payee and the defendant. Per Innes, J.—The indorsee of an overdue note takes it subject to all the equities with which it may be incumbered, but not to claims arising out of collateral matters, as a set off. The rule in England has been deduced that before a note on demand can be treated as overdue in the hands of an endorsee, there must be some evidence of a demand. But evidence of a partial discharge is stronger evidence of a note being overdue than demand of payment can be. Per Kernan, J.—The agreement in this case was an equity attaching to the note itself, as between the original parties, and not a collateral matter such as a set-off, and any indorsee of this note, taking it when overdue, took it subject to the equities even though he gave full value for it. A demand of payment of a note payable on demand and non-payment make such note thereafter overdue. It has not been held in any case that notice of such demand must have been communicated to the indorsee before or at the time of endorsement in order to place him in the position of taking or holding it overdue. COMMUNDUN MOHIDEEN SAIB v. OREE MEERAH SAIB, 7 M. H. C. 271. [F., 5 M. 108; R., 6 M.L.T. 237 = 33 M. 34.]

(10)—Promissory note overdue in the hands of endorsee—Re-indorsement of discharged note—Concurrence of right to receive and the duty to pay note.—Where payment has been demanded and refused, a promissory note payable on demand may be considered to be overdue in the hands of an endorsee. [R., 19 M.L.J. 509] The re-indorsement of a discharged note does not revive the liability of the maker. (7 M.H.C. 275, F.) [R., 19 M.L.J. 509.] Where the endorsee of a note becomes one of a firm which has to discharge the liability under the note, this fact does not operate as a discharge and invalidate a re-indorsement for value of the note. VAN INGEN v. DHUN LALL, 5 M. 108. [R., 19 M.L.J. 509.]

(11)—Negotiable Instrument—Bill of exchange and promissory note—Receipt on—Effect—Money debt—Shares pledged—Power of attorney—Substitution of another promissory note—Original loan, if affected—Lender's lien and power of sale—His rights.—A receipt on the back of a negotiable instrument, such as a bill of exchange or a promissory note, prima facie imports that the bill or note has been paid, but the receipt is capable of being explained; and if it appears that the bill or note has not been paid, and that another bill or note was substituted for it, the Court would not be justified in concluding that the party who gave up the note in that way meant that the debt secured by the note was to be considered to have been paid. Held that the right of lien and power of sale by virtue of a power-of-attorney over certain shares pledged as security for the re-payment of a loan which was originally secured by a first promissory note was not lost by the creditor taking subsequently from the debtor a second promissory note in lieu of the first, which was receipted and returned, because the second promissory note must be considered to have been given as security for the same loan, the original debt continuing to subsist and no fresh debt being created. Held, further, that the creditor was entitled to exercise his power of selling the securities, and that the debtor was not justified in trying to prevent the former exercising such power by revoking the power-of-attorney. ALEXANDER STEWART v. THE DELHI AND LONDON BANK, LIMITED, 17 W.R. 201.

—III.—CONSIDERATION.

(1)—Pro-note—Wagering contract—Act XXI of 1848—Bom. Act III of 1865.—A promissory note, executed for a sum of money which has become due in consequence of a wagering contract, although entered into before Bom. Act III of 1865 came into force, would not be binding in the hands of the original payee, as such contract was, under the provisions of Act XXI of 1848, null and void; nor could it be enforced even by an indorsee of the note against the maker of it, if the indorsee did not give value for it, the burden of proving which would lie on the maker. TRIKAM DAMODHAR v. LALA AMIRCHAND, 8 B.H.C. A.C. 131. [R., 22 B. 899, 79 P.R. 1908 = 130 P.W.R. 1908.]

(2)—Consideration—Unconscionable bargain.—A person, though addicted to extravagance and debauchery, cannot claim relief on the ground of equity, if he is not a man of weak mental capacity, or not in any bodily or mental distress, or if he is not in such a necessity as to have made him incapable of weighing the consequences of the transaction into which he was entering. Mere inadequacy of consideration will not form a ground of relief, unless the inadequacy was such as may lead to an inference that the party either did not understand what he was about, or was the victim of some imposition. ALI SHAH v. MIRAN BAKHSH, 60 P.R. 1898.

(3)—Promissory note—Consideration—Creditor's forbearance to sue a sufficient consideration.—Where a pro-note was executed by five persons in consideration of old debts incurred by only three of them, and where, on a suit brought on the pro-note, the other two signatories pleaded denial of receipt of any consideration held, that, as the two contesting defendants were closely related to the actual debtors, the creditor's forbearance to sue the latter was a sufficient consideration for their promise. MG KYA YEIT v. —IV.—FORM.

(1)—Promissory note—Document in uncertain terms.—A document whereby one person promises to pay another a fixed sum every month, is so vague and indefinite in its terms that it cannot be regarded as falling within the category of promissory note. CARTER v. THE AGRA SAVINGS BANK, 5 A. 562.

(2)—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 4, undertaking to pay, essential to constitute promissory note under.—Where an unstamped document executed by a debtor contained the words "This sum I am bound to pay you—adding to this sum interest at—I am liable to pay," these words were held not to amount to an "undertaking to pay" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The document was therefore not a promissory note so as to be inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp, but only an acknowledgment of liability to pay. TIRUPATHI GOUNDAN v. RAMA REDDI, 21 M. 49 = 7 M. L.J. 291.

(3)—Letter requesting loan, whether amounts to promissory note—Attaching of obligation, compliance by addressee, necessary for.—A letter which was written to the plaintiff by the defendant's husband merely asked for a loan of money from the former, so that it contained no promise made; nor could any obligation have arisen under it unless the addressee had consented to comply with the request and to lend the money. The letter was held not to constitute a promissory note, on the ground that acceptance of the offer made in the letter was necessary before any obligation could be said to arise. NARAYANASAMI MUDALIAR v. LOKAMBAL AMMAL, 23 M. 156, foot-note. [F., 27 M. 1 = 14 M.L.J. 65; R., 23 M. 155.]

MANICK CHUND v. JAMOONA DOSS, 8 C. 645.

(5)—Contract Act (IX of 1872)—Letter requesting to send money as loan, whether a contract or mere proposal—Promissory note.—In this suit to recover money lent to defendant by the plaintiff's deceased husband, a letter written by the former to the latter was produced by the plaintiff. The letter contained the following, among other recitals:—"Pay the sum to the bearer of this letter on my account and obtain a receipt from him. This sum I shall repay with interest at 12 per cent. per annum and get back this letter. I request that you will not neglect to pay the amount on the strength of this letter." It was held to be not a mere proposal, but a promissory note, and inadmissible in evidence as being unstamped. CHANNAMMA v. AYYANNA, 16 M. 283. [Overruled, 27 M. 1 = 14 M.L.J. 65; Diss., 23 M. 156 = 7 M.L.J. 220; F., 4 Bom. L.R. 912.]

(6)—Partnership—Pro-note executed and signed by only one partner—Suit on pro-note—Liability of the partners of executant.—In the case of a negotiable instrument, the signature of one person in his own name cannot justify, in a suit based on the instrument, a decree against another person, although the debt might have been borrowed for the benefit of both, or although both the persons might have been trading in partnership and the debt was borrowed for the purpose of the partnership. CUTTI AMMU v. RAGGI SETH, 8 Ind. Cas. 851. (17 M.L.J. 126, 30 M. 88, 1 M.L.T. 377, 16 M.L.J. 508, F.B., F.)

——V.—MISCELLANEOUS.

(1)—Act IX of 1850, s. 34, Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Promissory note payable by instalments—Cause of action.—Where a promissory note is payable by monthly instalments, it is incumbent on the plaintiff, when two or more instalments are due at the time he brings his suit, to sue for them in one action, and he is not at liberty to sue separately for each instalment or for some of them. The plaintiff in this action sued to recover the fifth instalment due on a promissory note; but it appeared that he had, on the 4th October, 1872, sued and recovered a judgment for the fourth instalment only, when he could have sued for the entire amount of the bond which had then fallen due. Held that the judgment which plaintiff recovered on the 4th October was a bar to the present suit. *MAC-KINTOSH v. (2)—Possession by debtor — Presumption.—Where the instrument of debt and security for its payment are found in the hands of the debtor, prima facie the presumption is that the debt has been discharged, but such presumption may be rebutted. *BHOG HONG KONG v. (3)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 257-A, 258—Promissory note in adjustment of decree without sanction of Court—Renewal of note—Note whether enforceable.—In this case, a decree, for Rs. 941 was settled by paying in cash Rs. 600 and by passing a promissory note for Rs. 341 carrying interest at 3 per cent. per mensem. The decree was satisfied and handed over to the defendants and the plaintiff also endorsed the defendants' summons to that effect. The compromise was not sanctioned by the Court. The note for Rs. 341 having been renewed on a subsequent date and a suit having been brought on the new note, it was held that the note fell within the purview of s. 257-A of the Civ. Pro. Code, and void and unenforceable. HEERA NEMA v. PESTONJI, 22 B. 693, F.B. [Diss., 25 A. 317 = 22 A.W.N. 45, F.B. F; 27 B. 96, 88. P.R. 1904; R., 3 O.C. 168, 9 Bom. L.R. 950, 29 P. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

(1)—Persentment of Hundis—Notice of dishonour—Indemnity bond.—An indemnity bond, given by way of collateral security for some hundis, was sued upon, on the allegation that the hundis were dishonoured. Notice of dishonour was not given in a reasonable time. But, when the money was demanded, the maker of the hundies did not complain of want of notice of dishonour or of non-presentment of the hundis. There was no evidence that any money was due to the maker from the drawee, or that he sustained any damage by reason of the want of notice of dishonour. Held, under the circumstances, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. SHANMUGAM v. CHINNASAMI, 14 M. 470=1 M.L.J. 674.

(2)—Assignment of pro-note—Assignment back to assignor—Necessity for endorsement—Assignment of note by a firm—Signature of one member of firm—Whether such signature is on behalf of firm—Admission of oral evidence.—The defendant's firm indorsed several negotiable promissory notes in their favour to one M, who again indorsed them to a Bank. Certain other pro-notes made by the said firm in favour of M, as payable to him or to his order, were also indorsed by M to the same Bank. All the notes happened to be dishonoured and M paid the Bank and obtained a return of the notes but without any re-indorsement by the Bank. Subsequently, on receipt of value paid by the present plaintiff, M assigned his right to the notes over to the plaintiff by means of an assignment deed and this suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of the amount due in respect of some of the notes, so assigned to him, was dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that, the notes not having been indorsed over to the plaintiff, he could not sue on them. Held, reversing the decrees of the lower appellate Court, promissory notes, whether negotiable instruments or not, are nevertheless choses in action and choses in action have been held assignable, in this country, and the rules of general law, that applied to them prior to the Negotiable Instruments Act with respect to their transfer, as choses in action or chattels, do not cease to be applicable to them by the passing of that Act, unless its provisions expressly or impliedly affect those rules. The absence in the Indian Act of certain provisions, saving the rules of common law, similar to those found in the English Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, does not warrant the view that the former Act abolished rules, previously established, even though they are in no way inconsistent with any of its provisions. There is, therefore, no reason to prohibit assignment of negotiable instruments otherwise than by indorsement, as illegal. (11 M. 290, 17 M. 461 declared overruled by 24 M. 654.) Held, also, overruling a contention raised on behalf of the defendants that a re indorsement by the Bank back to M, the plaintiff's assignor, was in point of law necessary to re-vest the title in the notes in him, that, when a prior indorser takes up a note on payment to his immediate indorsee and discharges his liability under the contract arising by the indorsement, there is no provision, either in the Negotiable Instruments Act or elsewhere, prescribing the mode in which such taking up of the note is to be established and the possession of the note by the person so taking up is prima facie evidence that he is the true and lawful owner thereof and that he has acquired the full title thereto. On a further objection taken, that the notes having been given and the indorsements made by only one member of the firm, viz., the first defendant, in his own name, the other members of the firm are not liable, it was held, that the question, whether the first defendant signed only for himself or on behalf of the firm, is one of fact to be decided with reference to the evidence in the case and the reception of parol evidence in such a matter is subject to much the same rules as govern written contracts generally. MUTHAR SAHIB MARAIKAYAR v. P. M. K. KADIR SAHIB MARAIKAYAR, 15 M. L.J. 384 = 28 M. 544. [R., 144 P.R. 1906 = 106 P.L.R. 1907, 30 M. 441 = 17 M.L.J. 414, 14 Bur. L.R. 25, 8 Ind. Cas. 881.]

(3)—Forced endorsements—Endorsee for value and bona fide—Holder in due course.—If the endorsement on a negotiable instrument is forged, a bona fide endorsee for value cannot become a holder in due course of such negotiable instrument. HUNSRAJ v. RUTTONSEE, 1 Bom. L.R. 734 = 24 B. 65.

(4)—Suit by payee on promissory note—Plea, payee not real owner—Re-payment of consideration to real owner—Oral evidence to support plea, admissibility of.—The suit was to recover the amount due on a promissory note by the payee. The defendant pleaded that the consideration was advanced not by the plaintiff but by a third party on whose account, the note was taken with the name of the plaintiff as payee, and that the amount having been duly re-paid to the party entitled to it, the present suit was fraudulent and unsustainable. Held Per Subrahmaniam Ayyar, J., that it was competent to a defendant to adduce oral evidence, in a suit on a promissory note, to show that the plaintiff in the action was not the true owner if such proof would enable the defendant to establish, consistently with other rules governing the case of negotiable instruments, a defence valid against the true owner. (6 Mad. Jurist. 305, Appr.; 28 M. 205, Doubted.) Per Davies, J., dissenting, that the defendant was precluded from pleading the jus tertii of a person who was

(6)—Ss. 1 and 94—Applicability of Act to Natives of India—Usage varying provisions of Act—Proof—Notice of dishonour.—The provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 are applicable to natives of India. Local usage relating to bills and notes in an oriental language is saved by s. 1 of the Act. The party relying upon such usage must allege and establish it by evidence. S. 94 of the Act recognizes that the person to whom notice of dishonour is given should be informed not only that the instrument has been dishonoured, and in what way, but also that he would be held liable thereon. Where a bill is dishonoured, the payee should give a notice of dishonour to the drawer thereof in the manner stated above. In the absence of such notice, the drawer would not be liable in a suit on the bill. JAMBU CHETTY v. PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR, 26 M. 526 = 13 M.L.J. 252.

It was pleaded in defence that a document, though a promissory note, was not a negotiable instrument and consequently could not be assigned by endorsement. Held, the document not containing the necessary words to render it a negotiable instrument, was not capable of being transferred by mere endorsement, and it was not, therefore, competent for the assignee

(17)—Ss. 5, 7, 33, 88—Bill of exchange—Drawee substituting a third person in his stead—Acceptance by such third person, whether binds former—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 231—Undisclosed principal, rights of.—The second defendant contracted with first defendant to purchase goods of plaintiff, first defendant acting as plaintiff's agent, though second defendant was not aware of it. The plaintiff drew four drafts on first defendant, who, without the knowledge or authority of plaintiff, substituted second defendant as drawee in his stead, and second defendant accepted the drafts. Second defendant having returned one of the drafts, got possession of the goods covered by it, and, finding the same was not of the stipulated kind, refused to return the other drafts. Decree against both defendants in both the lower Courts. Second appeal by second defendant. Held, that, under s. 7 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and, also, s. 6 of the English Bills of Exchange Act, (1882), the drawee of a bill is the person designated in the bill as such, by the drawer, and that he must be named or otherwise indicated in the bill with reasonable certainty. The drawee (if he is not a fictitious person) can either accept or decline to accept the bill, but he cannot of his own motion substitute another person in his place as drawee. Under s. 33 of the Act such third person substituted is not the drawee, and consequently the acceptance of a bill by him does not, in law, bind him. Held, also, that second defendant was not estopped from denying his liability, by reason of his having returned one of the drafts, as neither the drawer, the drawee, nor any third person were adversely affected by his conduct, second defendant having immediately repudiated his act. Held, that, under s. 231, Contract Act, plaintiff can take advantage of the contract made by first defendant, as his undisclosed principal, subject to any right which second defendant may have against the first defendant. Case remanded for a finding as to the allegations of fraud and misrepresentation by first defendant. Held, further, that, assuming there was a contract between plaintiff and the second defendant, plaintiff could sue for the whole amount which second defendant had agreed to pay, and was not bound to sell the undelivered goods, and sue only for the balance, if any, due to him upon the contract. *JAGAN NATH v. (18)—Ss. 6, 8, 17, 30, 32, 78, 85, and 92—Drawing of bill of exchange—Same person being drawer and drawee—Bill of exchange stolen—Presentation for payment with forged endorsement of name of payee—Payment by drawer—Effect—Ambiguous instrument—Election by holder—Effect—This was a suit to recover from the New Oriental Bank Corporation, Limited, at Bombay, Rs. 640 under the following circumstances:—One M purchased from the branch of the defendant Bank at Mauritius a bill of exchange drawn by the bank on their Bank at Bombay (the defendant) where it was made payable on demand to the order of the plaintiff. M transferred the same by post to the plaintiff. The bill having been stolen during transit, was presented to Bank by some third person for payment with a forged endorsement thereon of the name of the plaintiff. The defendant company paid the amount due under the bill. The plaintiff, on being informed of these facts, demanded payment of the bill again, declaring that the endorsement thereon was a forged one. The defendant company refused payment. Hence the suit. Held, (1) that the instrument in question was an "ambiguous instrument" within the meaning of the expression as used in s. 17 of Act XXVI of 1881, and that the plaintiff elected to treat it as a bill of exchange drawn by the branch firm at Mauritius on the defendant company at Bombay; and (2) that under s. 85 of the Act the defendant company, as drawers, was discharged from liability by payment to the de facto holder who presented the bill for payment. Where the holder of an instrument, "ambiguous" within the meaning of the expression as used in s. 17 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, elects to treat it as a bill of exchange, he cannot subsequently elect to treat the same as a promissory note *SULLEMAN HUSSEIN v. (20)—S. 8—Endorsee—Holder—Benamidar.—An endorsee of a promissory note, to whom the endorsement has been legally made, followed by delivery to him of the note, is the "holder" of the note within the meaning of s. 8 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and can maintain a suit on the note, though he is only a benamidar for the real owner of the note. SARAT CHANDER DUTT v. KEDAR NATH DASS, 2 C.W.N. 286. [R., 16 M.L.J. 508=1 M.L.T. 377=30 M. 88.]

(21)—S. 8—Holder in due course—Consideration—Civ. Pro. Code (1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Burden of proof.—An 'on demand' promissory note was endorsed by the payee to A who stood surety for him with one B. No suit was filed by B. Nor was any payment made as surety prior to the endorsement. Held, that A was not a holder in due course, inasmuch as there was no further consideration, and a mere renewal of an undertaking to pay a debt for which he was already liable as surety would be no consideration. In a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, the burden lies on the plaintiff decree-holder to establish his right to attach property, but he is entitled, if he can do so, to prove his case out of the defendant's mouth. K. P. NAMBIER v. SUNDRABAI, 14 Ind. Cas. 813.

(22)—S. 8—See No. 18, supra.

(23)—Ss. 8, 27, 78—Suit on a pro-note—Validity of plea that the holder is a mere benamidar not entitled to sue—Undisclosed principals cannot sue or be sued on a negotiable instrument—Law merchant before the Act—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882—Contract Act, 1872.—S. 78 which provides that "payment—must, in order to discharge the maker, be made to the holder" is imperative and precludes the maker, when sued on the instrument, from pleading discharge by payment to any one but "the holder." The use of the words "entitled in his own name" in the definition of "holder" in s. 8, prevents any one from claiming the rights of a "holder" under the Act, on the ground that the ostensible holder was a mere benamidar. Under s. 27 also, a principal can only be made liable, through his agent, on a negotiable instrument, when the agent acts in the principal's name, i.e., when he signs as agent. An undisclosed principal cannot be sued on a negotiable instrument; because, in the case of such instruments, passing from hand to hand, usage and policy alike require that the real contract should appear on the face of the instrument. The provisions of the Contract Act as to rights and liabilities of undisclosed principals are not intended to alter well-established rules as to negotiable instruments, which continued to be governed by the Law merchant reproduced in the Negotiable Instruments Act. Ss. 2, 7 (1), 23, 59, Bills of Exchange Act are also in accordance with the above view. SUBBA NARAYANA VATHIYAR v. K. RAMASAWMI IYER, 1 M.L.T. 377 F.B. =16 M.L.J. 508=30 M. 88. (25)—Ss. 8 and 46—Indorsement for purposes of collection—Return of instrument without collection—Right of indorser to strike out indorsement and to sue—Possession of indorsee.—An indorser, who indorses a bill to another for purposes of collection, is entitled on the return of the bill without collection, to strike out his indorsement and to make himself the last indorsee, the holder within the meaning of s. 8 of the Act. He is, thereupon, entitled to receive payment and to sue. (28 M. 544; R.) An indorsement for collection does not, as between the indorser and the indorsee, pass the property in the bill to the indorsee, though it puts him in a position to make title for a subsequent holder in due course. An indorsee for collection, after returning the bill to his indorser, does not come within the definition of a holder in s. 8 so as to be entitled to sue. The holder as defined in s. 8 means any person entitled in his own name thereof and to receive or recover the amount due therefor from the parties thereto; that is to say, the person so entitled on the face of the bill. (30 M. 93; R.) The Act contains no provisions as to striking out indorsement, but there can be no doubt that, when a drawer or indorser takes up a bill by paying the holder, he is entitled to maintain a suit on the bill against the parties antecedent to himself and to strike out subsequent parties who, by reason of his payment, have ceased to have any rights or liabilities under the bill. By such a payment he is considered to acquire a fresh cause of action, being subrogated to the holder as regards all parties antecedent to himself. SUBRAHMANYAN CHETTY v. (27)—Ss. 8 and 54—Endorsement.—A promissory note may be indorsed in blank and delivered to any person, the effect of such indorsement and delivery being to convert the pro-note into one payable to bearer. Indorsement and delivery in such a way to a person, in the capacity of agent and attorney of his principal, the principal would be the person entitled to the possession of the promissory note and to recover the amount due thereon from the maker. NANEK CHUND v. (28)—S. 9—Forged endorsement—Endorsers a bogus firm—Innocent transferee obtains no title.—Plaintiffs were the payees of two hundis. They employed a broker to sell them. The broker represented to the plaintiff that the firm of Harsahai Mal Kedar Nath wanted to purchase the hundis, whereupon the plaintiffs endorsed the hundis, in favour of Harsahai Mal Kedar Nath. The broker then forged an endorsement from Harsahai Mal Kedar Nath in favour of a firm which had no existence, and then another endorsement, purporting to be from this fictitious firm in favour of another, which too had no existence. The defendants, purchased in good faith and for value these hundis—the broker again forging an endorsement from the second fictitious firm in favour of the defendants. Upon the plaintiff's, the payee's, suing for money, held, that they were entitled to succeed, even if the defendants were transferees in good faith and for consideration. S. 9 of the Act contemplates a person who is the payee or the indorsee of an instrument. There is a distinction between the case of a bona fide purchaser for value, who acquires a defective title to a negotiable instrument and a purchaser, who acquires no title whatever. JAI NARAIN v. Where there is nothing to show that payment of a pro-note (payable on demand) was demanded or that it was overdue before it is endorsed over, it must be taken that the endorsement is made before the pro-note became payable. SANKARA SUBBAN PATTAR v. The latter part of s. 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has no application to such cases at all. (See also s. 46 of the same Act.) The transfer of a mortgage to be effectual requires registration. (29 M. 336, R.) It is the duty of the transferor to execute a 'proper conveyance.' (Vide s. 55 (d), Transfer of Property Act. MUTHIA CHETTI v. KASIVARI SOMASUNDARA, 10 M.L.T. 79.)

Burden of proof as to who was holder in due course.—Where a negotiable instrument bears a forged endorsement, no person can claim a title to the instrument, through such endorsement, because a forged endorsement is a nullity and it must be taken as if no such endorsement was on the instrument. (24 B. 65; 32 C. 799; R.) When once the plaintiff establishes that a third party came into possession of a negotiable instrument by means of an offence or fraud, the onus of proving that the third party became 'holder in due course' lies on the defendant. BANKU BEHARI SIKDAR v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, 36 C. 235 = 1 Ind. Cas. 929.

(32)—Ss. 9, 56, 57, 78—Holder in due course of a promissory note.—To be a holder in due course, it is necessary that one must have, for consideration, become the payee, or indorsee, before the amount mentioned in the note becomes payable. Where the payee, by an endorsement in correct form, constitutes the plaintiff, in his own name, the holder of the pro-note, the plaintiff must be held to be entitled to the possession of it in his own name, and to recover the amount due thereon, and it is immaterial whether in fact the plaintiff is acting in his own interest or merely as the agent of the payee. D. (34)—S. 10—Payment in due course.—Where the drawees of shahjog hundi made payment, although the drawer had notified them by a telegram to stop payment until further instructions, payment by them was not a payment in due course within the meaning of s. 10, Negotiable Instruments Act. LALLA MAL v. (36)—Ss. 13, 48—Pro-note payable on demand to particular person—Transfer otherwise than by endorsement—Validity.—A pro-note was executed payable on demand to a particular person. The payee transferred the note to the plaintiff by means of a registered transfer-deed. Held that, as the pro-note was not payable to a specified person or to bearer or to the order of a specified person, it was not a negotiable instrument. There was, therefore, no objection to its transfer otherwise than by endorsement, and plaintiff was entitled to sue on the note. UDAYAR PILLAI v. MUTHIA PILLAI, 7 M.L.J. 231.

plaintiff endorsed some Government Promissory Notes of the value of Rs. 20,000 to the Secretary of State for India as security for one B, a Government treasurer. In August 1903, he presented an application to the Deputy Commissioner, in which he stated that he had sold the notes to S, that he would endorse the notes to S when required to do so, that S had purchased the notes subject to the Secretary of State's lien, etc. On the following day, S presented a corresponding petition to the Deputy Commissioner, in which he stated that he had purchased the notes and had a lien on them subject to the Secretary of State's claim. About the same time, the plaintiff, by a letter, requested S to discount certain hundis in the name of certain firms and S discounted some of them to the extent of Rs. 9,000. Subsequently, the plaintiff brought a suit for declaration that the notes were not liable to attachment in execution of the decree of the first defendant, Allahabad Bank, against the defendant S. Held, that the interest of the plaintiff in the notes was transferred to S, that the transfer was purely of a chose in action, to which the Negotiable Instruments Act did not apply, and that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable. JAJAN NATH v. THE ALLAHABAD BANK, LD., LUCKNOW, 9 O.C. 174 (B). (11 M. 290, 17 M. 461, 28 M. 544, 24 M. 657, Note, R.)

(42)—Ss. 26, 27—Promissory note made by one co-parcener of a joint-family, other undivided members whether liable under Hindu Law.—The rule of English law, according to which none but those whose signatures appear on a bill of exchange or a negotiable promissory note can be sued thereupon, has no application in India so as to preclude the payee of a promissory note when suing the maker from enforcing his rights against third persons who, according to Hindu Law, may, in respect of family property in their hands, be responsible for debts incurred by him. S. 27 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has no application to a case where a person who is not a party to a promissory note or other similar instrument is sought to be made liable in respect of the money due thereunder, in consequence of an obligation cast on him by his personal law in respect of such debt (Per Davies J. dissenting,—Where the name of one person alone appears in a promissory note, and he does not purport to make it on behalf of any one but himself, none but such person named therein as the maker of the note can be held liable to discharge it). KRISHNA AYYAR v. (44)—S. 28—Word, "Daskat," meaning of—Son signing a hundi on behalf of the father—Son working with the father in a common business.—The term, "Daskat," means that a person signing a document signed as managing clerk on behalf of the principal, and no personal liability can attach to him from that. Where a son signs a hundi on behalf of his father and it is also found that the father and the son have been carrying on the business in apparent unity, held that the son is equally liable with the father for the debt. SILLEMAN DATOO v. ISO MUSO, 2 S.L.R. 11.

(45)—S. 28—Pro-note—Executant—Description as agent in the body of document—Signature unqualified—Personal liability—Suit on pro-note—Prayer in plaint for decree against principal or against agent in alternative—Subsequent prayer for decree against latter personally as maker of the note—Conversion of suit—Amendment—Whether allowable.—A as the agent of B and C signed a pro-note in favour of G, for the price of cloths supplied by G, to the mother of B and C for the use and benefit of the latter. In the beginning of the pro-note A described himself as the agent of B and C but did neither sign the pronote as such agent nor did he use language in the recitals in the body of the pro-note expressly stating that he did not intend to make himself personally liable. G brought a suit against A, B and C, and prayed inter alia that A may be made liable in the alternative. The plaint as originally framed did not seek to make A liable as the maker of the pro-note, but subsequently an issue was framed regarding the liability of A as the executant of the pro-note. Held, Per Sadasiva Iyer, J. (Sundara Iyer, J. contra); that a man putting 'his unqualified signature' to a negotiable instrument cannot be allowed to escape personal liability, unless he clearly and unmistakeably indicates on the instrument taken as a whole that he did not undertake any personal liability (20 M.L.J. 144, (1911) 1 M.W.N. 143, (1909) 1 K.B. 73, 4 Ex. 102, 5 M. and S. 345, 33 M. 88; R.) and (ii) that the additional issue regarding A's personal liability was properly allowed to be raised in the Court below. Held, Per Sundara Iyer, J.—That A was not personally liable, because the pro-note itself indicated that A signed it as agent and that he did not intend to incur personal liability. According to English law, words should be added to the signature indicating that the executant signs for or on behalf of a principal. But the Indian Act does not require this, but only an indication, not in the signature, but anywhere in the body of the document, that the executant signs as agent. The words of s. 28, Negotiable Instruments Act, should be given their plain and ordinary meaning. It is not justifiable to require in India that there should be words added to the signature to show that it is that, of the principal and not of the man that puts it. (20 M.L.J. 144, (1911), M.W.N. 143 (1908), K.B. 73, 4 Ex. 102, 5 M. and S. 345, 30 M. 88, R.) The lower Courts were wrong in (47)—S. 30—Applicability to hundis—Hundi drawn by manager of joint Hindu family—Notice of dishonour to drawer necessary.—The Negotiable Instruments Act, in the absence of local usage to the contrary, applies to hundis. (6 A. 78; R.) [R., 1 S.L.R. 57]. A member of a Hindu family whom it is sought to make liable by a suit on a hundi drawn by the manager of the family, is entitled to urge that no notice of dishonour had been given to the manager (drawer) so as to make the latter liable under s. 30 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. KRISHNASHET v. (49)—Ss. 30, 39 and 86—Hundi payable at sight—Liability of drawer where holder agrees to an agreement with acceptor for payment—Notice of dishonour, omission to give—Discharge of drawer.—Where the acceptor of a hundi payable at sight at first accepted the hundi unconditionally, but, subsequently, said he would pay in three days' time, and the holder of the hundi agreed to this arrangement of which, however, he did not give any notice to the drawer, and where, the acceptor having failed to pay the amount of the hundi within the three days, the holder did not give notice of dishonour till after 10 days: Held, that the conduct of the holder discharged the drawer from his liability under the hundi according to the terms of ss. 30, 39 and 86 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. ASKARAN BAID v. PIYAR BUX, 12 C.W.N. 644 = 8 C.L.J. 163.

(50)—Ss. 30, 93, 98—Notice of dishonour when can be dispensed with.—Onus of proof that party suffered damage, on whom lies.—It is plain from the terms of ss. 30 and 93 of the Act, that notice of dishonour should be given to the drawer of a hundi to give the plaintiff a cause of action, and notice can only be dispensed with under the circumstances mentioned in s. 98. It is for the plaintiff (the payee), to show that notice was given or that the defendant, drawer, could not suffer damage for want of it. It is not for the defendant, the drawer, to show that he has suffered damage for want of notice. AMIRUDDI BEHARI v. BAHADOOR KHAN, 30 C. 977 = 7 C.W.N. 878. (6 A. 78, 20 B. 498, F.)

(51)—Ss. 30, 93, 98 (c)—Notice of dishonour to the drawer—Damage—Burden of proof—Issue—Material irregularity—s. 70 (a) of Act XVIII of 1884 as amended.—Held that:—Absence of formal notice required to be given under s. 33 and 93 of Act XXVI of 1881, to the drawer of a dishonoured hundi, is not a fatal bar to its holder's suit brought against the drawer, as the obligation created by these two sections is qualified by s. 98 (c), which lays down that no notice of dishonour is necessary when the party charged could not suffer damage for want of notice. An omission to regard the qualification of an obligation created by law and to frame a definite issue in connection therewith amounts to material irregularity. So in a suit by the holder of a dishonoured hundi, where no notice of dishonour has been given to the drawer, the burden of proving that the party charged could not suffer damage for want of notice is on the plaintiff, and there should be a definite issue on the point. JANDA RAM v. TODA MAL, 96 P. W. R. 1911.

(52)—Ss. 30, 93, 98 (c)—Notice of dishonour to the drawer—Damage—Burden of proof—Issue.—In a suit by the holder of a dishonoured hundi, where no notice of dishonour has been given to the drawer, the burden of proving that the party charged could not suffer damage for want of notice is on the plaintiff, and there should be a definite issue on the point. JANDA RAM v. TODA MAL, 173 P.L.R. 1911.

(53)—S. 31—Drawee's liability to the holder—Construction of hundi.—The remedy of a holder of a cheque that has been dishonoured is against the drawer, and not against the drawee who refuses payment, as there is no privity of contract between them. MAUNG PE v. CHELLAPPA CHETTY, U.B.R. 1902—03, Vol. II, Civil Negotiable Instruments, 5.

(55)—Ss. 32, 37—Bill of exchange—Holder and acceptor—Accommodation acceptor—Contract to treat the acceptor as surety—Principal and surety.—The general rule is that the acceptor of a bill of exchange is the principal debtor and the drawer the surety. A contract to the contrary may be entered into between these two parties inverting their positions, and such a contract may be proved in proceedings between them. No such contract can be set up as between the acceptor and the holder. Mere notice of the defendant's position as an accommodation acceptor is not sufficient to preclude the holder from treating him as a principal debtor. He cannot be so precluded, in the absence of evidence proving that there is a contract under which he is bound to treat the acceptor as a surety. BELLEW v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LIMITED, LUCKNOW, 13 O.C. 206 = 7 Ind. Cas. 727.

(56)—Ss. 32 and 45—Bill of exchange—Failure of acceptor to pay—Suit for compensation—Maintainability by drawer—Plea involving collateral enquiry.—Plaintiffs drew a bill upon a bank, which was accepted by the defendants, for value of certain articles supplied to the defendants, and at the same time, plaintiffs guaranteed to replace defective articles, if any, supplied by them. On the bill being presented for payment, the defendants dishonoured it on the ground that the articles were defective. Plaintiffs sued the defendants upon the bill, without the bill having been assigned to them by the Bank. Held, that the plaintiffs being drawers of the bill were parties to the same, and having suffered loss by the failure of the defendants as acceptors to pay the amount of the bill at maturity, were entitled to be compensated by the defendants under s. 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. Held, also, the amount due in money in respect of the defective articles supplied, cannot be ascertained without collateral enquiry and the defendants cannot therefore raise this plea of failure of consideration, in these proceedings, under s. 45. of the Act. MESSRS. But it is open to the respondent to support the decision on any grounds, including those decided by the lower Courts in favour of the petitioner. A Commission Agent, through whom a hundi is bought, is liable to the purchaser for the amount of the hundi, when he is payee and indorsee of the same. If he sets up a plea that entry of his name in the hundi is benami and he is not liable by mercantile usage, he must prove that the entry is benami and that his liability is excluded by mercantile usage. XXXVII—Leave to defend—Whether allowable.*—In a suit under O. XXXVII, Civ. Pro. Code, (1908), on a hundi, the defendant applied for leave to defend, on the grounds that the suit hundi and some other hundis were executed in consideration of the defendant getting a lease, subject to certain conditions to be fulfilled by the plaintiff, of a garden for two years, and that it was agreed that plaintiff was to be paid only if he performed his part of the contract, and that, owing to plaintiff's default in the performance of his part of the contract, there was a failure of consideration and that consequently, plaintiff cannot recover. It was found that there was only a partial failure of consideration. Held, that, under s. 45, Negotiable Instruments Act, where there has been a partial failure of consideration, it is only where that part is ascertainable in money without collateral enquiry that reduction can be made, and that the defence could not avail in this case, because, except by collateral enquiry, (How such a voluntary transferee is to enforce recognition of his title and payment of the note, not decided.) Delivery of the property is not necessary where the gift is by a registered instrument. One of the payees having obtained an endorsement of the note in his favour from the other, sued to recover the amount due on the note. Held that as endorsee or as one of two joint payees the plaintiff could not sue on the note, but as assignee of the actionable claim he might sue to enforce it. The endorsement was evidence of assignment by way of release. MUHAMMAD KHUMARALI v. RANGA RAO, 24 M. 654. (75)—S. 53—Promissory note—Consideration, Presumption as to—Holder in due course—Transfer of the note by a holder in due course—Right of the transferee under s. 53.—The presumption is, that a pro-note was made for consideration, and if this presumption is not rebutted, the pro note must be taken to be supported by consideration. If a pro-note is made for consideration, and is payable to the payee or his order, then the payee is a holder in due course. And when such holder in due course transfers the note to another person, the latter acquires all the rights of the former under s. 53 of the Act. VINDA MURI GURRAMMA JEENAUSETHI v. (77)—Ss. 53, 134, 32 and 7—Bills of exchange—Acceptance by drawee—Acceptance taken on copies of bills not a valid acceptance—Bills endorsed over to a drawee in case of need—Holder in due course—The drawee can maintain the suit without disclosing his principal as a holder in due course—Bills accepted need not be dishonoured and protested—Liability of acceptor at maturity of the bills—Assent not signed on bills but on copies—Assent not valid.—The plaintiff sued to recover on certain bills drawn on the defendant and endorsed over to the plaintiff, the defendant having failed to pay them. In one of the suits, the acceptance by the defendant was signed upon the original bill but in others it was merely on copies of the bills. The lower appellate Court threw out the first suit on the grounds that the plaintiff was suing as agent for the London firm Francis Times and Co., without disclosing his principals, so that the suits were defective in form, and, secondly, that the suits were not competent as the bills had never been dishonoured and protested. The remaining suits were dismissed upon the ground that the acceptance was written on copies of the bills. Held, (1) that the bills were indorsed over to the plaintiff by the Banks in whose favour they were drawn, so that he was a holder deriving title from the holder in due course; and as such he was competent to sue under s. 53 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. (2) That the bills were made payable in Bombay, and, consequently, under ss. 134 and 32 of the Act the acceptor became liable at the maturity of the bills. Presentment is not necessary to charge the acceptor. The acceptor was the principal debtor and his liability was independent of presentment. (3) That whereas s. 7 of the Act lays down that the acceptance shall be signed either upon the bill or upon one of its parts, the defendant's assent was signed only upon copies of the bills; and thus a material requirement of the law was omitted with the result that there was no valid acceptance. ARDESHIR SORABSHAH MOOS v. (80)—S. 58 — Fraud.—Plaintiff brought a suit on two promissory notes made by the defendant R in favour of the defendant M. Plaintiff's case was that the two promissory notes were endorsed over to him by M, that he gave consideration for them, and that, therefore he was entitled to succeed upon both of them against R, the maker and M, the payee. R pleaded in defence that he contemplated the institution of a suit in the Court to recover a large sum of money from a person whom he believed to be his debtor, and that as funds had to be raised for the purpose of that legal proceeding, these two accommodation promissory notes were made between himself and M, the payee, the object of the transaction being to obtain cash thereon from any person who could be got to discount them, and that there was a fraud committed subsequently in respect of the proceeds obtained from the plaintiff by way of discount for the notes. Held that there was no fraud such as would bring the case within the provisions of s. 58 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, that at the time when M took the promissory notes to the plaintiff for discount, he did what he was entitled to do, and indeed what he had been empowered by the maker to do, namely, to get cash for them, that there was no antecedent fraud subsisting at the time which could affect a person discounting them, that if there was any fraud or offence committed subsequently in respect of the proceeds obtained from the plaintiff by way of discount for the notes, the fraud, if there were any at all, consisted in the misapplication of those proceeds, and that, however responsible M might have been to R for misconduct in thus applying the funds obtained, that was not such misconduct as could properly be held to affect the plaintiff, and would not constitute the fraud or offence contemplated by s. 58 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and that therefore the plaintiff should succeed. PITAM MAL v. (83)—S. 61—Hundi payable at sight or on arrival at certain place—Time of presentation—Reasonable time—Delay—Liability of drawer.—By the general law, there is no specific time within which a hundi, payable at sight, or payable on arrival at a particular place, is to be presented. S. 61 of the Negotiable Instruments Act leaves the law as it was before. In deciding whether a hundi has been presented within reasonable time, the situation and interests of both the drawee and the holder must be considered, as also the distance of the place of presentation from where it was drawn. In the above case, where the hundi was presented 25 days after arrival and dishonoured (the drawee's firm shortly thereafter becoming insolvent), held, there was not such delay as to absolve the drawers from liability. MUTTY LALL v. CHOGE MULL, 11 C. 344.

(84)—Ch. V, s. 63—Hundi, scope of—Drawer and drawee same person—No notice of dishonour necessary—Dishonour by non-acceptance is itself cause of action for suit against drawer—Payee need not wait till maturity.—Presentment for acceptance must always, and in every case, precede presentment for payment, and the drawer of a bill contracts that whenever the bill is duly presented, it will, subject to the provisions of s. 63 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, be accepted. The several sections in Ch. V relating to presentment for payment pre-suppose that the bill has not been already dishonoured by non-acceptance. When it is dishonoured by non-acceptance, as well as when it is dishonoured by non-payment, the provisions of Ch. VIII come into play. Although there is no such explicit declaration of the law upon this subject contained in the Indian, as in s. 43 (2) of the English Act, still, the whole scope and tenor of Ch. VIII of the Indian Act, appear to contemplate the same result as is there declared to follow from non-acceptance. No notice of dishonour is required where, as in this case, the drawer and the drawee of a hundi are the same person. On dishonour by non-acceptance of a hundi payable at a fixed date, the right to sue the drawer immediately accrues and is complete, and there is no need to wait till the maturity of the bill, or to present it to the drawee for payment. RAM RAUJI JAMBHEKAR v. (86)—S. 64—Presentment for payment—Necessity for presentment—Suit upon bill not presented.—One B.H. drew a bill of exchange on the Agra Savings Bank payable at ninety-one days. The bill was accepted by one F.A. There was no special condition that the bill was to be presented at any particular place or at any particular time. The bill was never presented for payment, but after maturity a suit was brought on the bill against the acceptor. Held, that the suit was sufficient demand and no presentment was necessary. FARZAND ALI v. (92)—S. 79—Interest when rate specified—Payment by instalments.—S. 79 of the Negotiable Instruments Act gives a Court no option to disallow interest, where a specified rate of interest is provided for in a pro-note. Where the principal sum lent was Rs. 40 and a sum of Rs. 74-10-0 had already been paid as principal and interest, the debtor's application to be allowed to pay by instalments was allowed. GOVIND-JEE v. C. KO PO YEE, 11 Ind. Cas. 891.

(93)—S. 79—Pro-note—Interest.—When the maker of a pro-note had entered into the contract knowingly, the interest must be allowed at the rate specified in the pro note, until some date after the institution of the suit. But there is no obligation on the Court to grant the specified rate of interest until the date of realization or up to the date of decree. HARSA SINGH v. MAUNG AUNG GYI, U.B.R. 1892—96, 591. (29 A. 33 P. C. = 4 A.L.J. 29 = 5 C.L.J. 7 = 11 C.W.N. 105 = 9 Bom. L.R. 1 = 1 M.L.T. 427 = 17 M.L.J. 35, D.) A Shah Jog Hundi is an instrument of a formal character, and where it is silent as to interest, a separate oral agreement for payment of interest cannot be proved in virtue of proviso 2 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act. But interest at 6 per cent. per annum will be allowed under s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Where a hundi does not contain the rate of interest, but such rate is entered separately in the books of the sahuksar and the broker, this entry by itself would not be sufficient evidence of a written agreement between the parties to pay interest at the rate therein mentioned. Where it would be dangerous, in the opinion of (96)—S. 80—Nattukottai Chetties' way of signing and drawing bills—Bill of exchange—Construction—Interest—Independent agreement.—With regard to the Nattukottai Chetties who carry on most extensive business by means of agents in different parts of India, it is well known that they trade under names made up of a series of initials. In firm transactions, the initials, which are the name of the firm, are prefixed to the name of the signatory, and this is the ordinary way in which documents are signed on behalf of these firms, and may even be said to be the ordinary way in which these firms sign. In considering whether a signature in a bill is that of the principal or agent by whose hand it is written, the construction most favourable to the validity of the instrument must be adopted. S. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does not affect the validity of collateral agreement to pay interest at a specified rate as to which the hundi is silent. MANGUMAL JESSE SINGH v. A. L. V.R.C.T. FIRM, 4 M.L.T. 309.

But it was proved that in accordance with the custom of the district the parties had entered into a collateral agreement, embodied in written documents, that the hundis should bear interest at 30 per cent. per annum. Held—That s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, being an enabling section, was no bar to the recovery of interest at the above rate. GOSWAMI SRI GHANSHIAM LALJI v. (99)—S. 80—Rate of interest to be allowed.—In the absence of a special contract contained in a hundi, the rate of interest allowable to the plaintiff in a suit thereon is that mentioned in this section, viz., 6 per cent. per annum. RAM DAS v. MATHRA DAS, 6 P.L.R. 1905.

The Indian Act differs from the English Bill of Exchange Act (s. 56) in not containing any provision for the liability of a stranger signing a bill or note. According to the English Law, a stranger, who signs a note or bill, incurs the liability of an endorser. The addition of a new maker is doubtless a material alteration. But where a pro-note is signed by two persons as makers, and whose names are also mentioned in the body of the note, the adding of a third person's name as a maker without mentioning his name in the body of the note, is not a material alteration. MA KIN v. C.T.L. ADAGAPPA CHETTY, U B.R. 1902—1903, Vol. II, Civil, Negotiable Instruments, 1.

(109)—S. 87—Signing a pro-note at different times.—The signing of a pro-note at different times renders the note void as against any one who was a party to the note, and a suit founded upon it is not maintainable. MAUNG PE v. MAUNG SHWE AUNG, L.B.R. 1893—1900, 627.

(110)—S. 87—Material alteration.—A note signed by more than one person and running "I promise to pay," is several as well as joint. But when a note is not only in the singular but also specified the person promising to pay by name, the addition of a signature to such a note, without alteration in any way of the body of the note, may not convert it into a joint note made by more than one maker. Such an addition is not a material alteration. KO PE TWE v. A. L. V. R. R. M. VENKATACHELLUM CHETTY, U. B. R. 1892—96, 593. [R., U.B.R. 1902—1903, II, Negotiable Instruments, 1.]

(111)—S. 87—Promissory note—Addition of names—Material alteration.—Where a pro-note contains the name of the maker, and according to its terms no one else could be a promisor unless his name is also added in the body of the note, the additional signature of a promisor is not a material alteration. The addition of words which could not prejudice any one, will not destroy the validity of a pro-note. A maker of a pro-note will not be discharged from his obligation to pay it because the holder has put in writing on the note what the law would have supplied. MA SHWE YU v. K.K. N.K. RAMEN CHETTY, L.B.R. 1900—1902, Vol. I, 255. (L.B.R. 343, D.)

(112)—S. 87—Material alteration, what amounts to—Non-compliance with foreign stamp law—Admissibility under Indian Law—Private International law—Document whether bond or pronote.—Plaintiff brought a suit upon two documents which were executed in his favour in Mysore by the father of defendants. In the plaint, these documents were described as bonds, but in the documents themselves they were described as pro-notes. These documents were torn in several places and pieced together again, but in such a way that the parts where the name of the payee and the words 'or order' would ordinarily appear were missing, with the result that they could be described as bonds as they were described in the plaint: it appeared also that the documents were not stamped in accordance with the Mysore Stamp Law (Regulation II of 1900) and were entirely invalid in Mysore. Held that there had been a material alteration, inasmuch as the documents, which could not be sued upon in Mysore, were converted into those which could be sued upon, and that they were therefore void not only under s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but upon general principles of law. In England, under s. 72 (1) (a) the Bills of Exchange Act, mere failure of compliance with foreign stamp law does not prevent bills being sued upon in England (5 Ex. 275, D.). But there is no section corresponding to that in the Negotiable Instruments Act: and s. 19 of the Stamp Act does not seem to throw light upon this question. LAKSHMAMMAL v. NARASIMHARAGHAVA IYENGAR, 12 M.L.T. 333.

(113)—Ss. 87 and 27—Alteration of promissory note by insertion of date—Power of husband to sign on behalf of his wife.—Insertion in a promissory note after execution of a date entered in the counterfoil and inadvertently omitted when the note was signed is an alteration made to carry out the common intention of the parties as contemplated in s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Any general authority that the husband may have as lord of the household, to act on behalf of his wife, does not include the right to sign promissory notes on her behalf. SAN PE v. MAUNG KYAN, L.B.R. 1903—1904, Vol. II, 324. (1899 L.B.R. 568, 1891 L.B.R. 578, D.)

The payee thereupon endorsed it to the plaintiff, who sent to Rangoon for payment but was refused payment by the acceptor. Thereupon, plaintiff sued to recover the amount due on the hundi, making the drawer and endorser parties to the suit. The acceptor was subsequently made a party, but at the time he was joined, the suit as against him was out of time. Plaintiff alleged that the acceptor was the partner of the drawer and that the hundi directed the acceptor to pay the amount due. No notice of dishonor had been given to the drawer of the hundi. Held that the burden of proving that the drawer could not have suffered damage by reason of notice not having been given to him of the dishonor of the bill by the acceptor lay on the plaintiff. Held, also, that the mere fact that the drawer and drawee of a bill happen to be partners cannot lead to any presumption that they were partners in respect of the drawing of the bill or that the bill was drawn by one of them on behalf of both. Assuming that the drawer and drawee were partners, there was no allegation in the plaint nor was it proved that the drawer drew the bill in question on behalf of himself and the drawee. Held, further, that the fact that the suit was barred by limitation as against the acceptor did not operate as a discharge of the drawer's obligation to pay. JAMBU RAMASWAMY BHAGAVATHAR v. (124)—S. 118—Presumption—Proof of consideration—Undue influence—Contract Act, 1872, s. 16.—Where a money lender admittedly lent money to a dissolute young man while he was still a minor, and again within a few days of his attaining his majority supplied him with large quantities of jewellery in presence only of his (plaintiff's) touts, relations and dependants, and then obviously gave a false colour to the transaction in his claim, held, that such circumstances are facts from which undue influence is to be presumed, and are sufficient to shift the ordinary presumption laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, that until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration, and that the onus therefore of proving the actual amount of the advances must be laid on the plaintiff. MIRAN BAKHS v. MUHAMMAD HUSSAIN, 2 P.R. 1902. [R., 9 P.R. 1906 = 19 P.L.R. 1906.]

(125)—S. 118—Promissory note—Presumption as to consideration—Practice—Plea not urged in the pleadings, not to be considered.—A suit was brought on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendant, who denied execution of the note. Both the lower Courts found the note was not supported by consideration, and so dismissed the suit. Held, under s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the presumption is that the note was for consideration, and the burden of proof lay on the defendant to prove that there was none. So, in the absence of a plea to the effect that there was no consideration for the note, the question of consideration ought not to be gone into in second appeal. MAUNG ME v. MA SEIN, 5 L.B.R. 46 = 2 Ind. Cas. 539.

(126)—S. 118—Onus—S. 115, Civ. Pro. Code—Powers of the High Court to correct a mere error of law in revision.—In a suit on a pro-note, in which the defendant admitted execution of the note but pleaded failure of consideration, under s. 118, Neg. Instr. Act, it was incumbent on the defendant to make out his plea. When his evidence as to want of consideration was disbelieved, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment at once. Where, however, after the defence evidence was taken, the plaintiff proceeded to let in his own evidence to show how the consideration for the pronote was made up, and such evidence also was disbelieved by the trying Judge.—Held, per Abdur Rahim, J. :—It did not amount to an admission of want of consideration and it was open to the Judge to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Per Sundara Iyer, J. :—It amounted to an admission of want of consideration and the Judge ought to have dismissed the suit.—Per Sundara Iyer, J. :—The High Court has no power to correct a mere error of law in revision. M. Negotiable Instruments, Summary Procedure on.

(1)—Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866)—Bona fides of defence—Leave to defend—Payment or security.—In suits under the Bills of Exchange Act, where there is no pretence for a defence, the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the holder should have judgment as of course; but if the defendant has a real defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up. It is only when there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence set up, that payment of money into Court should be ordered, or security for the same be directed to be given. VON-LINTZGY v. NARAYAN SING, 6 B.L.R. App. 64.

(2)—Return of summons—Procedure.—In a suit under Act V of 1866, the summons should be returned in the usual way, and after the expiration of the required time, an order of the Court or a decree should be obtained. SCHILLER v. MARKER, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 283.

(3)—Time to obtain leave to defend—Act V of 1866, s. 3.—Although Act V of 1866, s. 3, only gives the defendant seven days to get leave to come in and defend an action on a bill, note, etc., the Court must be satisfied before granting a decree that the defendant has had a full opportunity to obtain leave to defend. GROB v. PALMER, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 395.

(4)—Act V of 1866—Endorsement on promissory note—Struck out—Plaint not admitted.—In a suit under Act V of 1866 by the endorsee of a pro-note, the pro-note bore an endorsement of payment which had been struck out owing to payment not having been made on presentation by the endorsee. In rejecting the plaint, the Court (Phear, J.) observed:—"I cannot admit the plaint, unless evidence is given that the bill has not been paid, and to explain why the endorsement has been struck out. As, under Act V of 1866, evidence cannot be taken, the plaint cannot be admitted." THE CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK v. SECONDE, 3 B.L.R. O.C. 146.

(5)—Act V of 1866—Suit against resident out of jurisdiction—Summary procedure.—Suits could not be brought under Act V of 1866, against a defendant who was living outside the jurisdiction of the Court. In all cases (under Act V of 1866) in which the defendant resided so far off that the whole or a considerable portion of the time (viz., 7 days) within which he might apply for leave to defend would be consumed in the mere journey, execution should be stayed so as to allow him time to make an application to set aside the judgment under s. 4. CHANDRA KANT ROY v. N. P. POGOSE, 3 B. L.R. O.C. 83. [Expl., 5 C.W.N. 259.]

(6)—Notarial protest—Evidence of dishonour—Hundi—Bill of Exchange.—A notarial protest of any bill of exchange noted at any time after the passing of Act V of 1866, is prima facie evidence that the bill has been dishonoured under s. 13 of that Act, although the sections relating to summary procedure on bills of exchange did not come into operation till May 1st, 1866. A Hundi, which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee, and accepted by him, is within the terms of the Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement, if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. KHOJAH VULLIE GOOLWANY, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 247.

(7)—Act V of 1866—Summary procedure—Claim of plaintiff.—Under the summary procedure in Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866), the party is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal and interest, is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable. If, in a regular suit, interest would, on the construction of the instrument, be given, then it is claimable and obtainable in this summary process. DESOUZA v. RANGAIAN, 6 M.H.C. 257.

(8)—Act V of 1866—Suit to be brought in the Court which has jurisdiction.—In an undefended suit brought under Act V of 1866 on a pro-note for Rs. 342, there was nothing in the petition to show that the suit could not have been brought in the Small Cause Court; the High Court gave a decree for the amount of the note and costs. W.P. (1)—Contract — Preliminary negotiations—Withdrawal before negotiation becomes contract.—The negotiations preliminary to a contract are distinguishable from the contract itself. (2)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 119, 376—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside decree—Review—Application to set aside ex parte decree admitted by appellate Court—Records—Trial—Procedure.—Where a petition is clearly and distinctly one under s. 119 of Act VIII of 1859 for re-trial of the case in the presence of the petitioner, the use of the word review in the petition adopted by the Munsif in his order cannot make it an application for review under s. 376 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The lower appellate Court admitting an application under s. 119 of Act VIII of 1859, for re-trial of a case decided ex parte, should send for the records of the suit, as a suit and not as a miscellaneous case so that the case may be tried as a suit by the appellate Court, the object of the law being that a suit should assume a complete form, and go to a full trial, not that one half should go to one Court and the other half to another. KHOOB LALL SAHOO v. SHAIKH KADIR BUKSH, 15 W.R. 431.

(3)—Act X of 1867, s. 1—Act XI of 1865, s. 22—New trial.—The hearing for a new trial is a hearing within s. 22, Act XI of 1865. An application for a new trial is a point in the proceedings previous to the hearing. A Small Cause Court Judge can ask the opinion of the High Court on a question of law upon such an application. ISAN CHANDRA SING v. New Trial—continued.

(4)—Settlement of issues and trial—Irregularities.—A remand having been ordered for the proper issue to be laid down, and for the trial of the case de novo after calling upon the parties for their proofs, and the appellant having declined to adduce further evidence on the issues so settled, and having called for the judgment of the Court upon the evidence already given:—Held that, if this manner of trial were irregular, it was not for the appellant to complain of the irregularity. The suspicion that a party, who has failed to prove his case, may prove more successful on the second and fuller investigation, is no sufficient ground for directing a new trial. MAHARAJAH KOONWAR NITRASUR SINGH v. BABOO NUND LALL, 1 W.R.P.C. 51 = 8 M.I.A. 199.

(5)—New trial—Discovery of document after judgment—No application for discovery before judgment—Fraud.—Where no cause of fraud or surprise having been made out, a party to the suit sought for a new trial on the ground of discovery after judgment of an important document, which was in the possession of an opposite party, but of which the party first named had neglected to obtain discovery before judgment: Held that a new trial should not be granted. TURNBULL & CO. v. DUVAL, 6 C.W. N. 809, P.C.

(6)—Application within seven days of decision for new trial—Act XI of 1865, s. 21, notice under, of intention to apply, deemed to be included in application itself.—S. 21 of Act XI of 1865 contemplates a previous notice of the intention of the parties to apply for a new trial. While such notice of the application is different from the application itself and cannot include it, the application for a new trial may be such as to include the notice to the Court contemplated by s. 21; and, where an application contained in itself a notice of the intention to apply for a new trial, the requirements of the law will be satisfied if the applicant (being within the legal time) were permitted to treat the application as a notice under s. 21 of Act XI of 1865. DAMODHUR DASS v. VIII of 1812 and IV of 1814, how affect right of grantees—Exclusive right to take saltpetre—Incorporeal right, grant of, at the time of permanent settlement—Monopoly—Abolition.—The present proprietress of the Bettiah Raj is entitled to the declaration of her right at the permanent settlement—Holder under Government of the saltpetre mehal of Sarkar Champaran which passed to the Bettiah Raj by purchase in 1804. Regs. VIII of 1812 and IV of 1814 were not intended either to extend or to limit the right which the Bettiah Raj had to the nimak sayar mehal. The abolition of the monopoly of the East India Company by the latter regulation was not intended to affect the right of the Raj to realise its dues, either in the shape of royalty from the manufacturers or itself to manufacture saltpetre to the exclusion of all other persons or proprietors of land in Sarkar Champaran. The right to grant licenses and realise royalty would not be inconsistent with the abolition of monopoly. GOLAB CHAND v. MOHARANI JANKI KOER, 13 C.W.N. 454=36 C. 267=1 Ind. Cas. 967.

(1)—Temporary Settlement—Re-settlement—Area, if must be same—Preferential right of former holder to have settlement.—There is no legal obligation on Government at re-settlement to include any lands in a Noabad talukdari tenure according to the boundaries or daks of any former survey. A temporary settlement-holder specially an intermediate-holder for 10 years is not entitled to a settlement of the same area at the same rate, though he may have a preferential right to the fresh settlement the Government makes at the expiry of the old settlement. (2)—In Chittagong District—Incidents—Taraf and noabad property distinguished—"Noabad taraf," what is—Settlement whether permanent or temporary.—Where the question was whether a certain mehal, known as mehal noabad taraf Joy Narain Ghosal, in the District of Chittagong was a part of the permanently settled "taraf" of the proprietor or consisted merely of ordinary "noabad" lands temporarily settled and liable to periodical re-settlement and annexed to the proprietor's "taraf" for convenience only.—Held—that the special history of the tenure from 1763, when it was created, showed that the mehal was neither the one nor the other. The mere fact that a mehal is a "noabad" mehal does not necessarily attach to it the incidents of ordinary noabad properties of later creation. All "noabad" mehals of Chittagong have this in common, that the proprietors have to pay rent or revenue to Government. But the incidents of different noabad mehals may vary very greatly. The incidents of the present mehal determined, and, held, mainly upon the basis of a kabuliat executed by the proprietors in favour of the Government in 1852, that the revenue was fixed in perpetuity on the hasila area only. (3)—Non-joinder of parties—Civ. Pro. Code, Section 34—Objection taken in proper time—Suit on hundis by one of the partners of the firm without joining as co-plaintiff, son and heir of the deceased partner.—One Chela Ram, a partner of the firm known as Lok Ram Chela Ram, brought a suit to recover money due on hundis drawn in favour of his firm by the defendants. Among others, objection was taken as to the non-joinder of all the persons entitled to sue. It was admitted that Lok Ram died many years ago and was succeeded by his son Narain Das, who had a share in the firm. The suit was at first heard against Hukam Chand, one of the defendants ex parte, but on his application it was ordered to be re-heard, and he was allowed to put in a plea of non-joinder. Held, that the suit must be dismissed. The objection must be held to have been taken in proper time. The Court observed that the suit was re-opened and re-heard when Hukam Chand came into it, and the merits were then gone into. The Court refused to allow Narain Das to be impleaded as a defendant. NARSINGH DAS v. CHELA RAM, 2 P.L.R. 1900.

(4)—Non-joinder of parties—Objection taken for the first time in appeal—Duty of appellate Court—Procedure.—Where an objection that a particular person ought to have been made a party is taken for the first time only in appeal, the appellate Court ought to direct such a person to be made a party to the appeal and then dispose of it, or if necessary remit the suit to first Court for re-trial, and it ought not merely to dismiss the suit. *YENKANNA v. (8)—Parties, non-joinder of—Wrong person sued as heir of a deceased person—True heir not taking steps for a long time, effect of.—M and R were two brothers. M died leaving a son J., A mortgage suit was brought against R, in which he was sued in his own capacity and also as the heir of his deceased brother, M. J, who was the legal representative of M, was not made a party to the suit. In execution of the personal decree obtained in that suit, certain property, which belonged to both R and M, was sold in 1879. No step was taken by J, until his suit to question the validity of the sale. Held, that J's interest in the property also passed away by the sale. JAIMANGAL SONAR v. BACHU PANDE, 10 Ind. (11)—Procedure—Hindu family—Undivided member, if a necessary party to a suit to recover money not due to family—Acquiescence, cures the defect of non-joinder—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 75, waiver.—Where the plaintiff, the manager of a Hindu family, sued alone to recover money, which was not shown to be due to the family, held, that he could not bring the suit, without joining his undivided brother as plaintiff, though the brother acquiesced in the suit as brought. (9 M.L.J. 103, 22 M. 326, 18 M. 33, 23 M. 190, 29 A. 311, R.) The defect of non-joinder of the brother is not cured by the fact that he acquiesced in the bringing of the suit in the name of the first plaintiff. Where plaintiff credited defendants in his books with moneys he received in connection with a debt, and it was not shown that the credits were in respect of an instalment due, nor the fact of these sums being credited was communicated to the defendants, held, that there was no evidence of waiver. *SESHA PATTAR v. (12)—Non-joinder of parties—Joint Hindu family.—Some only of the members of a joint Hindu family, carrying on and managing a family trading business, may sue in their own names, on a contract entered into with them, the names of the other members of the family not being disclosed at the time of the contract. Such a suit will not be bad for non-joinder of the other members of the family. GOPALDAS RAI CHAUDHRI v. BADRI NATH, 2 A.L.J. 3 = 27 A. 361 = A.W.N. 1904, 282. (7 C. 739, R.) (13)—Non-joinder of defendants—Suit by creditor against one only of four representatives of his deceased debtor—Effect of decree in such suit as against the other representatives.—J. D. was the creditor of one S. on a simple money bond. S. died, leaving four representatives. J. D. sued upon his bond, making one only of such representatives, K. defendant, and obtained a decree, which was a simple money decree against K. only. In execution of that decree J. D. attached and brought to sale property which had been of S. in his lifetime and had since devolved on his four representatives jointly. On suit by the three representatives of S. other than K. against the auction-purchaser to recover their shares of the property sold it was held that J. D. was entitled under the decree which he had obtained to get execution only as against K's share in the property sold. PREM SUKH v. KEDAR NATH, A.W.N. 1894, 20.

(1)—Successive suits on same cause of action—Non-suiting of prior suit, no fresh cause of action afforded by.—In this case, two separate suits founded on the same cause of action had been previously instituted one after another, in the Munsiff's Court, and had been successively non-suited. Deducting the interval occupied by such suits from the entire period that had elapsed from the accruing of the cause of action, a period of about 15 years had to be accounted for. Plaintiff, however, stated his cause of action to have arisen when the last of the plaints was non-suited, but this was held by the High Court to be untenable. The non-suiting of one or other of the previous suits could not give any new cause of action and the present suit was therefore evidently out of time. HARADUN DEY v. RAM DOSS DEY, 6 W.R. 15.

(1)—Bona fide transferee of mortgaged property—Existing incumbrance.—Where the only evidence that the purchaser of mortgaged property had notice of the mortgage was a statement made by him, in answer to interrogatories, that he was aware of the mortgage, but believed that it had been discharged; held, that such statement was no proof of the purchase having been made after notice of a prior mortgage, for it was inconsistent with the knowledge of an existing incumbrance. SHEO DAYAL MAL v. HARI RAM, 7 A. 590 = A.W.N. 1885, 46.

(2)—Registration of document—Equity.—Where the mortgagor hypothecated certain land out of his undivided share in joint property, and agreed with the mortgagee, that if at partition the mortgaged land or any part of it fell to the share of some other co-sharer, the mortgagor would in place thereof give the mortgagee possession of certain other land belonging to the mortgagor in his own right.—Held, that on the mortgaged land falling at partition to the share of other co-sharers, the mortgagee was not entitled to recover possession of the land which was agreed to be made over to him in the mortgage-deed, from a transferee in good faith of it from the mortgagor, who had paid money to the mortgagor without notice of the previous mortgage. Mere registration of the previous mortgage-deed was not notice in law to the subsequent transferee. KANSI RAM v. PIR BAKHSI, 134 P.L.R. 1904.

(4)—Is registration notice—"Wilful abstention from enquiry and search," meaning of.—The doctrine that registration is notice has no application so far as registered voluntary transfers as against creditors or subsequent transferees for consideration are concerned. If the doctrine be applicable it can only apply for the purpose of either rebutting the presumption of fraud or preventing the presumption of fraud from arising. The doctrine of notice, if applied, must be applied in accordance with and subject to the definition of notice given in the Act itself. The words "wilful abstention from enquiry and search" must be taken to mean, such abstention from enquiry or search as would show want of bona fides. JOSHUA v. ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, 22 C. 185.

(5)—Doctrine of constructive notice—Registration Act.—When a person is proved to have had a knowledge of certain facts, or to have been in a position, the reasonable consequence of which knowledge or position would be, that he would have been led to make further enquiry, which would have disclosed a particular fact, the law fixes him with having himself had notice of that particular fact. For, there may be such wilful negligence in abstaining from enquiry into facts which would convey actual notice, as may properly be held to have the consequences of notice actually obtained. But, if there is not actual notice, and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an enquiry into, and consequent knowledge of, facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied. Constructive notice may apply as against third persons from a neglect to call for deeds and documents of title; but not to anything like the same extent when a Registration Act is in operation, as it would where no Registration Act prevails. DOORGA NARAIN SEN v. BANEY MADHUB MOZOOMDAR, 7 C. 199. [R., 27 C. 358, 27 B. 452.]

(6)—Constructive notice—Execution purchaser.—An execution purchaser takes subject to all equities affecting the judgment-debtor, and will be bound by constructive notice in the same way as an ordinary purchaser. RAM LOCHUN SIRCAR v. RAMNARAIN, 1 C.L.R. 296.

(10)—Relinquishment by ryot of portion of land—Notice of relinquishment, form of.—In order that a ryot, by relinquishing a portion out of a considerable quantity of land held by him, may relieve himself from liability to pay rent, it is not enough that he gives notice that he relinquishes a part of the land without specifying what that portion is. HABELA SIRCAR v. R. M. M. S. MEYAPPA CHETTY, 1 L B.R. 160.

(12)—Debt—Consignment and sale of cotton in lieu—Notice.—A forwarded cotton to B to be sold on arrival through him in satisfaction of a debt. A further promised to send an agent to redeemed the cotton should he wish to do so. This A failed to do. B sold the cotton on arrival without giving notice to A. Held that it was unnecessary to give any notice. The agreement was to sell the cotton on arrival unless redeemed. A made default by not sending his agent, or by not paying up his debt; and B, who held the cotton, had a right to sell in pursuance of the agreement. POKURMULL KISHEN DYAL v. GOKOOLDASS GOPALDASS, 5 M.L.J. 271.

(13)—Written statement—Time for filing—Time for service of notice on defendants—Duty of Court.—A defendant should be given a reasonable time for filing his written statement. If the summons be served upon the defendant less than two clear days before the date fixed for his appearance, he should be allowed further time to file his statement. Special attention of the lower Courts called to the necessity there is that they should carefully themselves see that due and reasonable time is given in all cases for the services of notices in order that the Courts themselves may not be made the instruments of fraud and injustice by means of those processes, the vigilant superintendence of the issue and service of which properly and justly is one of their most important duties. LOKHENATH THAKOOR v. SOBANATH MISSER, 5 W.R. Act X, Rul. 39.

(14)—Notice, reasonableness of—Second appeal.—Whether a notice is or is not reasonable is a question of fact, and, therefore, ordinarily, the decision of the question is not open to second appeal. But if the finding of the Court below is based upon no evidence or upon untenable reasons, the propriety of such finding might be questioned upon second appeal. There is no law in this country which requires a notice to quit in every case to expire at the end of the year; nor is there any law which requires a six months' notice to be given. What the Judge ought to find is, not what notice would have been reasonable, but whether the notice actually given in the case was or was not reasonable. KALI KISHEN TAGORE v. GOLAM ALI, 13 C. 3. (15)—Notice—Substituted service, when good.—In cases of substituted service, that is, service substituted for the personal service which the statute requires, wherever it is practicable, the Court should take care to be satisfied that the condition on which alone substituted service is good exists, namely, that the person who ought to be served personally is keeping out of the way. RAMA RAI v. (16)—Suit dismissed for default—Application for restoration of suit—Notice to defendant returned unserved—Second application for issue of notice—Order to be passed—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 100, 647—Practice and procedure.—On the dismissal of a suit for plaintiff's default, the plaintiff applied to the Court for restoring the suit to file. The notice issued to the defendant was returned unserved, owing to the plaintiff's neglect to point out the defendant to the Court's bailiff. The plaintiff thereupon put in an application for the issue of a fresh notice to the defendant which application the Court rejected. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court: Held, that it was not competent to the Court to reject the application of the plaintiff for the issue of a fresh notice because the first notice had not been served on the defendant owing to plaintiff's neglect to point him out to the serving officer. Under ss. 100 and 647 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, the Court in such cases, must order a fresh notice to issue and, if it thinks proper, it may order the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the necessary postponement. LALLUBHAI VAJERAM v. (20)—Second appeal—Notice—Search in the Registry office, failure to discover at—Misdirection as to evidence—Finding of fact—Error of law.—Where the question was whether a purchaser for valuable consideration had notice, at the date of his purchase, of a registered instrument, dated the 25th Bhadra, 1300, when it was found that he, before the purchase, had caused a search to be made by his agent of the books in the Registry Office extending to the year 1300 in which the document was entered, and the agent had stated that he did not find the document in the book; and where, upon these facts, the District Judge held that he had no notice of the registered instrument. Held, that there was a presumption of notice of the contents of the book, and it could not be rebutted by the mere statement that, though a search was made, it was unsuccessful. Held further, that, although the question at issue was in essence a question of fact, yet the District Judge having misdirected himself in regard to the most important part of the evidence bearing upon the question, and having approached the consideration of that evidence from a wrong standpoint, had committed an error of law. SRIMATTY AKHOY KUMARI DEBI v. Novation.

(1)—Novation of contract—Assignment of business of firm—Liability of assignee for debt not shown in books of firm.—A certain firm transferred all its business with all its demands and liabilities, as shown by its books, to the defendant firm. At the date of the transfer, the original firm was indebted to the plaintiff firm. This debt was not shown by the books of the firm and the defendant firm did not know of its existence. The plaintiff sued the defendant for the recovery of the amount. Held that as there was no contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the former undertook to pay any debt due from the old firm to the latter, there was no novation of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant and that the defendant was not therefore liable. JIT MAL v. GOKUL DAS, A.W.N. 1881, 52.

(2)—Elements of.—A contract by novation requires it as an essential element that the rights against the original contractor shall be relinquished and the liability of the new contracting party accepted in their place. NADI-MULLA v. CHANNAPPA, 5 Bom. L.R. 617.

Nuisance.

See CIV. PRO. CODE, 1908, s. 91.

(1)—Nuisance created by acts of many.—What may not be appreciable and be no nuisance, if done by one, may become a serious nuisance, if done by many. CHUNDER COOMAR MOOKERJEE v. KOYLASH CHUNDER SETT, 7 C. 665. [Affirmed, 8 C. 677.]

(2)—Crim. Pro. Code, s. 308—Nuisance.—S. 308 of the Crim. Pro. Code does not apply to cases where the public are charged with committing a nuisance, by a private individual in the exercise of an admitted right. BECHARAM GHOROOEE v. BOISTUBNATH BHOYAN, 14 W.R. 177. [Cons. and Expl., 19 M. 464].

(3)—Cause of action.—A person is entitled to make a drain in his own land, and the Court is incompetent to decree that the drain should be closed, because only it might possibly in some season or another of the year, incommode the plaintiff's neighbouring house-owner's sense of smell; it will be time enough for the latter to take action to abate any nuisance that he may possibly discover in connection with it, when such nuisance in fact occurs. NAIK SINGH v. MADHO SINGH, A.W.N. 1886, 156.

(4)—Abatement of—Smoke—Grant of perpetual injunction—Power of Court to refuse—Injury to reversion—Whether smoke nuisance amounts to—Nature and form of injunction to be granted.—Plaintiff U, owner of two buildings, sued K. the owner of a mill to the west of plaintiff's buildings, for a declaration that the mill was a nuisance, and for an injunction to stop the working of the mill or otherwise to abate the nuisance, on the ground that the smoke, sparks and chaff of the said mill directly fly into the premises of the plaintiff and have rendered the same uninhabitable. Defendant contended, inter alia, that his mill was working for some years before plaintiff's father built his shops on one of the plaintiff sites. Held, (1) that the fact that the mill was working for some years past is no defence, for "plaintiff came to the house he occupied with all the rights which the common law affords, and one of them is a right to wholesome air." Held, also (2) that the case was one for a perpetual injunction as no damages would be an adequate compensation for the practical destruction of the plaintiff's house as a place of residence, and also to prevent a multiplicity of suits; for a fresh cause of action arises from day to day as the nuisance continues. The discretion to refuse an injunction the Courts in India have in any case, but this is exercised when there is no substantial damage to the plaintiff. (13 B. 252, 18 B. 474, 20 B. 764, F.) Held, also (3) that a smoke nuisance is not a permanent injury and that the reversioner cannot claim damages even if it be shown that the tenants had given notice to quit and that the property would sell for less, and that the only possible injury to the reversion was that the smoke nuisance might become a prescriptive right, and that therefore all that was necessary for the plaintiff was to obtain a declaration that the discharge of smoke over his property is not done "as of right." An injunction in terms similar to that granted in Walter v. Salfe was granted. UMAR v. KEWALMAL, 3 Sind. L.R. 30=1 Ind. Cas. 958.

(5)—Nuisance—Municipal Committee's power to carry water into a public drain—Municipal Act XX of 1891, s. 123—Injunction—Conditional injunction—Specific Relief Act, 1877, s. 56 (g).—The Municipal Committee of Pindigheb had diverted the flow of the waste-water of a dharmsala by conveying it through a new masonry drain which emptied itself into a katcha drain in the public street, on which two suits were filed against the Municipal Committee, one by the owners of the houses whose houses abut in the public street for a perpetual injunction restraining the Municipal Committee from discharging the water of the dharmsala through the drain in the street, and the other by the person in charge of the dharmsala for a similar injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the discharge of water through certain properties and diverting its flow to the drain in the street above mentioned. The Court of the first instance, whilst holding that the Municipal Committee was within its rights in constructing the new drain, found that if the old drain remained katcha the increased quantity of water discharged into it might during the rainy season cause some damage to the plaintiff's houses, granted the injunction until the Municipal Committee converted the katcha drain into a pacca masonry one, but dismissed the second suit on the ground that the plaintiff has no status to maintain it, which orders were confirmed by the Divisional Judge. The plaintiffs in both cases appealed to the Chief Court on the grounds amongst others that the Committee had no power to alter the direction of the flow of water from private drains, or the direction of the drains, and that no conditional injunction should have been granted. Held, that the plaintiffs in the first case had no right whatever in preventing the Committee from allowing the water to flow into their drain, and could only object if their rights are interfered with by the diversion, and only to that extent. The Specific Relief

Act contains no prohibition against conditional injunction being granted, but that the form adopted was not correct, as it amounted to a temporary injunction of indefinite duration and not a perpetual one, the proper order would be to grant a perpetual injunction conditional upon defendant not removing the cause of prospective damage to the satisfaction of the Court within a fixed period. Held, also, that public bodies like Municipal Committees should act in accordance with the procedure provided by the statute governing their acts, but where with the tacit consent and acquiescence of the persons interested in a property they have acquired a footing with respect to the discharge of its waste water and do an act which has caused no damage but improved its conditions, interference by a Court of Justice would not be equitable. HARI SINGH v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF PINDIGHER, 78 P.R. 1901. (6 M.H.C. 112, F.)

(6)—Suit for injunction and damages—Liability of Municipality to carry off refuse-liquid of shellac factory by kutchra drain—Exemplary damages, when should be awarded.—A suit was instituted for a perpetual injunction to abate a nuisance and for damages on account of the same. The nuisance complained of consisted in the discharge by the defendant of the refuse-liquid of his shellac manufactory into a Municipal drain passing close to the plaintiff's garden. The defendant contended that the stench, if any, arose not from the liquid discharged into the drain but was due to the insanitary condition in which the plaintiff's garden was kept. He also contended that, if the Municipality had properly constructed the drain, there would not be any stagnation of the liquid and thus the decomposition and bad smell thereof would have been avoided. Held, doubtless, the bad odour was due to the liquid discharge and not to any insanitary condition of the plaintiff's garden. The refuse-liquid stagnated in the drain in consequence of the higher level of a culvert, under which the drain had to pass and as it consisted of vegetable and animal matter, it decomposed and emitted a very bad odour. Held, also, that the Municipality is not responsible. The defendant has no right to discharge the liquid into the Municipal drain. The drain is not a sewer and is not intended to carry off whatever people may choose to discharge into it. It is only a katcha drain and is intended for the mere drainage of surface water. The Municipality did not permit the defendant to discharge the refuse-liquid into the drain. On the other hand, it prosecuted, more than once, the defendant. Further no private person can claim a right to foul an ordinary drain by discharging into it what it was not intended to carry off, and then throw on the Municipality an obligation to alter the drain in order to remedy the nuisance that he has produced; nor can he say that other persons must meanwhile put up with such nuisance. Carrying on an offensive trade so as to interfere with another's health and comfort or his occupation of property, has been held in England to be a legal nuisance against which the Courts will give relief. Here, the liquid is offensive, and does interfere with the ordinary comfort of the plaintiff's occupation and has caused him special injury. And, since the defendant has put the Municipal surface-drain to a use for which it was never constructed or intended, and has thus fouled it, and the consequences are highly injurious, the plaintiff is entitled to restrain him. From the history of the case, it appears that the defendant has successfully resisted Municipal control, that he has enlarged his factory, and that he has been discharging a greater volume of refuse-liquid into the drain. Consequently, an injunction for the permanent stoppage of the nuisance is the only effectual remedy. Held, further, that persistence in a proved nuisance is a just cause for giving exemplary damages. The defendant has certainly persisted in spite of Municipal warning. Consequently the damages awarded to the plaintiff should be substantial. J.C. GALSTAUN v. DUNIA LAL SEAL, 9 C.W.N. 612 = 32 C. 697.

(7)—When actionable—City of Madras Municipal Act (I of 1884), ss. 392, 433—How far Municipal Council justified in opening burial-grounds and in causing nuisance thereby.—Limitation.—It cannot be laid down as legal proposition or doctrine that anything, which under any circumstances, lessens the comfort or endangers the safety or health of a neighbour, must necessarily be an actionable nuisance. In determining whether the use of certain land acquired by a Municipal Council as a burning ground for the people amounts to an actionable nuisance, the Courts are bound to take into consideration the fact that the object of the burning ground is to provide a convenient and sanitary means of disposing of corpses in accordance with the general sentiment of the community; so the use of a place dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation in a way which is neither negligent nor unreasonable, and, which is not calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incident to such an act as it is generally performed in the country, does not amount to an actionable nuisance. (19 M. 464, F.) Where the Municipal Commissioners for the City of Madras acquired certain land and opened a burial and burning ground thereon, and an actionable nuisance was caused thereby to an adjacent landowner, held, that the Municipal Commissioners were protected by s. 392 of the City of Madras Municipal Act; the Legislature in enacting s. 392 of the Act clearly contemplated and authorised some interference with private right of property, since the above section empowers the Commissioners to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of burning-grounds. They were protected by s. 392 which places them under a statutory obligation to open burning-grounds, and provides also for compensation. (L.R. 11 App. Cas. 45, F.; L.R. 6 App. Cas. 193, D.) (Per Sir Arnold White, C.J.). The mere fact that a neighbouring land-owner has sustained damage does not show that the place provided by the Commissioners as a burning and burial ground, is not "convenient and fitting" within the meaning of s. 392 of the Act—(Per Sir Arnold White, C.J.). [R., 6 Bom. L.R. 131.] The cause of action for a suit for an injunction restraining the Municipal Commissioners of Madras from using certain land acquired by them as a burning and burial ground, and for damages caused to the plaintiff by the land having been so used, arises when the land begins to be used as a burning and burial ground; and the suit is barred under s. 433 of the Madras City Municipal Act, unless brought within six months of the above date. (Per Sir Arnold White, C.J.). MUHAMMAD MOHIDIN SAIT v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS FOR THE CITY OF MADRAS, 25 M. 118.

(8)—S. 68 (2), Act XIII of 1884—Public latrine—Erection by Municipal Committee—Legality of.—S. 68 (2) (a) of the Punjab Municipal Act does not empower the Committee to erect public latrines at any place which might deem suitable to the committee. That section enables the committee to apply the funds for the payment of charges and expenses incidental to maintenance, construction, improvement, cleansing and repair of latrines and to construct public necessities. MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, DELHI v. HARPARSHAD, 103 P.R. 1892.

(9)—Slaughter house—Suit for injunction—Damnum absqueinjuria—Municipal Committee—Powers of.—A suit for injunction was brought to prevent the user of certain premises as a slaughter house on the ground of nuisance and the probable consequence of danger to health, material discomfort and inconvenience to the plaintiffs. Held that unless it is clearly proved that the above consequences would ensue, injunction would not be granted and even if proved, the Court has full discretion to grant or to refuse it, also that the exercise of a lawful business, if it is not on other grounds a nuisance will not amount to a nuisance merely because it diminishes the value of the property. Diminution of the value of one's property without injury to the property by a legitimate use of one's own property is at best a "damnum absque iniuria." (2)—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 13—Evidence advisedly recorded without oath or affirmation.—S. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act does not render the evidence of a child nine years old, whose evidence has been advisedly, and not by omission, recorded without any oath or affirmation, admissible as evidence. QUEEN v. ANUNTO CHUCKERBUTTY, 14 B.L.R. 295, Note.

(3)—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 13—'Omission,' meaning of—Evidence.—The word "omission" in s. 13 of Act X of 1873 includes any omission, and is not limited to accidental or negligent omission. QUEEN v. SEWA BHOGTA, 14 B.L.R. 294, F.B.

(4)—Oaths Act—Failure to take oath—Practice.—A fact which was to have been proved by oath cannot be taken to have been proved, simply because a party resiles from an agreement to take oath. If a party resiles from his agreement to take oath or be bound by the oath, a decree cannot forthwith be passed against him. The only course open to the Court in such a case was to proceed with the trial of the suit in the ordinary way, drawing such inference as might be proper from the conduct of the defaulting party and mulcting him in costs that should be considered appropriate. ULAGAPPA CHETTIAR v. PERIA KARUPPAN CHETTY, 1912 M.W.N. 361. (17 M. L.J. 545, D.; 22 M. 234, 31 M. 1, 17 M.L.J. 99, & 100, R.)

(5)—Evidence balanced on both sides—Refusal to take oath proposed by other party—Its effect.—Where there is evidence on both sides, and a doubt arises as to which is the true case, a refusal to take oath may well be taken into consideration to decide the point (22 B. 683, F.) But where the Court found that the evidence for the defendant standing alone was not such that it could be safely acted on, the Court could not decide in the defendant's favour, merely because the plaintiff refused to take the oath proposed to him. KOJAKULI RANGA NAIK v. GURUVIYA BHATTA, 2 M.L.T. 327.

(6)—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873)—Refusal of one party to take oath proposed by other, whether conclusive evidence against former—Such refusal whether could operate as estoppel.—The point that had to be decided in this case was how far the Judge of the lower Appellate Court was justified in having disregarded the evidence on the record and rejected the plaintiff's claim on the mere presumption drawn from the refusal of the plaintiff to take a solemn oath, under the Oaths Act of 1873, that defendant's presentment of the case was false. That Court while admitting that, apart from the oath incident, the evidence was all in favour of the plaintiff, held that his refusal to take the oath prescribed had by itself the effect of establishing that the defendant was in the right and so decided in his favour. The High Court held that the lower Appellate Court should, under the circumstances, have disposed of the case solely on the evidence before it, irrespective of the party's refusal to make oath and was wrong in having decided the case by the ordeal. While a party, who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary, confers by so doing, on his statement, the character of conclusive proof, his mere refusal to make the oath does not, under the terms of the Act, justify any legal presumption against him. The refusal is to be considered as a mere piece of conduct-evidence in the case, to be judged of along with other evidence. Such a refusal, therefore, cannot be deemed to work as an estoppel so as to conclusively prove the falseness of the claim made by the person refusing. Where, therefore, as in the present case, there is good evidence all in favour of the party refusing to make the oath, his mere refusal cannot afford any sufficient ground for setting aside that evidence. It is only where there has been evidence on both sides, and a doubt arises as to which is the true case, that the refusal to take oath may be taken into consideration as evidence towards deciding the case. CHINTAMAN v. SHRINIVAS, 22 B. 680. [F., 2 M.L.T. 327.]

(7)—Evidence — Conscientious objections to take oath on Bible by member of Church of England—Admissibility of evidence not given on such oath.—Where a member of the Church of England had conscientious objections to take oath on the Bible and was willing to make an affirmation binding upon his conscience, evidence given by him except on such oath could not be admitted as he was not exempt by law from taking an oath in a Court of Justice in India. P. VALU MUDALI v. W. SOWERBY, 2 M.H.C. 246.

(8)—Agreement to be bound by defendant's oath—Power of withdrawing after acceptance by defendant.—A complete proposal by the plaintiff to be bound by the defendant's oath before a certain temple, is binding upon the plaintiff, if the defendant accepts such proposal. It will not be open to the plaintiff to withdraw after the acceptance, except for some good reason. VELAYUDA GOUNDEN v. NARAYANASWAMI GOUNDEN, 17 M.L.J. 536. (22 M. 234, 17 M. L.J. 100, F.)

(9)—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 9, offer to be bound by oath of opposite party, whether could be retracted subsequent to its acceptance—Discretion of Court.—The plaintiff in this case offered under s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, to be bound by the oath or affirmation of the defendant on a certain point. The lower Court treated the oath accordingly taken by the defendant as conclusive against the plaintiff and dismissed his suit. Plaintiff appealed on the ground that he had retracted his offer before the oath was taken by the defendant, though after she had agreed to take it, and that, therefore, he was not bound by the oath. Held, the Act makes no exception in favour of a party who makes the offer which has been accepted by his adversary so as to permit him to subsequently retract it. The administering of the oath is discretionary with the Court, and where the party who has made the offer satisfies the Court as he had good grounds for retracting it, the Court would exercise a wise discretion in refusing to administer the oath, but when such party puts forward only frivolous reasons for his retraction, the Court would be justified in administering the oath notwithstanding such retraction. ABAJI v. BALA, 22 B. 281. [Appr., 22 M. 234; R., 85 P.R. 1903 = 143 P.L.R. 1903, 17 M.L.J. 99.]

(10)—Award — Settling matter in dispute conditionally on one of the parties making oath to a certain effect—Form of oath taken in Upper Burma.—Where the decision of a dispute depends upon the taking of an oath by one of the parties, it appears a fair and reasonable presumption that the intention is that such oath should be taken in the most solemn and binding form in ordinary use. *MAUNG PAN GAING v. (1)—Right of suit pertaining to insolvent.—The right of suit pertaining to an insolvent does not pass at his insolvency to the Official Assignee as it is not enumerated in s. 7 of the Insolvent Act. DATTOOBHOY v. VALLU, 1 Bom. L.R. 828.

(3)—Suit against Official Assignee to recover property improperly seized by him—Jurisdiction.—The Mofussil Court and not the High Court has jurisdiction to try a suit against the Official Assignee for recovery of property improperly seized by him as part of the assets of an insolvent, on the ground, that it is not the property of the insolvent. BALDEO PARSHAD SAHU v. MILLER, 31 C. 667. [R., 4 A.L.J. 57.]

(4)—Vesting of property in Official Assignee—Execution—Attachment—Attachment issued against a garnishee—Warrant of attachment to the garnishee—Payment by garnishee to the Sheriff—Insolvency of the debtor—Claim of the Official Assignee regarding the attached money as against the attaching creditor—Insolvency Act (St. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 42), s. 7.—On the 1st August, 1899, the plaintiff obtained a decree against three defendants. Of them, defendant 2 had some monies due from N. On the 25th January, 1905, a warrant for attachment of the debt was issued; and a prohibitory order was served upon the garnishee N on the 27th January, 1905. On the 27th February, 1905, notice to pay was issued and was made absolute against N. Execution was then issued against N on the 28th February, 1905, as if he had been a judgment-debtor himself and the warrant of attachment was executed on the 1st March, 1905, when N paid to the Sheriff Rs. 1,200 and Rs. 83-0-9 for costs of the execution. But no order was obtained for payment of the money over to the plaintiff. It then appeared that the sum really due from N to the defendant No. 2, was only Rs. 399-12-9. But in the meanwhile, on the 2nd March 1905, the defendant No. 2 filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and by a vesting order made on that day under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act the whole estate of the insolvent became vested in the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee then claimed Rs. 399-12-9 from the Sheriff, as against the plaintiff, the execution creditor: Held, that the title of the Official Assignee should prevail over that of the execution creditor, because although the money had been paid to the Sheriff, it could not be treated as equivalent to the actual payment to the creditor himself. JITMAL v. RAMCHAND, 7 Bom. L.R. 488 = 29 B. 405.

(5)—After-acquired property of insolvent—Vesting of.—Although the after-acquired property of an insolvent does vest in the Official Assignee by force of the vesting order, yet if the Official Assignee allows the insolvent to deal with his after-acquired property, then certain equitable considerations come in which may bar the Official Assignee from recovery. When the Official Assignee knows that the insolvent is carrying on a particular business or trade and does not actively intervene then third parties dealing with the insolvent will be justified in assuming that the dealings which the insolvent is carrying on are with the assent and sanction of the Official Assignee. MACLEOD v. Official Receiver.

(1)—Position of—Assignment by—Suit by assignee—Validity—S. 503, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882.—The status of a Receiver is merely that of an officer of the Court. He is sometimes referred to as the "hand of the Court." He acquires no proprietary rights or interest in the property of which he is appointed Receiver. Having no title to the property, he cannot convey or assign any title to it to any other person. The Court may direct him to sell property, but, in such a case, he merely carries out the Court's order. His assignee cannot maintain a suit in respect of the property assigned. PO SHAN v. Official Trustee.

(1) — Civ. Pro. Code, s. 272 — Life interest, not attachable by notice to trustee of funds.—Where a decree-holder sought to attach the life-interest of his judgment-debtor in certain funds which were with the Official Trustee, such interest was held not to have been validly attached, since an attachment, under s. 272 of the Civ. Pro. Code, could be valid only so far as it related to any specific amount, which might be set forth in the prayer for attachment, as being then payable or likely to become payable to the defendant. ABDUL LATEEF v. (2)—*Suit against Official trustee—"Public Officer"—Suit against public officer—Notice—Object—Civ. Pro. To bring any person within the operation of the order of the Government of India (set out in the first schedule of the above Act) which declared that every talookdar with whom a summary settlement had been made since the re-occupation of the province, had thereby acquired certain rights, he must be shown to be one with whom a summary settlement was made between the 1st April 1858 and the 10th October, 1859 as talookdar. The appellant, because she originally claimed the superior, was held not barred now from asserting any subordinate right to which she may be entitled. Treating her interest, therefore, in the villages in question as that of a subordinate zemindar, or one entitled to and liable to make a sub-settlement for them, her liability to pay 10 per cent. to the talookdar, over and above the Government demand, was held to depend upon the effect of the provisions of the Oudh Settlement Act, XXVI of 1856. As the proprietor of certain villages and rights within a talook which she acquired by inheritance from her husband, her estate was held to be, not a life interest, but estate of inheritance of a Hindoo widow with all its rights and liabilities. Talooqua Chillaree—Temporary Revenue Settlement—Hindu Law of Inheritance—Female Heiress (Grand-mother).—The letter of the Government of India of the 10th October, 1859, which is set out in the first schedule to the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, was held not to apply to a Revenue Settlement of Talooqua Chillaree for which the infant Rajah Digbehoy Sing was permitted to engage, and which was resumed, by Government after his death and before that letter was written; nor was it intended to create in the infant Rajah's grand-mother a proprietary right in the Talook by virtue of a temporary Revenue Settlement for three years to which she had not been allowed to succeed. The above Act cannot apply to a case in which the suit was commenced in 1867 and finally decided by the Courts in Oudh in 1868; nor where the plaintiff's name is not mentioned in the first of the lists mentioned in *S. Oudh Settlement.

(1)—Law of Oudh—Settlement—Obligation to release the property settled—Trust—Adverse possession.—At the time of the first settlement of Oudh in 1859, a lady applied as malik for settlement of the villages in suit. Her claim was opposed by a Nawab, who was in possession until certain moneys, which he had disbursed on her account, were paid off. That objection was upheld and the settlement was made with the Nawab "in accordance with possession," and the lady was directed to proceed by a separate application to get the property released by payment of the money due by her. In 1867, when the regular settlement of the Province was in progress, the lady's application for settlement of the villages with her was again resisted on the ground that they were included in the sanad granted by government to the Nawab, and dismissed on the 31st October, 1868. The suit was instituted in 1905 to recover possession of a half share in the villages, and it was contended that the proceedings in 1859 constituted the Nawab a trustee on behalf of the lady: Held, that the correlative obligation that lay on the Nawab to release the property on payment of the money did neither create a trust nor constitute the Nawab a trustee for the lady; that, in 1867, when the lady applied for the regular settlement, an adverse title was distinctly set up by the Nawab, and from the 31st October, 1868, the date of the dismissal of her application, the Nawab's possession was adverse to the lady, and that the suit was, therefore, clearly barred. Oudh Talukdar.

(1)—Oudh Talukdar and his relatives—Superior proprietor—Sub-Proprietor—Provision for maintenance—Rule of the British Indian Association of Oudh—Construction—Suit in a Rent Court—Jurisdiction—Maintenance, payments on account of.—Where in Oudh, sub-proprietary rights in a village were held by the relatives of a Talukdar, who held superior proprietary rights in it, under the provision for maintenance in accordance with one of the rules of practice, framed by the British Indian Association, with regard to suits instituted and decrees passed therein, dated the 25th September, 1867, viz., "This class will remain in possession of what they actually had at annexation rent-free during their lifetime, but subject to payment in the second generation of 25 per cent. to the Talukdar, and in the third 50 per cent., and will not have transferable rights. If such persons pay the Government revenue, plus 10 per cent. to the Talukdar, they will have heritable rights in addition." Held, that the bulksum out of which the percentages were to be struck was the assumed rental, of which 50 per cent. was the Government revenue. Held, also, that it was not within the province of a Rent Court to determine whether maintenance was or was not payable, and consequently, that certain payments made on account of maintenance to the respondent by the Court of Wards, which represented the appellant during his minority, could not be opened up by the appellant in a suit brought in a Rent Court by him after he attained his majority. NAWAB ALI KHAN v. WAHID ALI, 7 A.L.J. 41, P.C. = 14 C.W.N. 237 = 11 C.L.J. 116 = 5 Ind. Cas. 156 = 12 Bom. L.R. 161 = 32 A. 92 = 20 M.L.J. 195 = 13 O.C. 74 = 37 I.A. 12.

(2)—Oudh Talukdar—Claim for share by collateral member—Presumptions.—Even if it be assumed that a Hindu family owning an Oudh Taluk, which was inherited for a considerable time past by the eldest son, is for some purposes undivided, it would not be the case of an ordinary Hindu family, so as to throw the burden of proving certain properties other than the taluk having been acquired only from out of it, on the talukdar, in a suit against him by a collateral member for his share of the ancestral property. It was held that any presumption depended upon somewhat special circumstances. RAGHUNATH BALI v. MAHARAJ BALI, 11 C. 777, P.C. = 12 I.A. 112 = 4 Sar. 642.

(3)—Oudh Talukdars—Title under sanad—Confiscation of 1858—Effect on previous gift—Part of Talukdari estate—Attempts to establish trust possession and proportionate payment of revenue to Talukdar—Effect.—The sanad, which grants a talukdari estate, confers an absolute title upon the grantee prima facie. Where a deed of gift effectively made prior to the confiscation of 1858 by the son of the then talukdar to the brother of the talukdar, that deed of gift (whether it is an absolute gift, or one for maintenance only, in a matter of dispute) was displaced by Lord Canning's proclamation of 1858. The claim of the plaintiffs, based upon the principle that the conduct of the holder of a sanad had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his sanad, interest in the property which he had by that conduct either granted to other people or given them ground to claim, was not established, by the mere fact of possession of villages having been left with the plaintiffs and by their having paid to the talukdar that share of the revenue which would be payable to the villages held by them. There may be cases in which it will be quite just and proper to allow a person, who comes to claim recovery of villages or the right to a settlement in villages, on the ground of a proprietary right, to maintain, upon the same facts, that he is in effect a sub-proprietor. The question of sub-proprietary right in such villages is entirely irrelevant to the relief claimed in a suit for declaration of full proprietary right in those villages. *RAM SINGH v. (1)—Possession, suit for—Presumption—Ownership.—Where plaintiff sued for possession of the beds of certain tanks, which the defendant had gradually reclaimed and made fit for cultivation, but which were situate within the mal estate of the plaintiff and had been measured and recorded in the Zemindary chittahs as being the khas khamar of the plaintiff and also described as being nalaik, or unfit for cultivation, held that the plaintiff may be presumed to have been in possession until dispossessed by the defendant, for, from the nature of the ground, he could not have been expected to show any direct acts of ownership. RUFATOOLLAH CHOWDHRY v. SHUSHEE SHIKUR BANNERJEE, 14 W.R. 57.

(2)—Evidence of ownership—Presumption arising from possession—Issue as to identity of land reformed on submerged site.—In a suit for possession of a chur, formerly carried away and afterwards reformed upon its former site, the issue being whether the land belonged to the plaintiffs or the defendants, held, on a question of parcel or no parcel, when possession has been established for a period, there is not an entire absence of evidence of anterior ownership, because presumitur retro. *ANANGAMANJARI CHOWDHRAIN v. (3)—Long possession—Title—Presumption—Onus of proof—Ownership.—When parties are in possession of an estate, it is generally to be presumed that they have been in possession as owners, and it lies on the party making the allegation that that possession is of a different nature, such as that of an under-tenant or the like, to prove such allegation. SHAHABOODEEN CHOWDHRY v. RAM GUTTY CHUCKERBUTTY, 9 W.R. 556.

Ownership—continued.

(4)—Presumption—Question of possession doubtful—Inference of ownership from enjoyment of fruits.—Where the question as to possession is doubtful, a presumption may arise in favour of the party who proves his right. There is no error of law in presuming ownership from proof of enjoyment of fruits of trees growing on the land in dispute. DOB GOBIND GOOPTO v. BATOO alias KISTO CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 22 W. R. 405.

(5)—Presumption of ownership—Title.—Lands which have never been occupied for cultivation, and which are of such a nature and description that no one can be said to be in possession, may be presumed rightfully to belong to the parties with whom the title rests. MOOCHEE RAM MAJHEE v. BISSAM CHUR ROY CHOWDHRY, 24 W.R. 410.

(6)—Presumption of ownership—Adjoining buildings—Walls of adjoining buildings built on same foundation—Light and air—Obstruction.—Where the external walls of two adjoining houses, which now belong to different owners but which at one time were the property of the same person, have been erected wholly or partly on the same foundation wall, and there is an entire absence of evidence on either side as to the dates of the several purchases or of the terms on which they were made, the presumption is that the line of demarcation of the two properties is that indicated by the superincumbent walls. RADHA MOHUN ROY v. RAJ CHUNDER DASS, 2 C.L.R. 377.

(7)—Possession—Lands not capable of actual occupation—Wrongful possession—Limitation.—When lands, which are not in their nature capable of actual occupation, such as a khal, appertain and belong to lands which are occupied, the possession in point of law necessarily follows the possession of the lands to which the former belong. But when the khal dries up and becomes capable of being cultivated, if any one to whom it does not belong takes actual possession of it, a cause of action accrues to the person in possession of the land to which it appertains. Generally speaking, a khal would continue in the possession of the person in possession of the lands to which it appertains until it becomes culturable; but if any one should take possession of it before it becomes culturable, or is brought into cultivation, the cause of action would accrue at that time and not from the time at which the khal becomes dry and culturable, or is actually brought into cultivation. SUNNUD ALI v. MUSSAMUT KURIMOONISSA, 9 W.R. 124. [F., 24 W.R. 410; Cons., 11 W.R. 283, 5 C. 36.]

(8)—Adverse possession—Jungle land—Proof of user—Presumption—Ownership.—In a suit for possession of certain jungle lands, in the absence of any proof of the exercise of clear acts of ownership on either side, the possession of such lands must be presumed to have continued with the person to whom they rightfully belong. RAJAH LEELANUND SINGH v. MUSAMUT BASHEEROONISSA, 16 W.R. 102. (3 W.R., 73 F.B., R.) [F., 24 W.R. 410.]

Ownership—continued.

(9)—Presumption of ownership—Highway—Waste land.—A highway or waste land adjoining it must be presumed to belong to the owners of the adjoining land, and when it is abandoned as a road, it reverts to such owners jointly. NIHAL CHAND v. AZMAT ALI KHAN, 7 A. 362 = A.W.N. 1885, 56. [R., 10 A. 553, 20 C. 732, 25 M. 635, 30 M. 185.]

(10)—Ownership of road site between two properties.—When a road has been, for many years, the boundary between two properties, and there is no evidence that the owner of either property gave up the whole of the land necessary for it, it must be presumed that each party was content to sacrifice one-half of the site for the benefit of the public. MOBARUCK SHAH v. TOOFANY, 4 C. 206 = 2 C.L.R. 446. [F., 15 C.P.L.R. 93.]

(11)—Suit for possession—Acts of ownership—Specification of boundaries.—In a suit for possession where it was found not only that all the land in dispute was comprised within boundaries specified in documents admitted by both parties, but also that plaintiff had for a long time stored bamboos and wood on one portion and grazed his cattle on another: Held, that these acts of ownership, taken in conjunction with the specification of boundaries, leave no doubt that the lands concerned are the property of plaintiff. RAM NARAIN ROY v. NIL MONEE ADHIKAREE, 24 W.R. 144.

(12)—Enjoyment of produce.—The enjoyment of any right of ownership over the soil, whether it be the cutting of timber, or of turf, or the gathering of produce, is prima facie proof of ownership of the soil, and when a Court finds that there had been such enjoyment of the forest as proved a title to the profits, it is logically bound to find a title established to the soil, especially when the enjoyment has throughout been accompanied with an assertion of such ownership. SIVASUBRAMANYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, 9 M. 285. [R., 20 M. 299.]

(13)—Suit for house partly built on plaintiff's land—Ownership.—In a suit for a house partly built on plaintiff's land, the defendant did not prove proprietorship or tenancy in respect of the house. Held, that the house was the property of the owner of the soil on which it stands. DEENDYAL PARAMANICK v. GAETREE DEBEE, 1 W.R. 277.

(14)—Alteration of map by ameen—Effect on ownership.—An Ameen's alteration of his map being merely a proceeding on paper, not interrupting actual possession, does not amount to an act of ownership by either party, or affect question of possession. *JANOKEE NATH CHOWDHRY v. tract of land had been constantly asserted, all questions between the disputants, as to the amount of the use of the tract by the claimant, and as to the sufficiency of such use to establish his possession over his whole extent, are questions of fact. A zemindar claimed from the Government the proprietary possession of a tract of hill and forest, in virtue of an istemrar sanad of the year 1803, conferring, upon the grantee, his heirs and successors, a permanent property in the zemindari as then possessed. To the sanad, which was aptly worded to include the subject of this claim, the acts of the zemindar had been ascribed. But, it did not contain any description of the lands which it was intended to carry, a marginal note only specifying three villages then comprising the zemindari. Held, that the grant was not confined to the villages so named, and to an area in their immediate vicinity, but that the whole tract of hill and forest was claimable on its being shown, by direct evidence, or reasonable inference, that it was in the possession of the zemindar when he obtained a permanent title from the Government. As to part of the tract, the zemindar's acts of possession, such as grazing cattle, cutting timber, and collecting forest produce, had been exclusive of the exercise of such rights by any other persons; but as to another part of the tract, his acts of that character had been concurrent with a similar user of hill and forest by raiyats of neighbouring villages, not part of the zemindari, and belonging to the Government. Held, as to both parts, that the acts of possession, which had been found by both the Courts below to have been done by the zemindar, did not fall short of proving his proprietary possession, and that the user by the villagers, not having taken place in the exercise of conflicting proprietary right, and whether or not they were sufficient to establish rights of easement, were neither in amount nor quality sufficient to displace the zemindar's proprietary title. The decision of the first Court that the exercise of the above mentioned rights by the zemindar was evidence only of the right on his part to use the land of another, for the purposes indicated, had been rightly reversed by the High Court. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. DEOKEE NUNDUN, 2 N.W.P. 169.

(19)—Reputed ownership of goods—Consent of true owner, termination of.—Where goods are in the possession, order or disposition of a person as reputed owner with the consent of the true owner, a demand of the goods or an attempt to put an end to the reputed ownership is sufficient to terminate the consent. Questions of order and disposition are questions of fact. Where the mortgagee of goods had allowed them to remain with the mortgagor and had only taken care to see that they were not removed by the mortgagor, and before or after an ineffectual attempt by the mortgagee to deal with the goods, as per the terms of the deed, after default by the mortgagor, the mortgagee allowed the mortgagor some time for payment, when, however, the mortgagor filed his petition in insolvency, held, in the circumstances, that the grant of further time did not amount to a fresh consent on the mortgagee's part to the goods being in the mortgagor's possession as reputed owner. *In the matter of R. (2)—Contract—Undue influence—Purda woman—Burden of proof.—A Hindu purda woman is entitled to receive in the Courts in British India that protection which the Court of Chancery in England always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm, and to those who, for any other reason, are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence over them. The undue influence is presumed to have been exerted unless the contrary be shown. It is, therefore, in all dealings with those persons who are so situated, always incumbent on the person who is interested in upholding the transactions to show that its terms are fair and equitable. The most usual mode of discharging this onus is to show that the lady had good independent advice in the matter, and acted therein altogether at arm's length from the other contracting party, and in the absence of such proof, the transaction would be set aside. BIBEE RUKHUN v. SHAIKH AHMED HOSSEIN, 22 W.R. 443. [Appl., 3 C.P. L.R. 118.]

(3)—Native Purda ladies—Protection.—A Hindu purda woman is entitled to receive in this Court that protection which the Court of Chancery in England always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm, and to those who, for any other reasons, are specially likely to be imposed on by the exertion of undue influence over them. The undue influence is presumed to have been exerted unless the contrary be shown. It is, therefore, in all dealings with those persons who are so situated, always incumbent on the person who is interested in upholding the transactions to show that its terms are fair and equitable. The most usual mode of discharging this onus is to show that the lady had good independent advice in the matter, and acted therein altogether at arm's length, from the other contracting party. (Baker v. Monk, 33 Beav. 419; Clerk v. Malpar, 31 Beav. 80; Evans v. Llewelyn, 1 Cox. 333, Rel. on.) The same burthen of proof lies on any one who, standing before the Court, in reliance upon a contract made with any one whether pardanashin or other towards whom he is in any fiduciary position relating to the subject of contract. *KANAI LAL JOWHARI v. (4)—Execution of instrument by—In the case of a pardanashin woman, with no legal assistance, the ordinary presumption that a person of competent capacity understood the instrument, to which he has affixed his name, does not arise; and it is incumbent upon the Court to be satisfied, as a matter of fact, that she really did understand the instrument to which she put her name. *ASHGAR ALI v. (5)—Document executed by pardanashin woman—Estoppel.—Where a person seeks to bind a pardah lady by a document alleged to have been executed by her or on her behalf by a third person, clear and strict proof of the agent's authority must be given. It is incumbent on the Court, when dealing with the disposition of her property by a pardanashin woman, to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her, and that she knew what she was doing, and especially in a case where, for no consideration and without any equivalent, the lady had executed a document which deprived her of all her property. (3 C. 324, 13 M.L.A. 419, 17 W.R. 523, Rel. on.) [Appl., 14 A. 8; R., 12 C.L.J. 115=3 Ind. Cas. 330.] The rule of estoppel ought not to be rigorously applied as against a pardah woman. The same inferences should not be drawn from, or the same construction should not be placed upon, her silence and delay in bringing a suit as might be reasonable and proper in another case. KANIZ FATIMA v. ABBAS ALI, A.W.N. 1887, 84.

(6)—Document executed by pardanashin woman—Conditions essential to validity of—Explanation of document.—Where the executant happens to be a pardanashin lady, it is absolutely necessary before fixing her with liability under the deed alleged to have been made by herself or by an alleged execution by her of a general power-of-attorney, to be reasonably satisfied that the liability she was incurring and the nature of the transaction were explain-

(7)—Instrument of authority by pardanashin woman—Explanation of document—Mukhtarnama by pardanashin woman—Account stated—Liability.—To charge a pardanashin woman upon an instrument alleged to have been executed by her, it is necessary that satisfactory evidence should be given that the document was explained to and understood by her. (8)—Gosha woman—No denial of execution and knowledge of bond—No evidence of explanation of transaction—Validity of bond.—Certain gosha ladies executed a bond in conjunction with their near relations. In a suit on the bond they did not deny the execution or knowledge of the contents thereof. There was, however, no evidence that the bond was explained to them. Held that the bond was not on that account invalid. BADI BIBI SAHIBAL v. SAMI PILLAI, 2 M.L.J. 235.

(9)—Pardanashin—Documents signed by pardanashin ladies—Explanation of document.—In a suit on a document signed by a pardanashin lady, in the absence of evidence that the necessary explanation of the transaction had been made to her, the Court ought not to presume her consent to matters, of which no direct information nor explanation has been conveyed to her. ANNODA MOHUN CHOWDHRI v. BHUBAN MOHINI DEBI, 28 C. 546, P.C.=28 I.A. 71=5 C.W.N. 489=11 M.L.J. 164=9 Bom. L.R. 386=8 Sar. 58.

(10)—Purdanashin lady, deed executed by—Explanation of document.—In the case of deeds and powers executed by pardanashin ladies, it is requisite that those who rely upon them should satisfy the Court that they had been explained to and understood by those who execute them. A pardanashin lady is not bound by a bond purporting to be signed in her name, where it is not shown that it was explained to her or that she understood its conditions and effect, although the bond was said to have been read out to her. SHAMBATI KOERI v. JAGO BIBI, 29 C. 749, P.C.=29 I.A. 127=6 C.W.N. 682=4 Bom. L.R. 444=8 Sar. 304. (7 C. 245, P.C., F.) [F., 31 B. 165=8 Bom. L.R. 781; R., 7 O.C. 292, 33 C. 861=4 C.L.J. 41, 8 Bom. L.R. 252; D., 2 A.L.J. 436.]

(11)—Document executed by—Not binding on—Unless understood and explained.—In order to charge a pardanashim lady upon an instrument purporting to have been executed by her, it is requisite to give satisfactory evidence that the document was explained to and understood by her. Where a pardanashin lady fell in love with an adventurer and left her husband, and, at a time when no one but the adventurer had access to her, executed a power of attorney, in his favour, and he, on the authority of the power of attorney mortgaged the property to the plaintiffs, held, that there was nothing to show that the instrument was explained to and understood by her, and that the mortgage was not binding. KUBRA v. AJODHIA PERSHAD, 7 A.L.J. 445=6 Ind. Cas. 689.

(12)—Deeds by—Mortgage deed—Execution of the deed—Explanation of the contents to the lady.—In the case of a mortgage deed, purporting to be executed by a pardanashin lady, if it is shown that the deed was not explained to her, in so far as it affected her interest, it cannot be considered to be legally executed by her. ANNODA v. BHUBAN, 3 Bom. L.R. 386.

(13)—Explanation of document.—The Court, in dealing with cases where the disposition of property by a pardah woman is concerned, must be satisfied that she understood the full import and effect of the document she executed. AMIRBIBI v. ABDUL, 3 Bom. L.R. 658.

(14)—Pardanashin lady—Execution of document—Inconsistent plea—Explaining document to her—Onus of proof—Independent advice—Lady of business habits literate and of intellectual capacity—Power-of-attorney given to husband—Estoppel.—It is not open to a pardanashin lady to plead that she never executed a certain document, and in the alternative, that, if she executed it, she did so under circumstances which did not make it binding upon her as a pardanashin lady (15 I. A. 81=15 C. 684, F.) But where, in the first written statement filed by the lady, there was no suggestion that the document had not been executed by her, and at a later stage she endeavoured to file a new written statement which, if admitted, would have made her case contradictory to her previous allegations, but the attempt failed: Held, that the case of the lady as it stands in its original form is self-consistent and is not open to objection on the ground of inconsistency. The Court, when dealing with a deed alleged to have been executed by a pardanashin lady, must, before it gives effect to it, satisfy itself, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction; and thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter (8 A. 267, A.W.N. 1887, 84, 14 A. 8, R.) It is requisite that those, who rely upon documents executed by pardanashin ladies, should satisfy the Court that they had been explained to and understood by those who executed them (29 I. A. 127=29 C.

749, 8 I.A. 39=7 C. 245, R.) Where it is proved that the lady was of business habits, was literate and of considerable intellectual capacity, the Court will be less inclined to interfere with the deeds, which have been prima facie properly executed, or to interfere with transactions to which her consent had been deliberately given. Where the deed was of the simplest character, and the lady was herself able to read and write, and there is no foundation for any possible pretence that the deed was read out in such a way as not to convey its true meaning to the executant, held, that the deed was intelligently executed and that the lady fully understood the nature and effect of the transaction. (28 I. A. 71, 28 C. 546, D.) Where a paraanashin lady and her husband executed a deed, and, although the interest of the husband at the time was in conflict with that of the lady yet, she had opportunities for independent advice, as her sons were grown up and were about her at the time and they attested the document: held, that the deed was valid. A general power-of-attorney does not necessarily imply an unlimited authority to borrow, and the general words in a power-of-attorney confer upon the agent only such general powers as are necessary to carry out the special powers (6 C.L.J. 639, R.) If a pardanashin lady deliberately makes herself jointly and severally liable for a debt incurred by her husband on the strength of a power-of-attorney alleged to be given to him by her, she cannot subsequently be permitted to turn round and question his authority to pledge her credit. BINDUBASHINI DAS v. GIRIDHARI LAL ROY, 3 Ind. Cas. 330=12 C.L.J. 115.

(15)—Deeds taken from—Explanation of document.—The law requires that in the case of a deed taken from a pardanashin lady the Court must be careful to see that the party executing the deed has been a free agent and duly informed of what she is about and that the deed was explained to and understood by her. SUMSUDDIN v. ABDUL, 8 Bom. L.R. 781=31 B. 165.

(16)—Mortgage by gosha ladies—Absence of proof that contents were explained to them—Right to claim exemption.—Where certain gosha ladies, who had executed a mortgage-bond in conjunction with their son and brother, admitted execution thereof, they could not claim exemption from liability on the ground of absence of the evidence to show that the transaction was explained to them. BADI BIBI SAHIBAL v. SAMI PILLAI, 18 M. 257. (3 C. 324, D.)

(17)—Pardanashin lady, document executed by—Knowledge of the contents of document.—Where a pardanashin lady makes an appropriation, which so far as words go is a wakf, it still remains to consider whether it was intended by the appropriator to operate as such. Such ladies have a claim for special consideration, particularly where they deny on oath an effectual knowledge of the documents said to have been executed by them. DEBROOS BANOO BEGUM v. NAWAB SYED ASHGAR ALLY KHAN, 15 B.L.R. 167=23 W.R. 453.

(18)—Deed of gift—Allegation of fraud.—Explanation of document.—The rule of law as to the evidence to be required, in cases where pardanashin ladies execute deeds and afterwards allege fraud or that they were taken at a disadvantage, is that the Court should be satisfied that the transaction was explained to the person parting with the property and that she knew what she was doing. T. SIVITHRI ANDARJANOM v. M. VASUDEVAN NAMBU DRIPAD, 3 M. 215. (3 C. 324, 1 I.A. 392, R.)

(19)—Pardanashin woman—Execution of deed—Duty of Court—Proof—Explanation of document.—In proving a document alleged to have been executed by a pardanashin lady, there must be evidence showing that the character of the deed was explained to her. It is essential in the case of pardanashin ladies that the Court should be satisfied on this point. PHUNDO v. BHISHWA DAS, A.W.N. 1883, 246.

(20)—Document executed by pardahnashin woman, circumstances necessary to establish validity of.—In a suit brought by a pardanashin woman to obtain a declaration that a deed executed by her may be declared null and void, on the ground that it was fraudulently framed so as not to express her intentions in executing it and was therefore inoperative and null, it is incumbent on the defendants relying upon the deed to show affirmatively that the plaintiff entered into it with full consenting and disposing power and with full notice, knowledge, and understanding in respect of all the terms and of the legal effect of the deed, not having been subject to any bodily or mental infirmity, and, having had independent legal advice relating to the matter, that the execution of the deed was not procured through fraud or coercion practised on the plaintiff, and that the entire transaction was free from circumstances throwing doubt or suspicion on the inception, execution, and application of the deed. MARIAM BIBI v. SAKINA, 14 A. 8=A.W.N. 1891, 213. (3 C. 324, 15 C. 684, 8 A. 627, A.W.N. 1887, 84, R.) [R., 3 Bom. L.R. 658; D., 2 A.L.J. 436.]

(22)—Execution of documents.—In a suit against two Muhammadan ladies on a bond purporting to have been executed on their behalf by their husbands,—which, being compulsorily registrable, was registered under a power of attorney said to have been given by the two ladies—the only evidence of the execution of the power of attorney was that of a person who was not personally acquainted with them nor knew their voices, who deposed that there were two women behind the pardha who, the executant said, were their wives, and that these women admit they had made the power of attorney; and there was nothing to show that the money borrowed on the bond was utilised for their benefit. Held, that even on the assumption that the ladies behind the pardah were the defendants, the evidence on the record was not sufficient to bind them and their properties. It was the duty of the plaintiff to show that they were free agents in the matter, and having a clear knowledge of what they were doing, accorded their consent to it. BEHARI LAL v. HABIBA BIBI, 8 A. 267=A.W.N. 1886, 91. (11 M.I.A. 551=8 W.R.P.C. 3, 3 C. 324, 7 C. 245=8 I.A. 39, R.) [F., 3 C.P.L.R. 118, 6 C.P.L.R. 35; Appr., 14 A. 8; R., 2 A.L.J. 436.]

(23)—Want of legal advice—Misapprehension.—A deed conveying the interest of a native married woman in land will not be set aside on the ground of want of legal advice or misapprehension, where the husband is aware of the alienation, and it is not shown that there is a gross inadequacy of price. MONOHUR DOSS v. KHOOLSUN BEGUM, Cor. 121.

(24)—Pardanashin lady—When not bound by her conveyances—Independent advice.—Before a pardanashin lady can be held liable upon a covenant of an unusual stringency, the Court must be satisfied that she had good independent advice in the matter and that she clearly understood the nature of the contract she was entering into, and the liabilities she was taking upon herself. RAM CHUNDER DUTT v. DWAR-KANATH BYSACK, 16 C. 330.

(25)—Deed of gift by Hindu widow—No proper advice—Undue influence—Courts of Equity.—A Court of Equity will not permit a person who takes advantage of a temporary quarrel in a family, and who entraps a widow deprived of the advice and countenance of her natural protector, into signing a deed of gift of considerable property which leaves her absolutely dependent upon him even for her maintenance, to profit by a document hastily extorted, and soon recalled. Our Courts are Courts of Equity, and in this character they look with particular jealousy on any proceedings, however plausible, by which persons incapable of judging of their own interests or of acting for themselves, such as widows and minors, are deprived of the management and enjoyment of their properties. SOONDUR KOOMAREE DEBIA v. KISHOREE LAL SEIN, 5 W.R. 246. [R., 7 W.R. 98.]

(26)—Burden of proof—Sale-deed by pardanashin lady—Evidence—Suit to set aside sale-deed and for confirmation of possession—Declaratory decree—Form of relief.—In a suit for setting aside a deed, some evidence ought to be given by the plaintiff in order to impeach the deed. But where a person claims under a deed of sale alleged to have been executed by a pardanashin lady living apart from her relatives, without those natural advisers who would, under ordinary circumstances, help her with their counsel, and especially where the person profiting by the transaction occupied a position of confidence, he ought to give the strongest and most satisfactory evidence to show that the transaction was a real and bona fide one and fully understood by the lady who parted with her property. The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiffs confirming them in possession and setting aside the sale. The High Court, on appeal, finding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession, reversed the first Court's decree so far as it confirmed the plaintiffs' possession and gave a declaratory decree concluding that they could not give substantive relief. Held that the High Court erred in coming to that conclusion, inasmuch as the plaint prayed that the deed might be set aside, which as a prayer for substantive relief, and that the High Court was not justified in substituting for that substantive relief a mere declaration of the plaintiffs' title. THAKOOR DEEN TEWARY v. (27)—Hindu Law—Document executed by purdanashin lady—Effect—Probability and proof.—A recital in a mukhtarnama executed by the widows, that they held only a life-interest in the estate, could not be considered an admission of their limited interest, since they were pardanashin ladies and it was not proved that their attention had ever been directly called to the nature and effect of the recital. SHAM KOER v. (28)—Acquiescence—Presumption by.—It is not the practice of the Courts in India to press a presumption by acquiescence against a female, Hindu or Mahomedan, in a rival claim, from the mere non-contestation for a limited time of an adverse title. EBRAHIM v. FOOLBAI, 4 Bom. L.R. 180=26 B. 577.

RANEE PHOOLPUTTEE, 7 W.R. 98.

(32)—Suit against purdah women—Evidence—Onus.—A suit against pardah women was held by the Privy Council (dissenting from the Agra High Court) to have failed as there was no proof that the deed upon which the suit was brought had been signed by the women or by any person authorized by them. MUSSAMAT AZEEZOONNISSA v. BAQUR KHAN, 10 B.L.R. 205=17 W.R. 393, P.C.

(33)—Property claimed as a gift—Gift or sale.—Where the evidence shows that a pardanashin intended by a deed to pass the property for some purpose, and the suggestion of a gift is excluded, the deed must operate, if at all, according to what it purports to be, as a sale. HAKIM MUHAMMAD IKRAM-UD-DIN v. (34)—Mahomedan law—Attempt to set up death-bed gift as a sale.—A death-bed deed of gift by a Mahomedan lady was in this case ineffectually attempted to be put in the form of a deed of sale in order to defeat the operation of the Mahomedan law of Wills by which a testator is precluded from giving more than one third of his property by Will. KUMUROONISSA BEGUM v. He must show that the whole of the circumstances were present to her mind and that the intention to give was really her own voluntary act. An attorney acting for both parties in such a transaction places himself in a very false position. An attorney called in to advise the donor in such a case should be independent of the donee in fact and not merely in name. A solicitor in such a case does not discharge his duty by satisfying himself simply that the donor understands and wishes to carry out a particular transaction. He must also satisfy himself that the gift is one that is right and proper for the donor to make under all the circumstances, and, if he is not so satisfied, his duty is to advise his client not to go on with the transaction and to refuse to act further for him if he persists. KAMINI DOSSEE v. KRISHNA CHANDRA MUKERJEE, 16 C.W.N. 649=39 C. 933=16 Ind. Cas. 110.

(36)—Purdah woman—Agreement by widow in possession of property in favour of husband's brother.—A document obtained by the chief male member of a family from a purdah woman should receive a strict construction. To suppose that a widow should, without consideration, absolutely give away property of which a portion only (viz., the Government bonds) produced an income of Rs. 15,000 for an allowance amounting to only Rs. 660 per annum plus the value of the rice, and that secured only by personal engagement of the other party, was held to be a most improbable hypothesis, and one which would not be warranted by any reasonable construction which can be put upon the terms of the instrument. SOOKYABOYE AMMAL v. LATCHMI AMMAL, 13 W.R. P.C. 3.

(37)—Purda lady—Suit to set aside sale—Fraud—Parol evidence.—Where a purda lady brought a suit to set aside a bill of sale obtained by collusion and fraud, held that parol evidence was admissible to show that the bill of sale was intended by her to operate only as a mortgage, and to vary the rate of interest therein stipulated for. *MANOHAR DAS v. (38)—Unconscionable bargain—Recovery of exorbitant interest—Equity—Mukhtear.—Fraud apart, a loan to a purdanashin woman from her own mukhtear, at an exorbitant rate of interest, the security being ample, appears to be a hard and unconscionable bargain, on which the contract for such rate of interest would not be enforced. *KAMINI SUNDARI CHAUDHRANI v. Held that her plea was unsustainable and she was liable for the amount. UDIT RAM v. KHATUN DAULAT, A.W.N. 1883, 24.

(40)—Mortgage alleged to have been executed by purdanashin lady—Suit for possession—Evidence—Secondary evidence.—In a suit to recover possession of a property pledged in a mortgage-deed alleged to have been executed by defendant, a purdanashin lady, through her mookhtar, which was remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for enquiry as to whether the deed had been executed with due authority from the lady, and where the mookhtar deposed that the mookhtarnama had been returned to the defendant, who petitioned that it was still with the mookhtar, and pleaded that it did not give him authority to execute such documents as the deed in question, held that the most important question to be considered was whether the mookhtarnama was returned to the defendant. If the Judge concluded that it was with defendant, he would be justified in presuming the truth of the secondary evidence given with reference to the mookhtarnama; if he concluded that it was with the mookhtear he should, under the Evidence Act, ss. 65 and 66, consider upon the secondary evidence whether the document was executed with due authority, taking into consideration all the surrounding circumstances of the case. BABOO AJOODHYA DOSS v. MUSSAMUT MOHUN KOOR, 24 W.R. 67.

(41)—Purdah women, transactions by—Registration—Mutation of names under mookhtarnamah—Validity of transaction—Impeaching of—Evidence.—In cases of transactions by purdah women, mere registration does not go far to corroborate the proof of their validity unless a mutation of names takes place. But, if the mutation of names, though a solemn proceeding, takes place under a mookhtarnamah from the purdah woman, then the proceedings have not the same effect as against her as they would have against a person capable of transacting his own business and acting for himself. When a transaction of the kind mentioned above is impeached, there ought to be clear evidence, not only of the mere signature by the party, but that the secluded woman had the means of knowing what she was about. SYED FUZZAL HOSSEIN v. AMJUD ALI KHAN, 17 W.R. 523, P.C.

(42)—Bond—Mookhtarnama by Mahomedan lady to raise money—Collusion—Duty of lender—Negligence.—A person, wishing to charge Mahomedan ladies under a bond executed in their absence by A under a mookhtarnama which contains a provision empowering him to raise money for the payment of their debts, is bound to show, even granting that there was no collusion between him and A, that the advance was made after satisfying himself that it was taken for their use, and was required by them for the purposes stated in the mookhtearnama; he must also show that the money taken was applied to the use of the ladies and that there was no negligence on his part. SYUD GOLAM SOBHAN v. MUDDUN MOHUN PAUL, 18 W.R. 257.

(43)—Deposition by—Living in some degree of seclusion.—It is not enough to entitle a woman to the special care with which the Courts regard the dispossession of a pardanashin woman that she lives in some degree of seclusion. Hence, where it was found that a lady appeared before the Registrar for registration of certain documents; that she stood as a witness in the box in a suit; that she put in tenants and fixed and recovered rents from them in respect of her house; that she paid Municipal rates and taxes, the Court held that she could not be treated as a pardanashin lady. SHEIKH ISMAIL v. AMIRBIBI, 4 Bom. L.R. 146.

(44)—Execution of deed by young pardanashin woman—Matters to be considered in upholding deed.—Where a young pardanashin woman executed a deed in favour of her deceased husband's brother in whose house she was then residing it is not enough to ascertain that she executed the deed voluntarily, in the sense that she was not acting under coercion, or that she knew what were the contents or even the full legal effect of it. It should be seen whether the transaction was a fair and equitable one and whether she acted with an intelligent appreciation of her own interest and not merely with a view to the interest of the person in whose favour the document was executed. MT. JUARKUAR v. MAGANRAJ, 6 C.P.L.R. 35.

(45)—Deed, execution of, by purdah woman—Death-bed disposition—Court's duty.—It is the duty of the Courts to see that a deed purporting to have been executed by a pardah woman is fairly taken from her, and that she was a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. Where the deed is in the nature of a death-bed disposition, the Court that upholds it ought, from whomsoever it proceeded, to be satisfied that it was the free, voluntary act of the party by whom it purports to have been executed and expresses his real intention. GRISH CHUNDER LAHOREE v. MUSSAMUT BHUGGOBUTTY DEBIA, 14 W.R.P.C. 7 = 13 M.I.A. 419 = 2 Suth. 339 = 2 Sar. 579. [Expl. & D., 19 W.R. 223.]

(46)—Will of pardanashin lady—Attestation.—Where in the case of a will by a pardanashin lady, there were two attesting witnesses, one of whom the testatrix could see and could be seen by him, and the other witness was so placed behind a curtain that neither could he see, nor could be seen by, the testatrix, held that both witnesses were sufficiently in the presence of the testatrix to make their attestation valid. HORENDARA NARAIN ACHARJI CHOWDHRY v. (47)—Recital in deed—Pardah lady—Strangers not affected by recital.—A recital contained in a deed made by a pardah lady must be regarded with caution and suspicion even as affecting herself, and should have no value attached to it, quoad any other person. DURGA PRASAD v. RAM DIN SAHU, A.W.N. 1887, 69.

(48)—Pardanashin women, denial of execution of deed by—Burden of proof upon plaintiff when pardanashin woman denies execution of deed—Rule regarding case in which pardanashin women are sued upon deeds alleged to be executed by them.—In a suit on a mortgage bond dated December 20th 1897, alleged to have been executed in favour of the plaintiffs by the defendant, a pardanashin woman, and her husband, it was contended by the defendant that she and her part of the mortgaged property were not bound by the deed. Her defence in her written statement was that she had had no occasion to borrow money of the plaintiffs, that she had borrowed none, and that she did not execute the deed and knew nothing about it. The question was whether a mere denial of "execution" by a pardanashin woman against whom a deed is brought to be enforced is sufficient to cast upon the plaintiff the duty of proving that the woman not only set her hand to the deed but understood what she was doing. Held, that in such cases it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that the woman received the consideration stated in the deed and executed the deed with knowledge of its effect upon her interests. The rule as to pleading in cases in which a pardanashin woman is sued upon is this:—If she admits having executed the deed she must plead definitely that it is not binding upon her so as to give the plaintiff notice of the position which she intends to take. If she denies having executed the deed the plaintiff must prove not only the factum of mechanical execution by her but also that she signed it with knowledge of its bearing upon her interests. Upon the evidence in the case the Court held that it was not proved that the defendant received any part of the consideration for the mortgage-deed in suit or that she caused her sale to be affixed to the deed or that she understood the transaction or had any means of doing so. MUSAMAT SAKINA BEGUM v. LALA Inder Pershad, 7 O.C. 292.

(49)—Mahomedan Law—Pardanashin lady Property of—Alienation by sons—Presumption—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 144.—Where the sons of a Mahomedan Pardanashin lady lease or mortgage family lands in which the mother is entitled as a co-sharer along with her sons. Held, the natural presumption is that they deal with the lands, as managers or agents, for her as well as for themselves, and the Courts will not presume and will refuse to believe, in the absence of clear proof, that they do so adversely to her. And in a suit to recover her share of the property alienated by them, the Court must, in the absence of such proof, date the commencement of adverse possession from the date of the sale by them, and not from the date of the mortgage or lease given by them. DHUNOMAL CHANDIRAM v. MUS-SAMTI KAIM KHATUN, 2 S.L.R. 43.

(50)—Quasi-purdanashin, meaning of—Quasi—Purdanashin, protection.—A quasi-purdanashin woman means a woman who, not being of the purdanashin class, is yet close to them in kinship and habits and secluded from ordinary social intercourse. A quasi-purdanashin is not entitled to the same protection which the law extends to purdanashins. Outside the latter class, it must depend in each case on the character and position of the individual woman, whether those who deal with her are or are not bound to take special precautions that her actions shall be intelligent and voluntary, and to prove that it was so in case of dispute. *HODGES v. (54)—S. 640, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882.—Commission to examine witness—“Pardanashin” lady.—In an application for the examination of a Hindu lady, (a pardanashin) under commission, the question is not whether the lady, who does more or less frequently go about in public, should be made to appear in Court, but whether the Court ought to compel her to continue to appear in public. If there were allegations that such a lady had been in the habit of appearing in public and had no regard to the customs of her country and her religion, such allegations being denied in general terms, the Court should not force into public gaze a woman who may have gone outside the purdah, and a commission should be issued, for examining her as a witness. *CHAMATKAR MOHINEY DABEE v. the judgment-creditor has an uncontrolled option whether he will proceed, in the first instance, against the person or the property of the judgment-debtor. That option is clearly given by s. 201; and by s. 15, Act XXIII of 1861, the Court is bound, if the application be in due form, to admit it, and when it is admitted, to order execution "according to the nature of the application." The Court further may, in its discretion, refuse execution against the person and property at the same time, and may also refuse execution against the person when, under s. 13, Act XXIII of 1861, or under s. 19, Act XI of 1865, application for immediate execution is made verbally at the time of passing the decree; but when application is made after the passing of the decree by written application under s. 207, Act VIII of 1859, the Court is bound to issue execution according to the nature of the application. *J. Parsis.

(1)—Statute of frauds, applicability of, in the case of Parsis—Resulting trust under Will, necessity of taking probate.—The parties to this suit were Parsis, and the suit related to a conveyance of a house which, according to the plaintiff, was made by her deceased husband G as a trust, the vendee J having accepted the trust in favour of the vendor's family. It was sought to make out a declaration on G's part and an acceptance of a trust by J, under which the plaintiff and her daughters became beneficiaries to whom J was directly responsible, and whose equitable rights adhered to the estate or followed it into the hands of the defendant, the widow and executrix of J, and it was held that if J had taken the house without consideration, the Court would be bound to give effect to the resulting trust in favour of G. It is the beneficial owner only who can declare, in the express writing any other trust which is to supersede the resulting trust in his own favour. The Statute of frauds, which in s. 7 lays down that such declaration must be in writing, applies in the case of the Parsee inhabitants of Bombay, with regard to transactions not having necessarily any religious character or governed by the family law. Further, in this case, even if G would be regarded as having devised the trust that resulted in his favour, the plaintiff not having taken out probate of the Will would not take up the possession of legal representative of her deceased husband entitled to enforce his rights, and, amongst others, his rights under the supposed resulting trust. Moreover, it was not contended nor could it be contended that, except as executrix or administratrix, the plaintiff could recover property or enforce rights equitably vested in her deceased husband. BAI MANECKBAI v. BAI MERBAI, 6 B. 363. [R., 33 B. 122=10 Bom. L.R. 417, 33 B. 509=11 Bom. L. R. 85=5 M.L.T. 301=2 Ind. Cas. 701.]

(2)—Parsis in mofussil of Bombay—Construction of agreement—Rule in Shelley's Case, applicability of.—The heirs of a deceased Parsi entered into an agreement with one another, by which they agreed that the remaining income after paying the deceased's debts, of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, situated in the Island of Salsette, and therefore in the mofussil of Bombay, should be apportioned among the various heirs of the deceased, the parties to the agreement, but "that after their death their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation." Held that, it being the plain intention of the parties to the agreement, appearing on the face of the agreement, that they themselves should take only a life-estate to the extent of their respective shares in the remaining income of that estate, the rule in Shelley's Case ought not to be applied so as to defeat the plain intention. MITHIBAI v. LIMJI NOWROJI BANAJI, 5 B. 506. [Affirmed, 6 B. 151; F., 1 Bom. L.R. 303; R., 5 Bom. L.R. 983, 8 B. 323.]

(3)—Agreement between members of Parsi family—Construction in accordance with intention of parties—Rule in "Shelley's Case" not applicable.—Where, by an agreement entered into between the heirs of a deceased Parsi, the parties had themselves defined their interest in the property by mutually agreeing in express terms that, after their respective deaths, their respective shares in the income should be enjoyed and received by another designated class, thus plainly showing a distinct intention that their own interest in the property should be confined to the enjoyment of the income during their lives, it was held that to construe such agreement as giving more than a life-interest to the parties to it, would be to defeat their clear and obvious intention, and that the rule of construction in Shelley's Case which was of a feudal origin, and so inapplicable to the circumstances of India, could not be made use of in construing the agreement, so as to allow the words in it, "but after their death, their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever," to confer an absolute estate on the parties to the agreement in respect of their respective shares. MITHIBAI v. LIMJI NOWRAJI BANAJI, 6 B. 151. (On appeal from 5 B. 506.) [F., 1 Bom. L.R. 303; R., 33 B. 122=10 Bom. L.R. 417.]

(4)—Parsis, law applicable to — Parsis — Muhammadans—By-al-wafa—Reg. IV of 1827, s. 26—Improvement of mortgaged estate—Costs of rebuilding premises destroyed by accident.—

Parsis—continued.

There is no law generally applicable to Parsis in India; but the law applicable to them within the jurisdiction of the High Court on its Original side is that which is applied to British-born subjects, and, in the absence of any specific law for the Parsis in the Mofussil, the rule of justice, equity and good conscience should be observed: and, in such cases, the Court should follow with certain necessary modifications the practice of the Courts of Equity in England. [R., 18 B. 366, 30 B. 359=7 Bom. L.R. 988] A Muhammadan sued to redeem certain property from a Parsi, alleging that it has been mortgaged by the ancestor of the plaintiff to the defendant's grandfather by deed (by-al wafa). Held that, according to s. 26, Reg. IV of 1827, the case was to be governed by the law of the defendant who was a Parsi. Held also that the by-al-wafa amounted to a mortgage and that the mortgagee in possession must be allowed for proper and necessary repairs to the estate. [R., 7 B.H.C. O.C. 45, 9 B.H.C. 69.] The mortgagee in possession has the right, where the mortgaged building falls down as by accidental fire so as to be unfit for use, to pull it down and rebuild it, and, in such a case, the mortgagor should not be allowed to recover the property without paying also the costs incurred by the mortgagee in having rebuilt and repaired the premises. MANCHARSHA ASHPANDIARJI v. (7)—Marriage among Parsis—Declaratory suit for declaration of invalidity of marriage during infancy—Effect of custom validating such marriage—Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), s. 3—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), ss. 2, 3—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 120.—Plaintiff, a Parsi woman, was found by the lower Courts to have attained the age of 18 on the 20th September, 1884, and on the 20th September, 1887, she was of the age of 21 years. On the 11th of September, 1890, which was within three years of the latter date, she filed the present suit praying for a decree declaring that the marriage ceremony performed in her infancy did not create the status of wife and husband between her and the defendant. Held that the effect of s. 7 of the Limitation Act was to allow the plaintiff three years' time within which to sue after attaining her majority and that she be deemed to have become a major

for the purpose of bringing the suit only when she was 21 years old; and under art. 120 of the Limitation Act governing the suit, it was within time. A Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void should be deemed to be "acting in the matter of marriage" for the purpose of the saving provision in s. 2 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) so that his capacity is not to be affected by the 18 years' limit in s. 3 of the Act, but will be regulated by the provisions of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) fixing 21 as the age of majority for Parsis. On the merits, it was observed that Act XV of 1865 contained no provisions as to the age at which a Parsi can contract marriage, the matter being left to the general law governing Parsis, and, in the absence of legislation, the law to be observed was the usage of the locality, and the lower Courts had distinctly found in favour of the existence of a custom validating and rendering binding marriages between Parsis even though contracted when the parties were children of tender age, and it was not open to the High Court on second appeal, to arrive at an independent finding as to the existence of such a custom, especially as there was a large body of evidence on the record in support of it. BAI SHIRINBAI v. KHARSHEDJI, 22 B. 430. [Not F., 29 M. 24=16 M. L.J. 8; F., 33 B. 509=11 Bom. L.R. 85=5 M.L.T. 301=2 Ind. Cas. 701; R. 2 Bom. L.R. 845.]

(8)—Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 7, sch. II, cl. 2—Estate of Parsi dying intestate, mode of distribution of.—This originating summons had been taken out (under High Court Rule No. 82) for the purpose of determining who were the persons entitled to share in the estate of a Parsi widow who died intestate, and into what shares it was to be divided among them. Defendants were the persons other than the plaintiff who could be entitled to share in the estate as lineal descendants of the brothers and sisters of the intestate. An important question of the law of intestate succession among Parsis arose, which related to the construction of s. 7 and art. 2 of the second schedule to the Parsi Succession Act, XXI of 1865, and to the distribution of the property of a Parsi dying intestate whose nearest living relatives are the lineal descendants in different degrees, of pre-deceased brothers or sisters. Held that art. 2 of sch. II, read with s. 7 of Parsi Succession Act, gives the estate to "brothers and sisters," and the lineal descendants of such of them as shall have pre-deceased the intestate. In this case, there were no brothers or sisters but there were lineal descendants in different degrees of two pre-deceased brothers and of one pre-deceased sister. The descent to lineal descendants is substitutional under the said article in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas, if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. In distributing the estate among "brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as shall have pre-deceased the intestate," the primary division must be per stirpes. The Act provides that the lineal descendants of deceased brothers and sisters shall, in certain events, succeed to the property of the intestate, and succession per stirpes is as consistent with such terms as succession per capita, and is more consistent with the context and with the probable objects of the Legislature. If there are surviving brothers, and lineal descendants of a pre-deceased brother, then each surviving brother will take equal shares with the lineal descendants collectively. If all the brothers are dead, then the shares which each would have taken had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If, in either case, the pre-deceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half-share only. HIRJIBHAI CURSETJI v. BARJORJI, 22 B. 909.

(1)—Ss. 28, 32, 295. Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Essentials to make a person party to a suit.—In order that a party may be considered a necessary party defendant, two conditions are essential:—There must be a right to some relief against him, in respect of the matter involved in the suit. His presence must be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. In a suit for declaration of right and confirmation of possession of certain immoveable property, and for declaration that the same is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of certain decrees obtained by (defendant) P against (defendant) Q, certain other persons, who had also attached the property in dispute in execution of decrees obtained by them against (defendant) Q and had successfully resisted the claim preferred by plaintiff, are necessary parties, to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit as the plaintiff has a right to relief against them in respect of the matter involved in the suit. The plaintiff's suit cannot be maintained, if he omits to bring those persons on the record as defendants. DURGA CHARAN SARKAR v. JOTINDRA MOHAN TAGORE, 27 C. 493. (5 B.H.C. 83, F.; 4 C.355; D.) (4)—Non-joinder of parties—Effect—Fraud.—Under ordinary circumstances, a Court of Equity would not throw out a suit merely because a necessary party had not been made a defendant. It would supply the omission and have the case tried in the presence of all interested. But, where a plaintiff acts unfairly by intentionally omitting a party and concealing facts relating to the defendant and also endeavours to make him responsible for the entire claim, the claim was held to be liable to be dismissed. *BROJO GOBINDA DOSS v. A plaintiff, unsuccessfully objecting to the addition of a party as co-plaintiff, can, under s. 591 of the Civ. Pro. Code, prefer a second appeal to the High Court. *GOOGLEE SAHOO v. (8)—Practice—Suit by some only of several plaintiffs entitled to sue—Others joined as co-defendants.—Where several persons had a right to sue as co-plaintiffs, but some only of them appeared as plaintiffs, the others being joined as co-defendants, held that the suit ought not to be dismissed merely because the plaintiff had not proved that the co-defendants had refused to join as co-plaintiffs. (26 C. 409, F.; 17 C. 160, R.) In this case, it was further apparent from the written statement which was filed by the co-defendants, that they disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and would not willingly have been made plaintiffs to it. *BIRI SINGH v. As a general rule, the right of respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants; and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections against the other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents. *BISHUN CHURN ROY CHOWDRY v. (10)—Costs—Scale of fees—Unnecessarily making one a party to suit—Parties.—The plaintiff and defendants were jointly liable under a decree, and the plaintiff having paid a far larger amount than was due as between herself and her co-defendants, this suit was brought for the recovery, from the defendants, of the amount so paid by the plaintiff in excess of her share of the liability. One of the defendants had paid into Court more than the full amount of his share. Thereupon the lower Court dismissed the claim as against this defendant, but awarded him no costs. Held that, as the plaintiff had no claim against this defendant, it was not necessary to make him a party and that he was entitled to his costs.

Held also that the scale upon which this defendant was entitled to his costs depended upon what the plaintiff claimed against him and that he was entitled to costs on the usual scale as on a suit for an amount for which the suit was brought. KASHEENATH SEIN v. CHUNDER MONEE DEBEE, 9 W.R. 288.

(11)—Suit for service-lands improperly alienated—Government impleaded as defendant—Cause of action of ghatwal different from that of Government—Government entitled to be made co-plaintiff.—Plaintiff, a Tabeydar Ghatwal, sued to recover possession of certain service-lands alleged to have been improperly alienated by the Sirdar Ghatwal to third parties. The issue on the point whether the land belonged to the tenure of the Sirdar or the Tabeydar Ghatwal was decided by the lower Courts in favour of the former. The Government having been made a defendant in the suit by the plaintiffs, applied to be made a plaintiff, in the suit, not because it joined with the plaintiff the Tabeydar Ghatwal, in alleging that the land belonged to his tenure, but to obtain a declaration as against the Sirdar Ghatwal that he had no authority to make a perpetual alienation to a sub-tenant, of his service-lands. The High Court held that the Government could not claim to be made a co-plaintiff. What the Government asked for was a declaration that a Ghatwal could not make a permanent alienation or a permanent sub-tenure of his service-lands. Its cause of action and ground of action were completely distinct from those of the plaintiff, and the two suits could not be joined together. This was not the case of a plaintiff having two causes of action against the same defendant, but of two plaintiffs having two separate causes of action against the same defendant. The two plaintiffs could not sue together. THE GOVERNMENT v. BOURIE BHOOMIZ TABEYDAR GHATWAL, 2 W.R. 280.

But if the facts show that their conduct was not justified by the Act of 1864, and their proceedings were only colorably done under cover of that Act, then they would not be entitled to the protection of the notice at all. By s. 64, Act III of 1864 (B.C.), the Municipal Commissioners, if they deem a house or building to be in a ruinous state, may, after the notice prescribed by that section, cause the same to be taken down. (24)—Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), ss. 29, 67—Suit against Abkari farmer for refund of money illegally levied—Collector not a necessary party.—Plaintiff sought in this suit to recover money which the Collector had forced him to pay to the defendant, a revenue farmer. His suit was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that the Collector was a necessary party to the suit and the suit as against him could not be brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The High Court, however, held that the suit might be maintained against the defendant-farmer without the Collector being impleaded as a necessary party. If he were a necessary party, because of his official act in aiding the farmer, the consequence would be that the farmer also would take the benefit of this exemption and escape responsibility. For the discretionary exercise of his authority under s. 29 of the Abkari Act, the Collector is not subject to any action in a Civil Court. He is protected by s. 67 of the Act. No protection however is expressly afforded to the revenue farmer. According to the view of the Legislature, there is nothing inconsistent in a responsibility to be enforced by the Civil Courts resting on a person who has put the Collector in motion, while the Collector himself stands exempt from their jurisdiction. It is open to a person subjected to an undue demand to take steps by which the Collector's proceedings will be stayed, but it does not follow that his abstaining from this course will deprive him of his ordinary right to recover money wrongfully taken from him for the benefit of a private person. *NARAYAN VENKU v. (26)—Wife with English domicile—Suit without joining husband—Suit to determine rights of mortgagees inter se—Representatives of mortgagors—Parties.—A wife having an English domicile was held capable of suing without joining her husband as a co-plaintiff. Both the law of England and s. 4 of the Indian Succession Act permit such a suit. Where the object of a suit was to determine the rights of mortgagees inter se, the representatives of certain mortgagors were held to be necessary parties on the following grounds:—(a) the rights of the mortgagees could not be determined without at the same time determining the liability of the mortgagors, which would otherwise involve a multiplicity of suits, (b) to give them an opportunity of being present at the taking of any account that might be ordered as between the mortgagees and (c) to entitle the plaintiff or defendant to obtain costs out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. *HUGHES v. (32)—Suit by mother and guardian of minors for partition—Conveyance by plaintiff to third party—Third party cannot be a co-plaintiff.—Until a division of ancestral property is effected, no member of the family can give a stranger any interest in the property. In a suit by the mother and guardian of two minors to obtain partition of joint family property, the Court did not allow a third party who was made co-plaintiff by virtue of an alleged conveyance from the plaintiff to remain on record as co-plaintiff, on the ground that the mother and guardian could not give him a right of suit against the other members of the family, and that the proprietary interests of the minors might ultimately be prejudiced. MUDDUN GOPAL LALL v. executors to manage the property during the minority of M. In 1877, M died leaving a childless widow G (who also was minor) and thereupon R and B were appointed administrators of the estate of G. In 1879, a probate of the will of L was obtained by one of his executors from the High Court of Bombay. The present suit was instituted in 1884 by R and B the administrators of the estate of G against H for recovering possession of the property forming part of the minor's estate. The defendant pleaded that the suit property had vested under the will of L, in his executor who had obtained probate of the will, that she held the property under the executor, and that the suit was bad for non-joinder, the executor not having been made a party thereto. Held that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. The will was made when Act XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills Act) was in force and, under that Act, s. 179 of Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession Act) had no application to it, so far as it related to any property out of Bombay. As the testator and the son lived joint in estate, on the death of the former, the property vested in the latter by right of survivorship, and on the son's death in 1877, it vested in his widow G, on whose behalf the present suit was brought by the administrators of her property appointed under Act XX of 1864. Under the provisions of s. 4 of Act V of 1881 (Probate and Administration Act), if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2, the estate could not vest in the executor, the same having passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. BAI HARKAR v. Where persons interested in the result of the suit, who are necessary parties, have not been properly made parties to it, the suit must fail by reason of defect of parties. In a suit for partition, all the sharers must be brought before the Court. In a suit by the plaintiffs to establish their right, without making the other sharers parties, held that to make any declaration in a suit to which they were not parties would be in effect to partition joint property, and to define the share of each without all the sharers being before the Court. KALI KANTA SURMA v. The defendants, while admitting the execution of the bond and the consideration therefor, contended that the plaintiff alone could not maintain the suit inasmuch as the bond was executed in the name of the plaintiff for the benefit of himself and his brothers, and that the suit bond had been discharged by payment to a brother of the plaintiff. Held that the plaintiff alone could sue, inasmuch as the contract on which the suit was based was in his sole name and did not purport to have been obtained by him on behalf of any others but himself. (51)—Agreement to advance moneys to firm for carrying out contract with Government—Power of attorney executed by firm authorising lender to receive from Government money due to firm—Equitable assignment of moneys due on contractor's bills—Right of member of family contracting in individual capacity—Contract by one of the members of a firm, when binding on firm.—W.S. and F.E., the partners of a firm, took a contract from Government to construct a barrel-house at a gun-powder manufactory. About two weeks later plaintiff agreed to advance moneys, up to a certain amount, for the purpose of carrying out the contract, the plaintiff to receive all sums becoming due from Government on the contractor's bills, and to pay the balance to the firm after satisfying the advances, with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power of attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all sums to become due under the bills of the contractors. Several months afterwards, a second agreement was entered into between plaintiff and F.E., one of the partners of the firm, undertaking to make similar further advances to the firm. The right of W.S. in a sum of money due to the firm on the contract was attached by the defendant under a decree against W.S. An application by the plaintiff for removal of the attachment was refused, and he thereon instituted the present suit. The Court below found that the plaintiff was one of the members of a joint Hindu family and could not institute the suit by himself and also that he was not, in any case, entitled to recover the money attached and received by the defendant. On appeal by the plaintiff, it was held as to whether the suit was maintainable by himself alone, that the contract was entered into with the plaintiff in his individual capacity, and not on behalf of the family, that there was nothing on the face of the contract to show that he was acting on behalf of the family, and he was therefore entitled to sue alone. With regard to the effect of the agreements, the second agreement, though entered into by one member of the firm, was necessary to the carrying out of the partnership business, and was therefore binding on the firm. The two agreements, accompanied by the power of attorney, remained in force throughout, and operated as an assignment to the plaintiff of all the moneys to become due on the contractors' bills as a security for plaintiff's advances with interest, and he was therefore entitled to recover the sum paid to the defendant under the attachment. The decree of the lower Court was therefore reversed and judgment passed for plaintiff. JAGABHAI LALLUBHAI v. RUSTOMJI NASSAR-WANJI, 9 B. 311. [Appr., 25 A. 378 = A.W.N. 1903, 76.]

Under the circumstances, the High Court directed that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his plaint by making the other members of the family mentioned by the defendant parties to the suit. HARI GOPAL v. The deeds were all executed by J and his undivided brother O jointly, but the plaintiff's claim was confined to the one half share alleged to have belonged to J, his father. The property was ancestral property subject to the Mitakshara Law. Neither O nor any one representing him had been made a party to the suit. There was nothing to show that the joint family had been separated, or the joint property partitioned. Held that the suit should have been brought by all the joint owners to set aside the deed as to the charge created by O, as well as to the charge created by J, and not by two of them alone who, before partition, had no definite share. If the other members of the joint family refused to join as plaintiffs, they should have been made defendants in the suit. [F., 2 C. 149, 5 B.L.R. [F., 18 W.R. 77, 15 W.R. 436.] If a larger sum of money was borrowed or raised by the alienation than was required for a legal necessity, and a larger portion of the estate than was necessary for the purpose of raising the sum legally required was mortgaged or sold, the vendees or mortgagees, as the case may be, would be entitled to a charge upon the lands mortgaged or sold to the extent of the money required and taken up for purposes recognized by the Mitakshara law as necessary. [F., 5 B.L.R. App. 14, 15 W.R. 436; Cons., 18 W.R. 48.] In a suit to set aside a deed in toto and to recover possession upon the ground that the whole of the money was used by the father for the purposes of his own extravagance, the Court might, upon the defendants establishing a necessity for part of the loan, decree that the deed should be set aside, and the plaintiff recover possession upon paying the amount which was legally taken up for necessary purposes recognized by law, or that the deed should be set aside in proportion. Under the Mitakshara law, one of several members of a joint Hindu family cannot, without legal necessity, alienate any portion of the undivided ancestral property without the consent of the whole of his co-sharers and such alienation is not valid even for the share to which the alienor would have been entitled on partition. RAJA RAM TEWARI v. Where, therefore, a decree for sale is made on a mortgage, directing that the whole of the mortgaged property should be sold, the Court executing the decree cannot go into the question whether any portion of that property was exempt from liability under the decree. [F., 32 C. 265.] In the case of a mortgage decree against the father alone of a joint Hindu family, it is not open to the son who has been made a party to the execution proceedings as the legal representative of his father, to raise an objection in these execution proceedings, that the decree against his father was not binding on him in his personal capacity by reason of his not having been made a party to the suit in which the decree was passed. HIRA LAL SAHU v. Plaintiffs claimed as purchasers at two Court sales of the equity of redemption of portions of the several sharers. They urged that, as owners of a part of the equity of redemption, they were entitled to redeem the whole mortgaged estate, and to seek contribution from the other sharers, including the defendants, who had purchased shares, and that their right so to redeem could not be affected by the defendants' purchase pending the suit, or the partial redemption permitted pending the appeal, whereas the defendants contended that the indivisible character of the mortgage has been destroyed by such purchase and partial redemption. Held that, though the property was held by the original mortgagors in shares as members of an undivided family, it was yet mortgaged as a whole for an entire sum and was redeemable only upon payment of the entire sum. Each and every one of the mortgagors was interested in payment of that sum and the redemption of the estate, and each and every one of them had a right, by such payment, to redeem the estate, seeking his contribution from the others. So, at the time the suit was instituted, the present plaintiffs had a right to redeem the whole and that right could not be affected by any act of the defendants post litem motam. When sued, the defendants were enjoying as mortgagees and were not entitled to resist the plaintiff's claim; and by thereafter purchasing a share in the equity of redemption, they could not claim to compel the plaintiffs to resort to a suit for partition. The Court was of opinion that a decree for the redemption of a portion of the mortgaged property could not rightly be made in the circumstances of the present case, since the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the whole estate, but it did not pass a decree to that effect because all the persons interested in portions of the equity of redemption had not been made parties to the suit as they should have been. The suit was, therefore, remanded for re-trial, after being properly constituted as to the necessary parties. NARO HARI BHAVE v. VITHALBHAT, 10 B. 648. [R., 21 B. 619; D., 20 M. 295]

(71)—Suit for redemption—Dismissal of suit without adjudication of claim—Mortgagors disavowing their claims not made parties.—Any one of the mortgagors or his legal representative if the mortgage-debt has been discharged, is unquestionably entitled to be put in possession of his own share of the estate, whatever his co-parceners may choose to do in the matter. The dismissal of a suit for redemption in the absence of a finding that the mortgage-debt has not been discharged, on the ground that the majority of the mortgagors had no interest in the estate, is not justifiable. HURDEO v. GANESHEE LALL, 1 Agra 36.

(72)—Redemption of mortgage, suit for—Parties—Persons interested in equity of redemption.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to redeem certain khoti lands mortgaged by the plaintiff's father to the uncle of the defendant. The defendant contended inter alia that the plaintiff could not sue alone, as there were eight co-sharers of the plaintiff who ought to be made co-plaintiffs. Their co-sharers were the plaintiff's uncle and the sons of another uncle, who had ceased to be members of the undivided family of the plaintiff at the time the plaintiff's father executed the mortgage. These relations did not claim any interest in the equity of redemption. Held that the plaintiff's uncle and cousins were not necessary parties to the suit. The mortgage did not purport to have been made by the plaintiff's father as manager of the family and the plaintiff's uncle and cousins did not claim any interest in the equity of redemption. In the absence of all evidence to that effect, it could not be presumed that the plaintiff's father effected the mortgage otherwise than in his individual capacity. If the defendant had made out that the plaintiff's father and uncles were undivided at that time, it might have been presumed that the mortgage was for and on behalf of them as well as himself, but this the defendant had failed in doing. The mere fact of their relationship did not give them any interest in it. RAGHO VINAYAK v. SHEIKH DAUD, 13 B. 51.

(73)—Second mortgagee suing to redeem first mortgage—Parties—Act XXIV of 1867, s. 17—Administrator-General.—A second mortgagee sued the overpaid first mortgagees for compelling them to convey to him the mortgaged property. Held, that the heir or the legal representative of the deceased mortgagor was a necessary party to the suit. He was not what is denominated in equity a passive party. [R., 7 B.H.C. O.C. 45, 5 B. 14, 5 Bom. In the event of such letters of administration being granted to the Administrator-General, the plaintiff was allowed to amend the plaint, and all other proceedings, by making the Administrator General, a party to the same. Afterwards, the puisne-mortgagee instituted a suit on his mortgage without making the prior mortgagee a party, and obtaining a decree advertised the property for sale. Thereupon, the prior mortgagee who had purchased the property at the previous execution sale, sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree. Held, that he was entitled to a declaratory decree that the puisne-mortgagee cannot bring to sale the mortgaged property in execution of a decree in a suit to which the prior mortgagee was no party. A prior mortgagee who had not been made a party to the above suit instituted a suit on his mortgage without impleading the present respondents and obtained a decree and, at the execution sale thereunder, the said appellant, a subsequent mortgagee happened to purchase a portion of the mortgaged property. On an application by the respondents for an order absolute for sale with reference to their decree, the objections raised by the appellant were upheld to the effect that the appellant having purchased the property in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree, stood in the shoes of that mortgagee, and that, though the respondent not having been made parties to the suit on the prior mortgage, they had the right to redeem the appellant, that circumstances could not entitle them to treat the prior-mortgage decree as non-existent so as to bring the property to sale, under their decree, free from the prior incumbrance. HARI LAL v. (84)—Mortgage by lumbardar to pay Government revenue—Mortgagee as agent of co-sharers—Foreclosure—Notice—Suit by co-sharers to recover their sharers—No appeal against decree of first Court—Acquiescence—Repudiation—Parties.—The plaintiffs were shareholders whose interests were mortgaged by their lumbardar with his own share to the lumbardars of another puttee in the same estate to raise a sum necessary to satisfy an arrear of Government revenue. The defendants had served notice of foreclosure upon the lumbardar who represented the plaintiffs, and obtained a declaration that the sale had become absolute and they also sued and obtained a decree against the lumbardar for possession. The plaintiffs brought this suit claiming to recover possession of their own share in the puttee on the ground that the mortgage was made without their authority and was not binding on them and claiming pre-emption of the share of the lumbardar. Held that the plaintiffs must be taken to have been parties through their agent the lumbardar to the mortgage deed, for if they were not, they should have repudiated the judgment of the Court of first instance which decreed them their shares conditionally on their paying their quota of the mortgage debt; moreover inasmuch as the mortgage was made to obtain the sum necessary to discharge the arrears of Government revenue, the plaintiffs must be held to have been acquainted with the act of their lumbardar and content to be bound by it. Therefore, as parties to the mortgage through their lumbardar they could not repudiate the consequences of the deed to which they were parties. Where a mortgage was made by a lumbardar for himself and as agent for other sharers, it is necessary to issue notice of foreclosure both to the lumbardar and to his co-sharers and in a suit

(87)—Suit to establish a right to share in property against co sharers in possession thereof—Necessary parties—Misjoinder—Cause of action—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 28.—In a suit for possession of certain immoveable property, the plaintiffs alleged that a 5 biswas share was held by B for her life, that she died in December 1888, that thereupon they and the 15 defendants became entitled to that share, and that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 claimed certain parts of the property under mortgages and sales in their favour, which the plaintiffs did not specify, but those mortgages and sales were set out by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in their written statement. It was found that, with the exception of 32 bigbas, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were not in joint possession of any of the lands in suit. It was contended by the defendants that the suit was bad on the score of misjoinder. Held that, in a suit to establish a right to share in property, all the alleged co-sharers are necessary parties whether they are in opposition to the plaintiffs or not, that it does not matter what title or titles the defendants choose to set up and that such titles do not form part of the plaintiffs' cause of action. In the present case, the plaintiffs' cause of action was that they became entitled to the property on the death of B and that other persons were in wrongful possession. Held, therefore, that the suit was not open to objection on the score of misjoinder. KATIR KHAN v. as before. Some 40 years after, the lady co-sharer leased out her share in the estate, in putni, to third parties, who were consequently in possession. There had been separate possession of these lands by virtue of the private partition for the past 70 years. Subsequently the Collector, under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, effected a partition of the whole estate. In the course of the proceedings, the specific lands allotted to the lady co-sharer in the original private partition were allotted to the plaintiffs and these plaintiffs instituted suits for rent against the tenants of the land making the putnidars defendants. Held, that the putnidars were properly made defendants in the suits, and that the Courts were justified in trying the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the putnidars (23 W.R. 227, 4 C. 350, 12 C. 555, R.) The putnidars were entitled to retain possession of the lands allotted to their lessor (the lady co-sharer) in the private partition, by which the plaintiffs were bound notwithstanding the subsequent partition by the Collector under Bengal Act (VIII of 1876), even assuming that the putnidars were not parties to the said partition proceedings by the Collector. HRIDOY NATH SHAHA v. Code, 1882, s. 30—Decree, form of.*—One or several of many co-sharers are at liberty to bring an action to prevent invasion of their common land by a mere trespasser. A decree for sole possession or for possession on behalf of other co-sharers, should not in these cases generally be given. A decree for the restoration of the property to its condition prior to the trespasser's invasion protecting the invaded rights which the plaintiff and other co-sharers, possessed in the property would be proper. RAMSAN ALI v. (94)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 73—Parties—Intervention—Discretion of Court.—Plaintiffs who had obtained a decree in a foreclosure suit brought the present suit against the mortgagors for possession and registration of names as proprietors. Whilst the suit was pending, the respondents intervened and asked to be made parties under s. 73 of the Code on the ground that the plaintiffs were entitled only to a smaller share and that they were entitled to the remainder by purchase. Held that it was very proper to allow them to be made parties to the suit. S. 73 of the Code was intended to leave Courts a discretion in cases where intervenors apply to be made parties to a suit. SALIGRAM SINGH v. GHEENOO SINGH, 16 W.R. 19. [F., 23 W.R. 168; Appr., 1 C.L.R. 39, F.B.; F., 8 B.L.R. 180=16 W.R. 235.] The words "District Judge" in s. 102, Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869, mean the Judge of the district, and not any Subordinate Judge to whom the case may be transferred for disposal, and an appeal therefore lies under that section in a case tried by a Subordinate Judge. ISWAR CHANDRA SEN v. under s. 73, Act VIII of 1859, to add an intervenor, must always be sparingly exercised; and Courts ought not to put on the record any person other than those whom the plaintiff sues, without good cause for so doing. So, it was held that a person preferring opposing claims to the plaintiff in a rent suit should not be made an intervenor, unless his position as such opponent would be seriously compromised by the result of a decree passed in plaintiff's favour. [Cons., 24 W.R. 101.] The plaintiff must prove his case by adducing the best evidence available. Where such evidence is not adduced, but only secondary evidence is let in, no objection having been taken thereto by the opposite side, it is the duty of the Court to pass a decree on such evidence as there is before it. CHOOIE LALL v. KOKIL SINGH, 19 W.R. 248.

(98)—Rent suit—Intervention of third party—Determination of question of title.—Where, in a suit for rent, a third party intervened and the defendant supported the story of the intervenor, that the plaintiff was merely a benamidar for him, the Court can go into the question of title to determine who had been in receipt of rent. RADHAMONEE v. RAM NARAIN DEY, 22 W.R. 440. [Cons., 24 W.R. 101.]

(99)—Suit for rent—Intervenor claiming land as lakhiraj—Nature of right of—Decree—Effect.—Where the plaintiff sued for arrears of rent and the defendant, who claimed the land as lakhiraj, intervened, and the lower appellate Court declared the land to be mal land of the plaintiff, held, on a special appeal by the defendant, that, the interest claimed by the latter being only in the land and not in the subject-matter of the suit, the decree (if the plaintiff got one) would not be prejudicial to the defendant, and that the latter should not have been made a party. Consequently, the High Court set aside so much of the lower Appellate Court's judgment as decided the question of title against him. KATTYANEE DEBIA v. GRISH CHUNDER BANERJEE, 23 W. R. 168.

(100)—Remand for trial of particular issues—First Court allowing intervention—Registered tenants—Zemindar's sherishta.—In a rent suit, which a Munsif was trying after remand, he was held to have done wrong in admitting certain parties to intervene. (103)—Intervenor claiming rent of larger share of land—Party to suit.—Where an intervenor claimed, in a suit for rent, to receive the rents of a larger share of land of which plaintiff claimed all the rent, held that the intervenor was properly impleaded as a party to the suit. *KANHYE ROY v. (106)—Suit for possession, maintainability of, where both parties are lessees.—In a suit to recover possession of certain lands which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to them by virtue of a talooka putta granted by the zemindars, the defendants pleaded that the lands belonged to some third party under whom they held as tenants. The first and the lower appellate Courts held that the suit was not maintainable as the plaintiff and the defendants held under certain superior landholders. Held, in special appeal, that the suit would lie. When a plaintiff sues under a title given by a superior landholder, he is entitled, if that title is called

In such a case, if he brings a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, he may implead all the three as defendants, for he has no means of knowing which of the three is principal and which are assistants, so as to acquire possession not for themselves but for their employer. [R., 15 B. 685, 12 C.P.L.R. 52, 16 C.P.L.R. 154.] If we take the case of a single person ejecting another, and a suit brought to recover possession, it is not to be contended that the intention of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9, may be frustrated, by any private arrangement under which the ejector has acted, or consents to hold on behalf of some other person. As between him and such other person, his possession may be that of an agent, but to the former holder he is the dispossessor: possession derived from him cannot be superior to his, and (the right of suit being given in general terms) is equally subject as his to the result of proceedings taken within the prescribed six months. Even a declaration made by the ejector at the time of ouster, may not affect the case. He may name some person beyond the reach of the Court's process; or some one who, in fact, has given him no authority. The person ejected is not compelled to take the risk of suing such a defendant, much less of abandoning his suit against the immediate trespasser. If, indeed, he is satisfied that the active agent in ejecting him has been impelled by some one else, he may sue the latter. He may sue both; but the wrong-doer who has taken possession is the one from whom primarily the property is to be reclaimed. If a third party desire to maintain the expulsion as an act done on his behalf, it is for him to come forward and avow it. He may claim to be admitted as a defendant; but if he had himself a right to do what his agent has done, his right and his authority may be pleaded by the agent, and will be an effectual answer. The alleged owner or principal, therefore, is not a necessary party for the protection of the agent. The suit against the latter will fail if he acted on due authority where that authority is shown. In a suit for ejectment, if the space to be recovered is precisely defined by proper description, a mis-statement of its measurement in square yards may be treated as surplusage and of no consequence. Where under a contract between A and B, exclusive possession of immoveable property is given to A, he is the proper person to sue for possession under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. If, however, B desires to sue immediately on the possessory right, he should sue in A's name, though, for an injury to the reversion, he (B) may properly sue in his own name. VIRJIVANDAS MADHAVDAS v. (115)—Village community—Common land—Common rights—Separate rights—Conveyance of right to dig kunker.—Many of the rights of landholders in a village belong to them collectively, but, in regard to their several holdings, they are in a state of more or less perfect partition, and there is nothing to prevent each khewutdar from granting the right to enter and dig kunker upon his own distinct holding. But in regard to the common land, there is no separation. In this the property is blended, and the rights of the village proprietors as individuals can be asserted only in one way—by a claim for partition. None of the common proprietors can make any change without the approbation of all parties concerned. So, where plaintiff claimed the right to dig kunker in a village under a deed executed by 25 out of the 37 sharers therein, it was held that such rights could be claimed only in respect of the private lands of the khewutdars and could not be claimed in respect of the common land or any portion of it. MR. The suit was decreed by the first Court, but on appeal the lower appellate Court held that that person should be brought in as a defendant, and remanded the case for re-trial on the question of title between him and the plaintiffs. Held, that, although that person may not be an absolutely necessary party to the suit, he was a proper party, and the lower appellate Court was entitled to hold that his presence was necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, within the meaning of O. (149)—Mahomedan Law—Gift by father to son—Reservation of interest to father for life—Intention to affect succession ab intestato, deed of gift not vitiated by.—Although ordinarily a mere benami or ismfurzee title is simply a nominal title without interest, such a disposition by a donor where the transfer of the property, from its very nature, effected a legal transfer of it, would be simply the creation of a trust in his favour, and would, of course, leave the disposition ab intestato undisturbed. In the present case, a Mahomedan father transferred Company's paper to his son, reserving to himself for life the interest accruing on the said paper, his object being to give the son a larger share of his property than would come to him by succession ab intestato. It was sought to treat such transfer and its intention as evasive of the testamentary law of the Mahomedans and as inconsistent with their law of gifts. But the Judicial Committee observed that, in the absence of immoral or illegal purposes accompanying or prompting an act of disposition of property, a disposition which the law admits cannot be evasive of the law. The law of succession ab intestato applies only to the assets which constitute the succession. If the law allow alienation so as to defeat a succession, the question whether a subject of property is an asset or not raises simply the question whether the transfer of it is legally complete. The design to alter and so in one sense to defeat a succession by a disposition of property which the law allows is simply a design to conform to the law whilst working out an unforbidden design. It was also sought to be contended that a transfer of property by a donor in his life-time under the Mahomedan law, preserving not the dominion over the corpus of the property, nor any share of dominion over the corpus, but simply stipulating for and obtaining a right to the recurring produce during the transferor's life-time, would be an incomplete gift under the Mahomedan law. But the Judicial Committee held that, even assuming that the agreement for the reservation of the interest to the father for his life may possibly be treated as a condition repugnant to the whole enjoyment by the donee, the Mahomedan law would in such a case defeat, not the grant itself, but only the condition. NAWAB UMJAD ALLY KHAN v. Where there has been no acceptance, no cause of action can have arisen to the payee against the drawee. Nor is the legal relation between the drawer and the payee altered by a partial acceptance, the contract being in its nature indivisible; much less can any mere promise to pay part at a future time, in any way satisfy the payee's claim or postpone his right to reimbursement of his loss from the drawer. The payee in the above cases ought not to join the drawer and the drawee as defendants in the same suit, but he must sue the drawer alone. SHETH KHAN-DAS NARANDAS v. DAHIABAI, 3 B. 182.

(152)—Hundi—Dishonour—Notice—Right of purchaser to sue indorser alone.—A purchaser of a hundi on its being dishonoured is bound to present the same for payment within a reasonable time and give reasonable notice of dishonour, i.e., within the time within which it is ordinarily given according to the custom of the merchants and bankers of the district, not the immediate notice required by English law in cases of bills of exchange. The purchaser may sue his endorser alone and it is not absolutely necessary to implead the acceptor and drawer in the same suit. He does not lose his right of suit against the drawer and acceptor, if he does not sue them at once, as long as he sues within the time allowed by the law of limitation. GOPAL DASS v. (159)—Act X of 1859, s. 105—Provisions relating to auction purchasers not applicable to defaulting tenant purchasing his own tenure—Reg. VIII of 1819, ss. 8, 11, rights of auction purchaser when arises under—Benamidar, whether competent to sue for property.—Plaintiff having failed in his intervention in a suit for arrears of rent instituted by the defendant against certain ryots, brought this action for the purpose of getting his title declared to certain lands alleged by him to appertain to a howala tenure, which he had purchased at a sale held by the Collector under the provisions of s. 105, Act X of 1859. Finding that, as set up by the defendant, the plaintiff was a mere benamidar for the defaulting howaladar, and that the plaintiff had failed to establish his title to the land which he sued for, both the lower Courts dismissed the suit. On remand in special appeal, the lower appellate Court found that the howala tenure in question, was one which was liable to be brought to sale by virtue of certain express reservations to that effect contained in the original lease by which it was created, and that, therefore, the plaintiff as a purchaser of a tenure under the provisions of s. 105, Act X of 1859, was competent to get rid of all alienations and encumbrances made by the former tenant, and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. This decree was reversed by the High Court on the ground that plaintiff, as a mere benami purchaser for the defaulting howaladar, had no right whatsoever to maintain the suit, and that the benefit of the law relating to auction purchasers under s. 105, Act X of 1859, was one which the defaulting tenant himself could not claim before a Court of Justice. It is very improper to allow a tenant to commit default, and after purchasing the tenure in execution of a decree passed against himself, to come forward against a third party whose title had been created by himself, and to ask the Court to set aside that title, merely because he chooses to come in the garb of an auction purchaser. In case he has sold to a third party, he would be bound not only by the purchase of that party but also by all the bona fide leases under such party. Merely because benami usage is permitted by the Courts, it does not follow, as a necessary consequence, that the real owner should be permitted to keep himself aloof and to carry on litigation in the name of a person who has no interest whatsoever in that litigation so far as he himself is concerned. A mere benamidar is not entitled to maintain a suit for property in which he has no beneficial interest. Moreover the High Court was of opinion that there was nothing in the original lease by which the howal⁴ tenure was created, to show that the tenure was expressly reserved for sale for non-payment of rent, or, in other words, to show that the tenure was one of the description given in s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819. The contract was between the Zemindar and the howaladar, and plaintiff could have no right to come forward and ask for the enforcement of a privilege which was not reserved for his benefit and which did not, therefore, belong to him. MEHEROONISSA BIBEE v. (165)—Direction in will to keep properties in trust for several beneficiaries—Suit to recover entire trust properties, whether maintainable by some alone of the beneficiaries.—A suit was brought by two out of eleven beneficiaries under a Will, by which the testator directed that certain properties to be kept in trust and the rents realised therefrom be divided equally among the whole of his children and their heirs respectively for a declaration that certain properties were among the trust properties under the Will, and for recovery of possession of the same, on the ground that a certain compromise and the sales in pursuance of it, under which the defendant claimed, were contrary to the directions of the Will and the trust and therefore not binding upon them. The suit as brought was held to be not maintainable by the two plaintiffs alone. The properties would be vested in the trustees until their removal, and a suit demanding transfer of possession to the beneficiaries would have to be properly brought by all of them together. The plaintiffs, who were only two out of the eleven beneficiaries, could not seek to recover possession on behalf of all the other beneficiaries, unless the latter were also parties before the Court. Also, apart from any question of the form of the action, the alienations in question were binding on the plaintiffs and therefore neither of them had any cause of action. Per Subramania Ayyar, J. (dissentiente.) The mere fact of the plaintiffs having asked for larger relief than they were entitled to could not be taken to warrant the dismissal of the suit altogether. Plaintiffs were not precluded from suing in respect of their shares alone, since their claim fell within the class of cases in which one of the cestui que trustent may be entitled to sue the trustee and a third party jointly, but in which he will be bound to confine his suit to the specific matter in respect of which alone the third party is liable. PADMANABHA CHETTIAR v. (170)—Procedure—Right of suit—Party entitled to sue must sue—Agents.—All suits should be brought by the person or persons in whom the legal right of suit is vested, and not by agents in their own names. Where a suit is brought by the agents in their own names, then the whole procedure is vitiated. An objection taken to such procedure is an important one and it materially affects the regularity of procedure. In this case, the suit was dismissed and the costs of the whole litigation were borne by the plaintiffs. LALA MANOHUR DOSS v. KISHEN DYAL, 3 N.W.P. 175.

(173)—Person appointed by general power-of-attorney—Whether he could sue in his own name.—A person appointed under a general power-of-attorney cannot sue in his own name, and such suits should be brought in the name of the persons on whose behalf he has been appointed as attorney. CHOONNEE SOOKUL v. HUR PERSHAD, 1 N.W.P. 277.

(174)—Principal and agent—Right of agent to sue or be sued—General rule—Exceptions.—The general rule is that the principal and not the agent is the person to sue or be sued in any matter, either of contract or tort. When a contract is made by an agent in his own name, without disclosing that he is an agent in the matter, and nothing appears to prevent him from claiming to be principal, it may often be necessary for the safety of the defendant, that the agent should bring a suit on the contract in the character which he appears to have under the contract. Also where a person, who is agent in a matter, even on the face of the contract, may be personally liable in consequence of the contract, or of something arising out of it. In such a case he might well be sued as a defendant, even though the plaintiff knew he was merely an agent in the matter. Where the agent is himself interested in the matter or property which is the subject of the contract which he has entered into on behalf of another, it may be necessary that he should be a party to the suit, either as plaintiff or defendant, not because he was agent, but because he has this interest. WILKINSON v. (175)—Rent suit—Suing by agent—Tahsildar's right to sue for arrears of rent during predecessors time—Act X of 1859, s. 69—General authority to collect rents—Necessity of writing.—No one can be plaintiff except the person or persons who have the right to recover. The only effect of s. 69 of Act X of 1859, is to enable the person who is employed in the collection of rents to do that, as agent, which would otherwise have to be done by the plaintiff in person. A newly appointed Tahsildar stands precisely in the same position in respect of arrears of rent which accrued during the time of his predecessor, as he does in respect of rents which accrue during his own time. It is his duty to collect both, and he may take advantage of s. 69 of Act X of 1859 in respect of one, as well as of the other. Per Markby, J. Though it has been decided that a general sunnud to collect rents and sue for them must be stamped, there is no decision to the effect that a general authority to collect rents and sue for them must be in writing. MODHOO SOODUN SINGH v. The decree was sought to be executed against the firm. Held that if the decree was meant to be passed against the owner of the firm, it was illegal as it was passed against a person not only not present or properly represented, but dead at the time; if it was passed against the Gomashta, it could not be executed against the firm. PHOOL CHUND v. (179)—Sale to agent of firm—Suit by agent to establish right—Parties—Minors—Guardian ad litem.—A, in order to pay off a decree and other debts, sold the houses in dispute to the firm of which the plaintiff was Gomashta. B, another creditor of A, attached the said houses, whereupon the plaintiff intervened and preferred a claim; the claim was dismissed and the plaintiff was referred to a regular suit. Then the plaintiff, as Gomashta of the firm (the members of which were minors), sued on behalf of the firm both A and B to establish the right to the houses sold to him. Held that the lower Court having to decide on rights alleged by the plaintiff to belong to minors, for whom he stated that he acted as a trustee, ought not to have passed its decision without making those persons parties, appointing a guardian ad litem to represent the minors; and, in deciding on the issue as to the validity of the sale, the Court should endeavour to ascertain whether the money paid in satisfaction of the decree against A was or was not paid by the plaintiff out of the monies of, or on behalf of, the minors. GOBIND DASS v. indigo, alleged to have been executed by the defendant, and addressed to a previous manager of the said concern, now deceased, the plaintiff did not disclose that G had any interest of his own in the suit, nor was the kabooleut in terms with him personally. Held that G could not maintain the action in his own name. GLASCOTT v. (182)—Frame of suit—Suit against corporate body—Suit against agent—Error in merits of case—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 350—Addition of parties—Discretion—New party likely to be affected by result of suit.—A suit against a corporate body, not brought in its corporate capacity, but through an agent, is bad in form. Where the decree of the Lower Court is one which makes a party liable who is clearly not liable, there is an error in the decision which affects the substantial merits of the case. Under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859, it is not imperative on the Court to admit parties to a record. It is in the discretion of the Court to do so or not. A Court is justified in refusing an application to make a person party to a suit, if that person is likely to be affected by the result of the suit. NUBEEN CHUNDER PAUL v. CECIL STEPHENSON, 15 W.R. 534.

(183)—Party to suit—Servant of real defendant—Decree, Proper form of.—Where, before the lower appellate Court, plaintiff in the memorandum of appeal committed the error of mentioning the servant of the real defendant as the defendant and the Judge failed to notice the irregularity, the High Court remanding the case held, that the memorandum of appeal may be returned for amendment or rejected. Where the decree did not specify the relief granted but merely repeated the judgment "that the appeal may be decreed," held that that was not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. HURSARUN SINGH v. (184)—Insolvency—Assignment to trustees for benefit of creditors—Validity of assignment, suit valuation—Suit by trustees in insolvency to set aside attachment—Joinder of parties.—An insolvent debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of creditors, who may assent to the conditions of the assignment, and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment-creditor. Such an assignment may be made to trustees, and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment. It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor; but semble, the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to the assignment. Nor is it invalid, if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, etc., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised only when the other assets are sufficient to discharge the primary objects of the trust. Nor is it invalid, if it contain a power for the trustees to continue the business, if the power so given is ancillary to winding up the business and realizing the assets of the estate. Nor is it invalid, if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of the trustees. The question of intention of the debtor in executing such an assignment is a question of fact rather than of law, and, in determining this question, the condition and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered. The valuation for stamp duty of a suit brought by the trustees in insolvency to set aside an attachment, should be calculated on the value of the lien claimed by the judgment-creditor. All the creditors of an insolvent need not be joined as parties to a suit by the trustees in insolvency to set aside an attachment. TRUSTEES OF PALMER'S ESTATE v. COLONEL BOMGARTNER, 3 Agra 104.

(185)—Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vic. C. 21)—Suit to recover money from defendant who has been adjudicated an insolvent—Official Assignee not to be made a party—There is nothing in the Insolvency Act, which enables a suit brought by the plaintiff, against a person, who, shortly before the suit, having been adjudicated an insolvent under the Indian Insolvent Act and his estate being vested in the Official Assignee, to be continued against the Official Assignee, for the Official Assignee was not a proper party. The Official Assignee's name should not be placed on the record as a defendant. If his name had been wrongly placed there and judgment was entered against him for the sum claimed, to be paid out of the insolvent's estate, such a judgment would work manifest injustice and prevent the beneficial operation of the Insolvency sections of the Act, because a judgment of this kind, as against the Official Assignee, comes to this, that he is to pay the money out of the estate in his hands, and that the plaintiff is entitled to get the whole of his claim and that it is to be paid in full, if the whole estate of the insolvent is sufficient to pay him. Part of the purchase-money having been paid, by the father, for the balance due, mortgaged the property purchased and executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the vendor. The money due not having been paid, the vendor instituted a suit upon the bond against the father personally and as the guardian of his daughter. He did not, however, ask for any relief against the mortgaged property. The father admitted his liability to pay the debt and a personal decree was passed against him alone. He then preferred an appeal to the Sudder Adawlut Court on the ground that his daughter ought to have been joined in the decree, and, in the course of the appeal, entered into a compromise with the plaintiff to the effect that the plaintiff should proceed against the mortgaged property in the first instance and levy from the appellant only the balance of amount that might become due thereafter. The Sudder Adawlut Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise, thus varying the decree of the first Court. Upon the daughter attaining her majority, and being married, she and her husband applied to the High Court, which had come into existence by that time, for a review of the decision of the Sudder Adawlut Court. Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction to re-hear. Held also that the compromise was tainted with the vice of having been made without the party who was principally affected by it being sufficiently represented and was inconsistent with the father's admission of liability to pay. The appeal to the Sudder Court by the father was really an appeal against his co-defendant, his own daughter. The Court exercised no control over the compromise. Consequently, the compromise decree did not bind the daughter and she was entitled to obtain a review of the decree based upon the compromise. UNNODO DABEE v. MARIA LOUISA STEVENSON, 22 W.R. 290, P.C. [Appr., 10 C.L.J. 420=13 C.W.N. 1197=2 Ind. Cas. 129; R., 31 C. 111.]

See LIMITATION ACT, 1908, s. 22.

(1)—Adding parties not interested in the suit—Practice.—It is not the practice of the Indian Courts, even if they have the power, to add parties to the record who are not interested in the suit. HAJI JAKARIA v. HAJI CASIM, 1 B. 496.

(2)—Parties—Who can be joined as defendants.—Those persons only should be joined as defendants in a suit, whose claims are necessary to be taken into consideration before deciding on the plaintiff's title. FERGUSON v. THE GOVERNMENT, 9 W.R. 158.

(3)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73—Object of Code—Discretion.—The object of the Civ. Pro. Code is to simplify and shorten litigation in Courts. S. 73 of Act VIII of 1859 is expressly enacted to avoid needless litigation, and there are cases in which the Judge exercises the discretion vested in him under that section, even if the plaintiff omits to ask him for it, as for instance where it is necessary to make plaintiff's co-parceners defendants. MOTEE CHUND DOSS v. MOORULEE DHUR DOSS, 15 W.R. 432.

(4)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 73—Addition of parties.—S. 73 must be construed liberally, and when necessary adopted cy pres to the requirements of the High Court in its ordinary jurisdiction. Where in a suit a preliminary decree has been passed and the matter has been referred to the Commissioner's office to have accounts taken and property sold, and therefore no final decree can be made until after his report has been submitted to the Court, the Court is competent to add fresh parties. VAKATCHAND LAKMICHAND v. THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL, 8 B.H.C., O.C., 96. [R., 8 B. 323.]

(5)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73.—Where there is no right of suit in the plaintiff, the suit should be dismissed and the introduction under this section of another person as plaintiff cannot cure this defect. A decree in favour of both the plaintiffs does not admit of execution. SUBBAIYAR v. KRISTNAIYAR, 1 M. 383. [F., 18 M. 250, 20 B. 537; Appr., 11 A. 104=A.W.N. 1888, 287, 32 C. 1060=9 C.W.N. 847=2 C.L.J. 396; R., 8 M. 175, 10 A. 425=A.W.N. 1888, 157, L.B.R. 1872-1892, 617.]

(6)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73—Making third parties defendants.—S. 73, Act VIII of 1859, does not enable third parties not likely to be affected by the result to come into a suit, and raise new questions which do not properly arise. PADMALOHAN SEN v. LAL CHAND GUPTA, 1 B.L.R., S.N., 26=10 W.R. 283. [F., 3 B.L.R., A.C., 23.]

(7)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73—Scope—S. 73, Act VIII of 1859, enables a Court to add to the list of plaintiffs or defendants any persons in whose absence the subject-matter or the claim cannot be fully investigated and disposed of, or who are likely when added as parties to be affected by the result of the investigation and determination of the question in the cause. NGA THAYA v. MIKHAN MHAW, 5 B.L.R. 371=13 W.R. 443.

(8)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73—Discretion of Court in adding defendants under, not to be interfered with unless unjudicial or wrong.—In this case, the defendant purchased, at an auction-sale in execution of a decree held by Government, the right and interest of the judgment debtor in certain lands. The present plaintiff appeared in the execution proceedings, and claimed the land under a prior sale from the judgment-debtor, but his claim was disallowed. He then instituted this suit to establish title, and got a decree from the lower Court. On appeal it was urged that the suit was incomplete in its frame, as the Government had not been made a party, although both the lower Courts were specially prayed to add the Government as a defendant under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859; but it was held that the Court has clearly a discretion as to adding or not adding defendants under the said s. 73, and the exercise of such a discretion cannot be interfered with by the appellate Court unless there has been an exercise of it manifestly unjudicial and wrong. In the present case, the lower Court could not be said to have wrongly exercised its discretion in not having made the Government a party. The plaintiff sought no relief against Government. The suit was quite complete without the Government, and the Government was not necessarily affected by any decree made. GYARAM SEAL v. ISSUR CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 2 W.R. 158.

(9)—Joinder of plaintiff—Consent—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 32, 34.—No person can be added as a plaintiff without his consent; the proper course is to make a party, objecting to be added as a plaintiff, a defendant. [R., 9 A. 486=A.W.N. 1887, 133.] Under s. 34, Civ. Pro. Code, all objections for want of parties or for joinder of parties who have an interest in the suit, should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases, before the first hearing. UMA SUNDARIDASI v. RAMJI HALDAR, 7 C. 242=9 C.L.R. 13. [Cons., 156 P.R. 1889, F.B.]

(10)—Addition of parties—C.F.C., 1877, s. 32.—No party should be added either as plaintiff or defendant in a suit unless he has, in either of such capacities, an identity or community of interest with that party in the litigation on whose side he is to be ranged, in the questions directly arising out of and incident to the original cause of action. Where, therefore, two persons claiming adversely to one another as heirs of the same person, deceased, filed two suits against the same defendant, and each of them was, on his application, made a defendant in the other suit, held that, as the priority of rights of these plaintiffs inter se was not in issue in either suit, and the presence of the added defendants was not necessary to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suits, such addition of parties was improper. NARAINI KUAR v. DURJAN KUAR, NARAINI KUAR v. PIAREY LAL, 2 A. 738. (7 W.R. 202, 8 W.R. 15, 10 W.R. 369=3 B.L.R., A.C., 28, 4 C. 355, F. and Appl.) [R., 8 A. 91, 10 A. 223, F.B., 118 P.R. 1890, 5 O.C. 94, 2 L.B.R. 246.]

(11)—Dismissal or addition of parties—Revenue Court, power of—Act XVIII of 1873 (N.W.P. Rent Act), s. 106—Civ. Pro. Code (1877), s. 32—Although the provisions of s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code, (1877) have not been declared applicable by the N. W. P. Rent Act to the procedure of Revenue Courts, still a Revenue Court, whether of first instance or of appeal, does not act illegally in allowing an amendment of the plaint; and the addition of parties, where the same is required for the ends of justice, is consonant to judicial practice, and not repugnant to the provisions of the Rent Act. SHIB GOPAL v. BALDEO SAHAI, 2 A. 264.

(12)—Plaintiff, addition of, after commencement of suit—Bona fide mistake, institution of suit through—Code of Civil Procedure, s. 27.—The original plaintiffs claimed title to the property in suit under a tamliknam executed in their favour by their father, B. The defendant denied that the plaintiffs had any title to the property in suit; he did not plead that the tamliknama did not cover the property in suit and did not at any time ask for an issue as to the effect of the tamliknama. In the course of the arguments, the defendant contended that the plaintiffs had acquired no title to the property in suit from their father, firstly, because the property in suit was not included in the tamliknama, and secondly, because possession had not passed upon the execution of that document. B then presented a petition that he might be added as a plaintiff, and his sons made the same request. Upon the facts of the case, the Court held that the suit was commenced as it was through a bona fide mistake on the part of the plaintiffs within the meaning of s. 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held further, that the case fell within s. 27 which allows an addition or substitution of a plaintiff "at any stage of the case" and that B was rightly added as plaintiff. ABDUL WAHID KHAN v. Code, 1877, limits the defendant's rights to object in respect of want of parties, to any time before the first hearing, but the second passage of s. 32 leaves it open to the plaintiff "at any time" before the decree to obtain permission to add new parties. Even in the case of defendants, cases might occur in which s. 34 would not prevent even the defendant from objecting to the want of a proper party after the first hearing, viz., where after the first hearing and before decree a co-parcener or remainderman or reversioner is born, or where a woman (who is a party) is married to a man who is not a party to the suit. The objection did not exist at or before the first hearing, and therefore could not have been made or waived by the defendant, and if he made it at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence, he would have satisfied the spirit of s. 34. RAND N. The power given to the appellate Court, by combining ss. 32 and 582 of the Civ. Pro. Where a plaintiff sued in the Court of B, for the recovery of certain lands and the defendants objected that the lands in question were not in the District of B. Held that the Court had power, under s. 14, Act VIII of 1859, before it proceeded to try the suit, to enquire and determine whether the lands were in B or not. The rejection of a plaint under the same section cannot give jurisdiction to a Court which does not otherwise possess it. HURRONATH ROY v. R.W. SCOTT, B.L.R. Sup. 636, F.B. = 7 W.R. 200.

The power to add parties must be exercised with reference to the interests which those parties have at the time when the addition is being considered. It is impossible to hold that a suit by a benamidar can, to no extent, be properly instituted, although it may be partially defective. Where a benamidar sued and afterwards the assignees were brought in, as plaintiffs under s. 32, the joinder was legal. BHOLA PERSAD v. RAM LALL, 24 C. 34. (6 C. 373, D.) The plaintiff alleged that he had purchased the property with his own money in the name of his son when the son was 2 or 3 years old, that he had remained all along in possession, that when he left for Mecca, he left the title deeds with his son and entrusted him with the management of his affairs, and that the son fraudulently refused to give back the title deeds. The son did not appear, but two persons who alleged that they were mortgagees from the son were made parties and they contended that the son was the real and beneficial owner of the property. These added defendants were not in possession of the property. Held that the lower Court did not exercise a sound discretion in allowing such parties to be added as defendants in the cause. The criterion in cases of benamiee purchases in India is to see from what source the money required for the purchase came. Where a father makes a purchase in the name of his infant son aged 2 or 3 years, and there is no suggestion that the latter has any separate funds of his own, the presumption is always in favour of the father that the purchase is benamiee for him. *AKBUR ALI v. Plaintiff first instituted this suit as guardian of her minor daughter; but, finding that she had a personal right in the estate claimed, and that she was likely to be affected by the result of the suit, she applied to be made a co-plaintiff, and her application was complied with. Held that the character of the suit was not changed by the amendment, nor did it affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, and that the lower Courts had rightly arrayed the plaintiff amongst the parties to the suit under s. 77 of Act VIII of 1859. OKHORA SOOT v. (48)—Suit for specific performance of contract of sale of land—Subsequent purchaser intervening and made defendant.—Plaintiffs sued to enforce the performance of a contract of sale of land, alleging that the defendant had received the consideration-money but had refused to execute the conveyance. A third party intervened alleging a subsequent registered conveyance of the same property to him. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, but was decreed against both the parties by the lower appellate Court. Held, that the placing of the intervenor as a defendant upon the record and the deciding of an issue between him and the other parties to the suit, was wholly irregular. The decision should therefore be so modified as to strike out the name of the intervenor from the decree and to reduce the decree to its proper dimensions as a decree simply in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant for the execution of the conveyance. But the intervenor would not be entitled to his costs as he brought this result by his own ill-judged intervention. GUDADHUR CHATTERJEE v. RAJ KRISTO ROY, 13 W.R. 73.

Plaintiffs subsequently put in this application to amend the proceedings by adding the defendant's ship also as an additional defendant in the suit. Held, such amendment was permissible according to the practice and procedure of the High Court where it is often usual to make the ship and her owners defendants in cases of damage arising out of collision. There was no room for the contention of the defendants that in a proper case the initial proceedings cannot be so amended as to bring them into the form which they would have assumed in the first instance had it not been for the supposition that the ship was not amenable to the process of the Court. The word "defendant" used in s. 28 of the Code was held to include a vessel which, for the purpose, should be deemed as invested with a persona, and the amendment sought for by way of adding the ship as a defendant along with its owners who had alone been impleaded as defendants on the record at the time the plaint was filed, was therefore allowable. THE BOMBAY AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED v. The Recorder submitted the case for the opinion of the High Court adding his own opinion that it was competent to him to convert the suit into one for general administration of the estate. But the High Court answered that the Recorder had no power to transform the suit into a general administration-suit. Plaintiff was suing for his own share and not for general administration of the estate of the deceased. At the hearing of the suit, if all persons claiming some share or interest in the portion for which the plaintiff was suing, were not found to be parties to the suit, the Court may, by virtue of s. 73, Act VIII of 1859, order them to be made parties. *OH LING TEE v. He must show that the conduct of the suit is not in proper hands or that action is being taken by the parties, who purport to represent him, in some way which is prejudicial to his interests. In an administration suit, it is extremely undesirable that individual creditors should be added as parties, unless they show some very strong reason that the person, who has filed the suit on their behalf, is not conducting it in the proper way. It is not enough that they should be willing to bear their own costs. There is considerable delay caused by a fresh party coming in, and the costs of other parties consequently are increased. VASANJI TRICAMJI & CO. v. ISMAILBHAI SHIVJI, 11 Bom. L.R. 1054=34 B. 420.

I, r. 10, sub r. (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable only to cases where it is established that the suit has been improperly instituted through a bona fide mistake, but such mistake may be one of fact or of law. Three of the five heirs of the testator, viz., A, B. and C, after the decision by the lower Court as to the invalidity of the will in a suit for construction of the will, and during the pendency of an appeal against that decision, instituted a suit against the representatives in interest of the executor and the other heirs for accounts. After the suit for construction of the will was withdrawn, owing to adverse decision of the question by a Full Bench, A and D, one of the shobaitis under the will, after obtaining letters of administration, applied in the account suit that they be substituted or added as parties and that B and C might either be removed from the suit or transferred to the category of defendants. Held, that A and D were to be added to and substituted for the parties, and they were entitled to maintain the suit. Although an act done by a party, who afterwards becomes administrator, to the prejudice of the estate, is not made good by subsequent administration, yet if the act is for the benefit of the state, the order relates back, so that, by virtue of the appointment, the administrator is able to recover against such persons as have interfered with the estate, and thereby to prevent it from being prejudiced and despoiled. Subsequently, certain persons, alleging that they held a dur-mokurruree under the vendor, before the alleged sale, intervened in the suit and were added as defendants under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859. The right to khas possession being the main issue tried by both the lower Courts, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that he was not entitled to possession after the grant of the dur-mokurruree by the vendor. Held that, although it was prima facie unnecessary for the intervenors to appear in the suit at all yet, as the subsequent conduct of the case had shown that the plaintiff really did intend that they should be affected by the decree, the High Court in special appeal could not, at that stage of the proceedings, remove the intervenors from the list of defendants, or treat the suit as if they had not been made parties and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree as against the original defendant-vendor only without prejudice to the rights of the intervenors, the dur-mokurrureedars. KEWUL SAHOO v. On appeal to the High Court, held that, as the co-sharers made their application during the hearing of the suit, i.e., on the 24th January 1899, to be allowed to adopt what the plaintiffs had done and to be made co-plaintiffs, the order of the lower Appellate Court allowing the application, which had been refused by the Court of first instance, should be treated as operating nunc pro tunc, and that the other sharers should be regarded as having been made parties to the suit when the application was made; that the delay between 24th January, 1889, when the application was made, and the decision of the Court of appeal, was attributable to the act of the Court, and the plaintiffs should therefore not suffer from it. RAMKRISHNA MORESHWAR v. (80)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 73, 246—Limitation—Addition of defendant.—The proprietrix of an estate divided it into seven shares, giving two to each of her two sons, one to each of her two daughters and retaining the seventh for herself. Her share was afterwards increased according to the provisions of Mahomedan Law by a portion of what had been given to one of the sons who died. Subsequently, her rights in the estate were sold in the execution of a decree and bought by B. The rights were eventually purchased from B's vendee by one K in the name of his two sons, and K brought a suit in the name of his two sons against certain parties who held the whole estate in zuripeshgi from the original proprietrix and her family, but obtained a decree for one-seventh only giving him possession conditionally on his payment to the zuripeshgidars in possession his proportion of the loan. The decree was confirmed on appeal and K was made liable for the costs of the defendants in respect of whom his claim was dismissed. One P who had previous to this obtained a decree against K's father took out execution against K and applied for sale of his rights in the above mentioned estate. K's objection that the suit whereby he got possession of the share of the estate was in the name of his sons was overruled and the decree-holder purchased the property in Court auction. Subsequently one of the successful defendants in K's suit for possession of the estate to whom costs had been allowed applied for execution and the objection by P's son under s. 246, Civ. Pro. Code, having been summarily rejected for want of prosecution by the claimant, the estate which K had obtained was once again sold in execution and one A bought the same. P's son, the claimant, then brought the present suit within one year to set aside the sale, and to have his own title declared. The suit was brought against the purchaser A and against the representatives of the zuripeshgidars, but on the petition of L, one of the female heirs of the original proprietrix, her name was added to the list of defendants. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree and on appeal the lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff's case was barred by limitation, in respect of L, the supplementary defendant, on the ground of non-possession within 12 years, and that therefore no right remained to K that could be sold. Held (1) that, as the case presented under s. 246, Civ. Pro. Code, was not prosecuted by the plaintiff, the defendant was not prevented from pleading that whatever title the plaintiff might have had at sometime previous, that title had been extinguished by his having had no possession for the 12 years preceding the suit; (2) that L was properly added as defendant as she was interested in the result of the suit; (3) that the plaintiff's right which he derived from K, was not a right to sue, but the right to execute a decree obtained against K, and sixty years' limitation would not apply RAM SURUN SINGH v. (81)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 27, 32—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, s. 22—Suit by manager of firm—Addition of other partner as co-plaintiff on objection taken by defendant.—A suit was brought on the 21st November 1884 to recover a debt due to the firm of K.S. The suit was based on a document dated 1st December 1881. In the plaint, the plaintiff was described as "the firm of K. S. by its manager S.S." The defendant objected that the plaint did not disclose the names of all the partners in the firm of K.S., that one M was a partner in the firm, and that he should also be joined as a co-plaintiff. M was accordingly made a co-plaintiff on the 27th January 1888. It was then contended, on behalf of the defendant, that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 22 of the Limitation Act. Held that the case was one of misdescription and not of non-joinder as the action was brought in the name of the firm by the manager, and the manager did not sue in his own name, that when the defendant objected that the name of the other partner should be disclosed, the Court should not reject the suit under s. 32, Civ. Pro. Code, but should order that the new party be added, and that, as the other partner was added as a co-plaintiff and as it was found that S.S. was entitled to sue for the firm, the addition of M's name came under the provisions of s. 27, Civ. Pro. Code. KASTURCHAND BAHIRAVDAS v. The same will be the result where a Judge acting under s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code, adds a person as a necessary plaintiff after the period of limitation for a suit by him alone or with others has expired. S. 22 of the Limitation Act, 1877, would clearly apply to the right of suit of the person so added, and the suit could not be maintained without him. Limitation cannot deprive the Court of its power to act under s. 32, but the Court's power to add a party is a different matter from its duty to dismiss the suit as barred by limitation. IMAM-UD DIN v. The case may be different if there was any contest between the deceased plaintiff and those defendants. The primary question in such cases must be taken to be what are the substantive rights of the parties and whether the right of any one of them survives to the others. The law of procedure must then be so adjusted as to give effect to the rights in controversy, and substantive rights cannot be allowed to be affected by any universal rule to the effect that a defendant cannot be recognised as the representative of the plaintiff or vice versa (25 B. 606, 2 C. 997, 15 M.L.J. 142, R.) Where the lower Court refused to allow the defendants to be substituted in the place of a deceased plaintiff, whose legal representatives they were, on the ground that it had no power to do so: Held, that the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it of bringing on record the heirs of the deceased plaintiff, and that the High Court could, under s. 115, Civ. (1)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 32—Striking off of name of party-defendant, to be done only before first hearing of suit.—Under the second clause of s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code, which relates to the addition and transmutation of parties, the discretion given to the Court is one unlimited in point of time and not requiring that the Court should be moved thereto by any of the parties. But in ordering, under the provisions in the first paragraph of that section, "that the name of any party, whether as plaintiff or defendant, improperly joined, be struck out," the Court must look to the three conditions precedent to the striking out which appear from the section viz.:—first, there must be an application by one party or the other, secondly, the suit must not have progressed beyond the first hearing, and thirdly, the Court must be satisfied, that the party had been improperly joined. So, where such striking out of the name of a party has not taken place on or before the first hearing, such name could not be properly struck out afterwards. ABBASI BEGAM v. IMDADI JAN, 18 A. 53=A.W.N. 1895, 156.

(2)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 73—Parties—Power of Appellate Court to strike out and add.—There is certainly nothing in the provisions of s. 73 of the Civ. Pro. (3)—Suit for possession by Hindu widow—Death of plaintiff—Co-plaintiffs, as representatives—Suit, abatement of—Survival of cause of action—Irregularity—Consent of parties cures—Judgment written by Judge who heard case—Pronouncement by successor—Validity of judgment.—On the death of the plaintiff in a suit for possession by a Hindu widow as heir to her deceased husband, two persons, as her legal representatives, were made co-plaintiffs. Held that the suit would not abate, the cause of action being one which, from its very nature, survived on plaintiff's death. Held further, that, although it was irregular to allow the two co-plaintiffs to be brought on record as legal representatives, the irregularity was cured by the consent of the parties, because it was for their advantage that the case should go on to trial and that the co-plaintiffs should be left in possession of any decision in the suit which they might obtain against the defendants and should be left to settle the questions arising between themselves in other proceedings. A judgment written by the Judge who heard the case, but pronounced by his successor in office, is not invalid. MUSSAMUT PARBUTTY v. MUSSAMUT HIGGIN, 17 W.R. 475. (4)—Defendant dead at time of suit—Suit not to go on against dead man—Fresh proceedings—Written statement from person not party to suit—Impleading party against whom no relief sought.—As soon as it is proved that a defendant was dead at the time when a plaint was filed, the Court ought to refuse to proceed further in that suit and leave plaintiff to begin de novo against the person against whom alone he could legally move. A Court is not at liberty to receive a written statement in a suit from any one not a party to it, or to permit him to appear at the hearing to contest plaintiff's demand. Further it ought not to allow introduction into a suit of a party against whom no relief is sought. MOHARANEE SURNO MOYEE v. BYKUNT CHUNDER MUSTOFOE, 25 W.R. 17. [R., 5 M. 52.]

A party sued in a representative character is not necessarily a party within the meaning of s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code for all purposes, and irrespective of the nature of the representative character in which such person is a party. (18 W.R. 185 = 11 B.L.R. 149, P.C.

The judgment-debtor died after the proclamation and before sale. The sale, however, was conducted without the legal representatives of the deceased being brought on record. Subsequently, the Administrator-General having assumed the management of the estate of the judgment debtor applied to be brought on record and to have the sale set aside. Held that the sale was not valid. The only thing sold was the right of a dead man which passes no property, as the dead man had no right at the time of the sale, his rights being then in his legal representatives, and their rights were not sold or THIRUTHIPALLI RAMAN MENON*, 20 M. 51.

(12)—Appeal—Death of respondent—Procedure—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 368.—The Civ. Pro. Code, makes no provision for the procedure to be followed in the case of the death of a respondent in an appeal. By reason of s. 582 of the Code, the procedure laid down in s. 368 must be applied in the case of the death of a respondent. The appellant, like a plaintiff, is to be at liberty to select any person whom he may think fit, as the proper person to defend the appeal. No person other than the person selected by the appellant has a right to force himself into the proceedings and to claim to have his name entered as representative of the deceased respondent, against the appellant's consent. LAKSHMIBHAI v. BALKRISHNA, 4 B. 654. [F., 8 C. 440=10 C.L.R. 437; R., 9 B. 151, 8 M. 300, 7 A. 693, F.B., 10 A. 223, F.B., 13 B. 22, 19 M.L.J. 33=4 M.L.T. 227, D., 10 B. 663.]

(13)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 32, 368—Death of respondent pending appeal—Rival claims to represent deceased—Powers of Court.—The Court has the same power to make parties to an appeal as it has to make parties to a suit. Therefore, though it is true that the Court must place on the record the person indicated by the appellant as the representative of a deceased respondent, yet, where there appears a substantial doubt whether the person indicated by the appellant is the representative of a deceased respondent or a representative for all purposes connected with the matters in litigation, and a person other than the person indicated lays claim to the representative character and on good prima facie grounds, and where, if he be not allowed to join, the interests of the person entitled to the estate of the deceased may be prejudiced, the Court ought to proceed under s. 32 to make him a party to the appeal. ATHIYAPPA v. AYANNA, 8 M. 300. [Diss., 10 A. 223, F.B., 10 A.W.N. 21; R., 13 B. 22, 26 M. 230=12 M.L.J. 368, 4 M.L.T. 227, 19 M.L.J. 33.]

(14)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 368, 372—Respondent dying during pendency of appeal—Right of representatives to be brought on record—Extent of rights of appellant.—The provisions of s. 368 of the Civ. Pro. Code, generally extend to appeals, and the appellant may choose his own respondent as the representative of one deceased. The rule in s. 368, however, should be taken to have been intended for the case in which the death, and the death only, of the defendant, constitutes the change in the circumstances. So, where there has not only been the death of the respondent, but also an alleged prior conveyance by him of the property awarded to him by the decree appealed against, the case becomes one of an assignment or creation of an interest pending the appeal, plus the death of the assignor; and so embraces a fact more than that contemplated by s. 368. In such a case, s. 372, containing the more general or residual rule, is alone sufficiently inclusive and must therefore be applied. Generally, it is the plaintiff who chooses his allegations and the persons whom he desires to make responsible. He is looked to as the person to take the requisite steps for continuing the suit against persons who might have become newly responsible. The same reasons would apply to an appellant who, however, may only determine who shall be the respondent, but not that any particular person shall not be a respondent. The choice of respondents made by the appellant may be erroneous or defective through ignorance or fraud and the real representative of the original respondent cannot justly be refused an opportunity of maintaining the decision sought by the appeal to be upset. RAJARAM BHAGWAT v. JIBAI, 9 B. 151. [F., 16 B. 27; R., 20 B. 167, 22 A. 231=A.W.N. 1900, 79, 27 B. 31, 19 M.L.J. 33; D., 7 O.C. 78.]

XXII, r. 11], 587 [= s. 108]—Plaintiff respondent dying pending appeal—Rival legal representatives—Power of Appellate Court to determine who is the true legal representative.—Pending a second appeal concerning a claim for declaration of title to immoveable property, and for possession and mesne profits thereof, the plaintiff respondent died, and his widow was, on her own application, substituted as his legal representative; and the defendants-appellants applied to have the father of the deceased substituted as such representative, alleging that he and not the widow was the true heir and legal representative of the deceased. The father did not object to such proposed substitution, and both parties admitted that either the widow alone or the father alone can be such representative; it was held by the Full Bench (Mahmood J. dissenting) (7 A. 693, 9 A. 447, 4 B. 654, 8 C. 440=10 C.L.R. 437, 2 A. 738, 8 M. 300, R.) (a) that s. 32 of the Code did not apply to a case like this (8 M. 300, Diss.); (b) that the latter portion of s. 582 did not limit the words of the earlier section so as to make only s. 368 applicable to the case; (c) that ss. 365, 366 and 367, having regard to the words "as nearly as may be" and "as far as may be" in s. 582, may be applied, and in any event analogically, to the present case, to enable the real legal representative of the deceased to be brought on the record; (d) that, whatever view of s. 582 might be taken, there was still an inherent power in a Court of record to ascertain whether or not it has before it the proper parties to a first or second appeal, if the question substantially raised; and (e) that the question as to whether the father or the widow was the legal representative should, either before or at the hearing of the appeal, and as a preliminary point, be ascertained and determined for the purpose of the prosecution of the appeal. Held by Mahmood, J., (diss.)—(a) that the defendants-appellants must in this case be treated as plaintiffs, and the deceased plaintiff-respondent as a defendant, and therefore as there was no question of the death of a plaintiff in the case, ss. 363 to 367 had no application; (b) that s. 368 read with ss. 582, 587 was fully applicable, and therefore on the application of the appellant, the Court should enter the name of any person whom he desires to implead, as the legal representative of the deceased respondent; (c) that, under s. 32 which also applied to the case, the widow was entitled to be on the record as the legal representative; (d) that there is no authority in the Code either to require or permit the decision of disputes as to the legal

Code, enables the plaintiff in a suit to have the representatives of a deceased sole defendant placed on the record, so that he may continue his suit against them, but, there is no section in the Code which provides for the representatives of a sole defendant deceased being placed on the record at their own request, and, therefore, s. 582 can supply no such procedure in the case of the death of a sole respondent in an appeal. An application, therefore, put in by the representatives of such a deceased sole respondent, is liable to be dismissed on the ground that it is not one authorised by the Civ. Pro. Code. BAIJAVAR AND MAGAN DAVLAT v. HATHISINGH KESRISINGH, 9 B. 56. [R., 7 A. 693=A.W.N. 1885, 169, F.B., 19 M.L.J. 33.]

deceased appellant, and an ex parte order was made granting the application. Objection, however, having been taken at the appeal that, as under s. 365 of the C.P.C., 1882, no application was made by any person who was the real legal representative to have his name entered on the record in place of the deceased appellant, the appeal must abate. Under s. 366 of the Code, it was held that such objection must prevail. By appointment, the administrator could not be deemed to have in any way become the representative of the deceased person but was merely the custodian of the property in existence and in hand, for a time, until the rightful owner appeared or the property was sold under the section. MALAPA v. The plaint was subsequently amended by making a Mr. H, the then Executive Engineer, a defendant, who was described as the Executive Engineer of P.W.D. of Jajpur. When that was done, the suit was within time. After the expiry of the period of limitation, the Secretary of State for India in Council was made a party and Mr. H was still retained on record and the plaintiff asked for a decree against him and the Government, both or either of them. Under these circumstances, it was held that the addition of the Secretary of State for India in Council was not a rectification or substitution of the original defendant, and for the purpose of limitation against the Secretary of State, the suit should be considered to have been instituted on the date when he was made a party. MANDARDHAR AITCH v. S. 77 of Act X of 1859 distinctly lays this down to be the only point for enquiry as between a plaintiff and an intervenor, and, if this point is not established in favour of the latter, he has got no locus standi in Court. The Judge has jurisdiction to allow an appeal to be filed after the expiration of the prescribed period; while so, there is no reason why he could not exercise similar discretion in the matter of adding a fresh respondent to the record where the latter has been a party to the original suit. An error on a matter of stamp does not constitute a sufficient ground for appeal. It is a technical objection which does not affect the merits of the case, and therefore does not afford a reason for interfering with the decision of the Court below under s. 350 of the Code. SHOWDAMINEE DOSSEE v. I. r. 8 (1), new Code).*—S. 30, Civ. Pro. Code, authorizes some of the raiyats of a village to sue the proprietor of it on behalf of themselves and the other raiyats for a declaration of their general rights, and for an injunction restraining the proprietor from interfering with their enjoyment of those rights. In 1806, a certain village was granted to A by the East India Company subject to the customary rights and privileges of the raiyats which were embodied in Reg. I of 1908. But the deed of conveyance was not executed until 1819, when it was executed by the said Company to the executors of the Will of A, who died in 1810. In this deed, no reference was made to the rights and privileges of the raiyats. In 1868, defendant purchased the said village from its then legal owners. In 1889, plaintiffs instituted the present suit for themselves and on behalf of the other raiyats of the village to enforce their rights. The defendant contended that as no reference was made to those rights in the deed of conveyance of 1819, he was not bound by them. Held that the defendant ought to have made inquiry as to their rights, as the lands were in the occupation of the raiyats at the time of the conveyance of the village to the defendant. Having failed to do this, he took subject to such rights as the tenants had, just as if they were specially mentioned in the conveyance to him. Held, also, that as there had been no denial of plaintiff's right until shortly before the suit, it was not barred by limitation. AHMEDBHAY HABIBBHAY v. Code, is required, held, that such permission must be obtained prior to suit and cannot be given subsequently. Where the plaintiffs were suing as representatives of the residents of certain villages and had not obtained the permission of the Court under s. 30 of the Code to institute the suit, held, that the suit was not maintainable. HARADHON DASS v. (8)—Persons having common cause of action, institution of suit by—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 30—Decree declaring title of plaintiff—Perpetual injunction.—The plaintiffs were 208 in number and they filed the present suit under s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, under the following circumstances:—The plaintiffs were the hereditary priests attached to the plaintiff temple and they had the right to conduct their patrons to the temple, perform worship on their behalf and obtain remuneration for the services thus rendered. The defendants, who were the ministers of the idol issued certain rules which prohibited people from entering into certain sacred precincts within the temple, except on payment of certain fees. The plaintiffs alleged that the rules infringed their immemorial right of entering into the temple with their patrons and receiving the remuneration given to them and accordingly they brought the present suit for (1) a declaration that they were entitled to free access within the sacred chambers of the temple for purposes of worship and (2) for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their rights. The plea of the defendants was that there was no cause of action for the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs cannot sue jointly, that they had no right to obtain a declaratory decree under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act and that no injunction can be granted against them. Held, (1) that the suit was rightly brought under s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the plaintiffs having a common cause of action against the defendants who interfered with the immemorial rights of the plaintiffs by the promulgation of the rules; (2) that, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaratory decree, as the effect of the rules was a denial of their title to free access to the temple; (3) that the defendants had no authority to issue the rules in question; and (4) that the prayer of the plaintiffs in respect of perpetual injunction must also be granted. KALIDAS JIVRAM v. GORPARJA RAMHIRJI, 15 B. 309. [R., 33 C. 789=10 C.W.N. 581.]

(11)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 39—Suit for declaration by some of the worshippers at a temple—Omission to obtain leave to sue, not fatal to suit.—Some of several worshippers at a temple can maintain a suit for a declaration that the defendants are not the duly elected dharmakartas of the temple, and the Advocate-General is not a necessary party to such a suit. The only consequence of the course prescribed by s. 30 of the C.P.C. not having been followed is, that the judgment in the suit would not be binding on those whose names are not on the record. To obviate such a result, it is competent to the Court, with the view of adjudicating definitively and completely on the matter in dispute, to require an amendment of the plaint. The omission to apply under s. 30 of the Code is not by itself a ground for dismissing the suit, but, when the objection has been taken, the suit ought not to be allowed to proceed except on the terms of the plaint being amended, and the requisite leave under s. 30 being obtained. SRINIVASA CHARIAR v. there was no such question but a civil right fit for adjudication by the Civil Court. The meaning of s. 21 of Reg. II of 1827 is that the internal economy of a caste is not to be interfered with by the Courts, not that no possible matter of litigation in which a question of caste, usage or right or privilege may arise can be taken cognizance of. Also, such a suit could not be taken to be barred by time merely because the first act of intrusion by the defendant might have taken place prior to a certain period. There is no provision of the law of limitation which prevents the establishment of a right connected with worship or a religious institution merely because the first interference with it was more than a particular number of years before the institution of the suit. ANANDRAV BHIKAJI PHADKE v. A person not on record and not a Tengalai applied to the Court to compel the surviving defendant to carry out the provisions of the decree, claiming some interest in the temple: held, no permission had been given to the plaintiffs to sue for others having the same interest with themselves in the manner required by s. 30, and further, the applicant could not come in to execute the decree, because he did not appear, from the decree sought to be executed, to be interested, in the same way as the plaintiffs were. RAGAVA v. (19) Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, s. 9—Suit for possession of exclusive right of fishing in creek—Right of fishing, whether immoveable property within s. 9—Objection under s. 30, C. P. C.—Plaintiffs in this suit who were some of the fishermen of a village, claimed, for the fishermen of that village, the exclusive right of fishing in a creek between high and low water mark within the limits mentioned in the plaint, and sought, under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, to recover possession of that right from the defendants, alleging dispossession by the latter within six months before the filing of the suit. The first Court ordered possession to be given to plaintiffs. The High Court, in revision, overruled the contention of the defendants that the matter was beyond the jurisdiction of the first Court, by reason of the right of fishing not being immoveable property within the contemplation of the said s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The right claimed was the right of excluding the public from a particular part of the sea, and constituted the technical common of fishery and, being a private, right of fishery, came under the denomination of immoveable property. It was not the intention of the Legislature to exclude incorporeal rights from the section. The first Court, therefore, had acted within jurisdiction in having ordered that possession should be given to the plaintiffs. Another objection raised by the defendants, that the suit should have been instituted in accordance with the provisions of s. 30 of the C. P. C., was held to be well-founded but, as it was still open to the applicants to establish their rights by suit, the irregularity was not such as to call for the exercise of the powers of the High Court under s. 622 of the C. P. C. BHUNDAL PANDE v. PANDOLPOS PATIL, 12 B. 221. [R., 13 M. 54, 19 C. 544, F. B., 5 M. L. J. 95, 57 P. L. R. 1903, 33 C. 1905 = 10 C. W. N. 867; R., 10 C. L. J. 30.]

(1)—Appeal—Power of appellate Court to transfer parties from roll of defendants to plaintiffs—Suit for arrears of rent.—Certain persons, alleging themselves to be co-sharers, intervened in the course of the suit and were made co-defendants by the first Court. The Appellate Court, however, transferred them from their situation as defendants to the side of the plaintiff, not only without their concurrence, but entirely against their will. Held that it is a general rule that a person cannot be made a plaintiff against his will, in the absence of any equity in favour of third persons enabling them to ask the Court to compel the intervenor to take up the part of the plaintiff. As there was no such equity in the present case, the order of the lower appellate Court transferring the intervenors from one side to the other was illegal. BEHAREE LALL DOSS v. (2)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act X of 1877, s. 32—Plaintiff in partnership suit seeking withdrawal or dismissal of suit—Application by defendants to be made plaintiffs—Practice.—Where a plaintiff in a partnership suit applies for leave to withdraw or for getting the suit dismissed, but some of the defendants objecting to such a course apply under s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code, praying that they may be transposed as plaintiffs, the plaintiff being made a defendant, such application of the defendants should be granted. In an ordinary suit, the question of the addition or transposition of parties arises on the allegations made by the plaintiff, and so, where the plaintiff withdraws, the allegations being withdrawn, no question remains for the Court to decide. But a partnership suit is a suit of a peculiar character, and the parties to such a suit do not stand to each other precisely in the same relation as parties to suits generally. If a plaintiff in a partnership is to be allowed to withdraw, the defendants in such a suit will never be safe unless they file separate suits, for, the plaintiff may delay his withdrawal until the period of limitation has expired, and then they will be without a remedy. EDULJI MUNCHERJI WACHA v. The Deputy Collector cited the Rajah himself to appear and be examined. He excused himself, on the ground of privilege under Act VIII of 1859, s. 22, and, at the same time, petitioned that the evidence of his general agent might be taken. The Deputy Collector, without examining the general agent, dismissed the suit, on the ground that the suit ought to have been instituted by the general agent; and that the Rajah himself was bound to obey his citation. Held, that the Deputy Collector was bound to receive evidence of the general agent and to decide the case upon the evidence which was tendered; and that the refusal of the Rajah, who had the privilege he claimed, and his appointment of a special agent or muktear for the purposes of the suit instead of his general agent, were no grounds for dismissing the suit. JUGGUD INDUR BUN-WAREE v. R who had a right of maintenance in the property joined G, in suing the present plaintiff who was the next reversioner, to establish that the property was the self-acquired property of G's husband. She was also allowed by G to be in possession of certain property in lieu of her maintenance, and she made an absolute gift of the property to her daughter. In a suit by the plaintiff reversioner to set aside the deed of gift and for possession, held, (1) that the mere joinder of R in the suit of G against the reversioner did not confer on her any rights in excess of those she already had or adverse to those of other persons; (2) that the deed of gift by R was void and in-operative against the plaintiff who was entitled to a declaration to that effect, but not to possession during the life-time of G. MUSSUMAT PARBUTEE v. There was no allegation that the other sabha had been consulted, or had repudiated the right of the plaintiffs to sue in conjunction with itself. Permission under s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to sue as representing all the members of all the sabhas was refused. It was held that it was not competent to the plaintiffs to maintain such suits by themselves. PURAMATHAN SOMAYAJIPAD v. B having failed to obtain possession of the property sold it to S who obtained a decree against H and D for possession of the property on the 10th August 1858, without any detriment to the rights against S of the present plaintiffs who had purchased B's rights at a judicial sale in September 1856. The present plaintiffs sued alleging that the sale to S was collusive, and obtained a decree in conformity with the terms of a compromise on the 26th

July 1859 whereby the defendants consented to the plaintiffs being put in immediate possession of the property. They were eventually put in possession of the property in 1864 in conformity with s. 224, Civ. Pro. Code. In 1866, the Commissioner ordered their names to be expunged from the registers, and that of D to be re-entered therein. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover possession of the property from which the above order had the effect of ousting them. Held that the plaintiffs in executing their decree of the 26th July, 1859 were executing the decree of the 10th August 1858 which was passed directly against D, as the execution of the latter decree in effect involved that of the earlier one, which had virtually merged in the other and the rights of the decree-holder under the first having been conveyed to the holders of the second decree according to s. 208, Civ. Pro. Code. DOORGA PERSHAD SINGH v. LALLA JUG-GUNNATH PERSHAD, 1 N.W.P. 31.

(2)—Decree for partition, form of.—In a suit for partition, the decree is not like a decree for money or for the delivery of specific property—a decree in favour of the plaintiffs only. In such a suit, the decree is, or ought to be, a joint declaration of the rights of the persons interested in the property of which partition is sought, and is a decree in favour of each sharer. It decides what interest each of the sharers has in the property, the subject of partition, whether those sharers be plaintiffs or defendants, and renders unnecessary any subsequent suit by any of such sharers for a declaration of his interest in the property. *DOST MUHAMMAD KHAN v. wrongly land which should have formed part of the mahal of the non-applicants was allotted to one of the other mahals, held, that this was a question relating to the partition or union of mahals, and the remedy of the party aggrieved was an appeal against the order confirming the partition and not a suit in the Civil Court. TIRBENI SAHAI v. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 4.—In suits for partition of the whole village site, though the Civil Courts may technically have jurisdiction to go into the question of partition, they are usually well-advised to decline to attempt what is an almost impossible task. There is no basis for the theory that each individual proprietor is entitled to a certain portion of the abadi area calculated with reference to village shares whether determined by pedigree or revenue payments. The only safe ground to take is that the distribution of such vacant land as there may be attached to the abadi should be left in the hands of the lambardars who alone can determine whether it should be divided up or kept intact for the common purpose of the village. Where the area of the vacant land attached to the abadi is unusually large, and plaintiffs, who represent a large majority of the village but reside in another village, bring a suit for partition of the village abadi, against defendants who own the remaining share in the village and are alone the regular residents of the village, certain portions of the abadi should be blocked off for the use of the plaintiffs or the defendants, after leaving out so much as is required for general village purposes including the necessities of the non-proprietary residents. In an appeal against a decree for partition of the village abadi, where only some of the defendants representing a very small share in the village appeal on the ground that the lower Courts have not rightly determined the area which should be divided, the appeal cannot be treated as an appeal under r. 4, O. XLI, Civ. Pro. Code, as one on behalf of the whole body of the defendants. The question what area should be divided must be settled by the majority of the proprietary body. Where the majority are satisfied with a partition effected by the lower Courts, and the appellants-defendants have no such special grievance that their wishes should prevail as against the wishes of the majority of the proprietors, the partition should not be reopened so as to re-consider what area should be divided. *HIRA SINGH v. (6)—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Partition suit regarding land—Question of title involved—Proper procedure—Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), Chap. IX, s. 117, 158 (xvii.).—A suit for the partition of land is cognizable only by a Revenue Court, notwithstanding that, upon the defendant's plea, a question of title arises. In so far as the claim for partition is concerned, the jurisdiction of a Civil Court is clearly excluded by law. A suit for partition must in the first instance be instituted in the Revenue Court, and if that Court, in taking the pleas of the defendant, finds a question of title involved in the case, it may refer a party to the Civil Court for a decision on the question of title or it may resolve itself into a Civil Court and hear and decide that question. The function of a Civil Court in partition cases is simply to decide the question of title pure and simple. AUTAR SINGH v. SURAIN, 10 Ind. Cas. 902.

(7)—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1908), s. 118—Partition—Site of a building of one co-sharer allotted to another—Owner of the building failing to express his intention to retain the building by application to the Collector on payment of a ground rent—Right to keep the house after partition—Adverse possession—Usufructuary mortgagee, possession of.—At the partition of a village, the site of a building occupied by one of the co-sharers was allotted to another co-sharer. No application was made on behalf of the occupant of the house to the Collector expressing his intention to retain the building on payment of a ground rent: Held, after the partition he was not entitled to remain in possession of the building. When a partition has been effected by the Revenue Court, the parties are bound by the provisions contained in the order of partition, and they cannot, in a subsequent civil suit, go behind the partition. The possession under a usufructuary mortgage is referable to the contract of the parties and cannot be regarded as adverse. SUBU-NANADAN PAT TEWARI v. RADHA KESHUN KALWAR, 5 Ind. Cas. 674.

(8)—*Partition suit—Civ. Pro. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Two separate appeals were preferred against the decree to the District Judge. Both these appeals were dismissed on practically the same ground. One of the defendants, who was an appellant in one of the two appeals but was no party to the other, preferred a second appeal to the High Court. No second appeal was filed from the decree in the other appeal; Held, that, there being no claim for partition among the defendants inter se, the Court had no jurisdiction to divide off their shares. The appellant's appeal to the High Court was not barred by res judicata, by reason of his not having appealed against the decree in the other appeal to which he was no party. If, during the pendency of an appeal, one of the respondents dies and his representatives are not brought on the record, the whole appeal does not abate for that reason. A brought a suit against Z and Y for joint possession. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge. During the pendency of the appeal, Y died and his representatives were not brought on the record. The District Judge decreed the appeal as against Z, and held it to have abated as against the representatives of Y. Subsequently, the heirs of A brought a suit for partition against the heirs of Y and others: Held, that the subsequent suit was not barred by res judicata, either under s. 13 or s. 371 of the Code of 1882. The appeal in the former suit having abated, it could not be said to have been heard and finally decided. "Cause of action," in s. 371 of Act XIV of 1882, should be taken to mean the facts constituting the infringement of right, and not those constituting the right itself. In a suit for partition, the defendant, who himself is not in actual possession of the property, cannot say that the suit is barred by limitation. SYED FARHATT HUSAIN v. MAHOMED IBRAHIM ALI, 5 Ind. Cas. 325.

(9)—Court, power of, to take into consideration facts subsequent to commencement of partition suit as death of a party to suit, etc.—In a suit for partition, the proportionate share to be decreed to the plaintiff must be that to which he is entitled on the date of the final decree. Although, ordinarily, the rights of parties must be ascertained as they stood at the date of the institution of the suit, a suit for partition under the Hindu Law is treated as an exception, and the Courts have to take into consideration matters subsequent to the commencement of such a suit. Consequently, upon the death of a party to a suit for partition during the pendency of the appeal, the Court will have to alter the shares and allotments. SANGILI v. MOOKAN, 16 M. 350=3 M.L.J. 137. (10)—Party—Partition suit—Tenant under owner of half share of proprietary title suing for partition—Owner of other half share alone made defendant—Whether plaintiff's landlord ought to be made party.—The plaintiffs sued for the partition of certain jamas, to a half share of which they are entitled as tenants under M, the owner of a half share of the proprietary title. The title to possession of the remaining half share of the jamas was in S, the owner of the remaining half share of the proprietary title. The proprietors as between themselves were undivided in respect of the jamas. The suit had been brought against S alone. The first Court decreed the suit, but the lower appellate Court set aside the decree and remanded the suit for the purpose of giving the plaintiffs an opportunity to bring M on the record: Held that M was, if not a necessary party, at least a proper party to the suit, as his presence was necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in it, and that the order of the lower appellate Court was right. INDU BHUSHAN ACHARYA v. SAILAJA SUNDARI BARMANYA, 7 Ind. Cas. 382.

(11)—Partition suit — Parties, necessary—Hindu wife, if unnecessary party—Unknown person and his heirs to be made parties—Service of summons—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 82—Court's power to regulate procedure—Appeal, valid, requisites of—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 107—Presumption.—Ordinarily only such persons should be added as defendants in a partition suit as are owners of the interest to be partitioned. But if it cannot be ascertained with precision whether some of the owners are alive, then both the unascertained owners and their legal representatives should be added as defendants, and service of notice effected on the unascertained owners in the manner prescribed by s. 82 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1882). The only presumption enacted by s. 107 of the Indian Evidence Act is, that the party is dead at the time of suit, but there is no presumption as to the precise time of his death. The Court has inherent power to regulate its procedure in such manner as may shorten litigation and result in substantial justice to the litigant parties. The requisites of a valid appeal are, first, that no one can appeal from a judgment or decree unless he was a party to the action or was treated as such or is the legal representative of a party, or has privity of estate, title or interest, apparent on the face of the record: secondly, that the appellant has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and thirdly, that the appellant is prejudicially affected by the decree complained of. A Hindu wife's right to maintenance is attributed to a kind of identity with her husband in proprietary right though her right may be of a quite subordinate character. When a partition takes place, the share of the husband may be made to his wife, to be held by her on his behalf during his absence. SRINATH DAS v. PROBODH CHUNDER DAS, 11 C.L.J. 580 = 6 Ind. a party to the partition suit in no way invalidates the proceedings. A mortgagee of an undivided share, when there is a subsequent partition, ordinarily has, as his security after the partition, the separate share allotted to his mortgagor in place of the undivided share. Where the mortgagee in his plaint alleged that the partition was effected fraudulently, but in appeal tried to make out a case of negligence on the part of his mortgagor in the conduct of the partition suit, the High Courts did not allow such a case to be raised as it was not made in the pleadings, nor raised by the issues. NARENDRA CHANDRA LAHIRI v. SARODA KANTO MOITRA, 6 Ind. Cas. 829.

(13)—Partition, suit for—Party—Co-putnidar and not darputnidar necessary party.—A person holding a permanent interest, though an interest of an inferior grade, may bring a suit for partition, as against persons who hold interests of a superior grade. (24 C. 575, 1 C.L.J. 40, 5 C.L.J. 643, Rel. on.) In a suit for partition by putnidars against darputnidars under his co-putnidars, the co-putnidars must be made parties; but a darputnidar is not a necessary party in a suit for partition (3 C.L.J. 205, R.) if his putnidar is made a party and if such a putnidar does not wish to avoid the responsibility which attaches to a party in a partition suit, that is, to see that the partition is carried out in a fair and equitable manner. UPENDRA CHANDRA SINGHA ROY v. MAHOMED FAIZ CHOWDHRY, 7 C.L.J. 449 = 12 C.W.N. 670.

(14)—Joint property—Portion omitted by mistake—Fresh suit for partition or joint possession if maintainable—Co-owner, adverse possession by.—Where, in a suit for the partition of joint property, by reason of a mistake of the parties which was shared by the Commissioner who was appointed to make the partition, a certain portion of the property was omitted from the report and the final decree did not deal with the lands comprised in that portion. Held—That the effect of the decree was to leave unaffected the joint title and possession of the parties in the lands omitted in the decree. That such lands may be partitioned in a subsequent suit at the instance of one of the parties. A mere determination of the shares by the preliminary decree is not tantamount to partition. The entry into and possession of land under the common title by one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all. A co-tenant will not be permitted to claim the protection of the statute of limitation, unless it clearly appears that he has repudiated the title of his co-tenant and is holding adversely to him. It must further be established that the fact of the adverse holding was brought home to the co-owner. The possession of a wrong-doer cannot be constructively extended over lands not actually in his possession. JOGENDRA NATH ROY v. BALADEB DAS MARWARI, 12 C.W.N. 127 = 6 C.L.J. 735 = 35 C. 961.

(15)—Partition—Existence of no joint interest—Suit for partition not maintainable.—A partition suit is not maintainable between parties, among whom there is no existing joint interest of any kind. (24 C. 575, F.B.=1 C.W.N. 406, 12 A. 51, P.C.=16 I.A. 186, R.) Where the holdings of the plaintiff and the defendant are not undivided shares of parcels of land, and the parties themselves are not co-owners, no suit for partition lies between them. BALIKANTA DOS v. (16)—Partition by arbitration—Award not binding on the heirs who were not parties to the agreement—Minor.—It is a fundamental principle that no one is bound by any contract or by a decision in any proceeding to which he, or some one through whom he claims, was not a party. A partition by arbitration may be binding on a minor, but only when he is not injuriously affected thereby, when it is fair and when he has been duly represented. MA GYI v. MAUNG PO HMYIN, 8 Ind. (17)—Partition decree—Effect of—Minor—Death of the minor—Execution of the decree—Effect of a decree obtained by a minor in.—A minor sued for partition and obtained a decree which ordered that he should receive a certain amount of income every year during his minority and that when he became a major he should recover his share of the land. The minor then died and his widow presented a darkhast to execute the decree: Held, (1) that the effect of the decree was clearly to make the minor a divided member of the family; (2) that the heirs of the minors could, in the execution proceedings, recover the arrears of the allowance up to the death of the minor; (3) that his heirs could not claim in the execution proceedings either the share or the subsequent allowance as awarded in the decree, which would be recoverable only by a separate suit. LAXMAN v. NARAYAN, 1 Bom. L.R. 777=24 B. 182.

(18)—Partition—Land allotted to minor—Adult member remaining in possession—Nature of possession, not adverse—Onus of proof—Presumption.—Where, after partition, an adult member of the family held possession of the property that fell to the share of a minor member, held that the presumption would be that the possession was held on behalf of the minor, and that the onus lay on the person in possession to show that his possession was adverse. THANDAVARAYA ODAYAN v. Partition—continued.—1.—General—continued.

lands had become impartible, because of the terms of a consent decree in a previous suit for partition, the parties having by a compromise agreed to divide the profits hereditarily. Held, that the mere fact that the parties settled among themselves by compromise that the lands should not be divided, but that they should enjoy the profits, could not in law impart the character of impartibility to the estate. Impartibility must arise out of some special tenure or some general, family or local custom. Parties cannot make an estate impartible which is partible. That is opposed to public policy. Where tenants-in-common are jointly responsible to Government for the land-revenue payable to the latter, the lands do not by that circumstance alone become impartible, for no arrangement settling the relations between Government and the tenants-in-common can be regarded as determinative of the relations between the tenants inter se. Where the guardian presented an application on behalf of a minor defendant to the effect that he had no objection to keep all the lands joint provided the minor got his share of the profits, the Court made thereon the endorsement "the application has been allowed and filed in the suit." Held that no sanction had been obtained in the manner prescribed by the provisions of s. 462, Civ. Pro. Code, as to the terms of the compromise being for the benefit of the minor. PIROJ-SHAH v. MANIBHAI, 13 Bom. L.R. 963=12 Ind. Cas. 543=36 B. 53.

(20)—Partition, partial—Co-owners, not members of joint family—Suit, if maintainable.—One of the co-owners of an estate sued the other co-owners for partition of chowkidari chakran lands of one village only of the estate. Held, that the reasons against the partial partition of joint family property did not apply to such a case and the suit was maintainable. SYED HABIBUR RASUL ABDUL FAIZ v. But the Court may decide such a suit, if the defendant is willing that the rights of the parties in respect of the property be decided in that suit. If a trustee or agent mixes or confuses the property which he holds in a fiduciary character with his own property, the onus lies heavily on him to prove the extent of his property. If he fails to do so, and the two properties cannot be distinguished or separated with perfect accuracy, the whole must be considered as belonging to the other party. BURUGAPALLI SRIRAMULU v. (25 C. 210=2 C.W.N. 91, 4 M.I.A. 137, 7 W.R. 35, P.C.; F.; 4 M.L.T. 304, 19 M.L.J. 228, 3 Ind. Cas. 321, D.) Although there cannot be a partial partition by suit, partial partition by private arrangement is allowable. (12 C. 566, 14 C. 122, 4 M.I.A. 137, 7 W.R. 35, P.C., R.) If the private partition be partial, the property which had been excluded from partition continues to be joint and so liable to be partitioned. (9 C.L.J. 133, 13 C.W.N. 309, 3 Ind. Cas. 241, F.) A partition or family arrangement, made in settlement of a disputed or doubtful claim, effecting a division of the family properties, which was carried out and acted upon by them for sometime, is a valid and binding arrangement, which the parties to it cannot deny, ignore or resile from. (4 C.L.J. 323, F.) Therefore, where a partition was effected with the consent of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the father-in-law of the plaintiff who acted as the guardian of his son-in-law, the possession had been delivered in accordance therewith, and the plaintiff on attainment of majority confirmed the transaction, and the parties had effected improvements on the property and granted long leases to tenants, and the defendants had, since the time of the partition, ceased to keep accounts of the joint-estate: Held, that the partition was valid and binding upon the parties. A family arrangement concluded in honest error is binding, but not so if either party has been misled by the concealment of material things, or if founded on mistake of either party to which the opposite party was an accessory. Where an arrangement was made, at the time of the partition, that accounts should be taken within a certain time: Held that failure to carry it out does not invalidate the partition. The specific properties to be partitioned must be ascertained by the Court before the preliminary decree is made, and not left to be determined by the Commissioner. A devastavit by one of two executors or administrators will not charge his companion, provided he has not intentionally or otherwise contributed to it. Therefore, where the accounts of an estate are taken, with regard to each disputed transaction, the conduct of each of the executors must be examined, and his special liability, if any, determined. Ordinarily in a suit for partition, the parties are to bear their own costs up to the stage of preliminary decree. (12 W.R. 160, 5 C.L.J. 642, F.) But where the defendant contests the right of the plaintiff to claim partition, he may be made liable for costs unnecessarily incurred by reason of his unfounded opposition. SATYA KUMAR BANERJEE v. (29)—Partition decree—Non-execution—Limitation—Application to Taluqdari officer to effect partition under decree.—In 1863, the plaintiff obtained a partition decree. He never executed it. In 1888, he presented an application to the taluqdari Settlement Officer under s. 10 of Bombay Act VI of 1888 for partition under the decree. Held that, as the execution was barred when the Act was passed and as no fresh suit could have been brought against the defendant upon the right declared by the decree, the application should be rejected. JAM-SANG DEVABHAI v. (30)—Partition Act (IV of 1893), ss. 2, 4—Cases to which applicable—Procedure by Court—When to be applied.—S. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) relates only to cases where the transferee sues for partition. In cases where s. 4 is applicable, it is the duty of the Judge to make a valuation of the share of the transferee and direct its sale to the sharer of the dwelling-house. [R., 12 C.L.J. 525 = 7 Ind. Cas. 436]. S. 2 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) applies where the suit is brought by the sharer against the transferee. BALSHET v. MIRAN SAHIB, 23 B. 77.

(31)—Dwelling-house owned by an undivided Hindu family—Sale to stranger—Re-acquisition by members of such family after sale—Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4—Applicability.—S. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) applies only to cases where, at the time of sale to the stranger, the dwelling-house belongs to an undivided family. Four brothers K, R, V and P, who formed an undivided Hindu family, originally owned a dwelling-house. In January 1874, the shares of K and P therein were sold in execution of a decree against them and were purchased by T, and in 1877, by some successive sales, the shares of the other two brothers became the property of the plaintiff. The house had all along been in the common occupation of the four brothers. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff against T for partition, and a decree was obtained by him. But pending execution of the decree, T conveyed his moiety of the house to the two brothers R and V. V, thereupon, made an application under s. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) to be allowed to purchase the plaintiff's share by paying him the value of it. Held that V was not entitled to the benefit of the section because, after the sales in 1877, the house did not belong to the undivided family. Although V and his brothers were in occupation, they were only tenants in the house or trespassers. The house was not the property belonging to the undivided family at the time when the shares therein which had not been sold to T were transferred to the plaintiff. After the sale to plaintiff, the plaintiff and T became the owners in common of the house, as between whom s. 4 of the Partition Act did not apply. R and V, having subsequently purchased the interest of T, cannot have more rights than their vendor had. The property was in their hands re-acquired ancestral property but not property belonging to an undivided family within the meaning of s. 4. VAMAN v. VASUDEV, 23 B. 73. [R., 12 C.L.J. 526 = 7 Ind. Cas. 436.]

(32)—Partition Act (IV of 1893)—Plot built on by co-sharer, not convenient for division—Partition of tank—Court's discretion to refuse partition and to allow the party in possession to buy the other party out—Equity.—The defendants in a suit for partition had built a dwelling-house on a plot of 7 cottahs of land without opposition from the plaintiff, who was a stranger and owned only a one-tenth share in it and in an adjoining plot of 1 bigha, 6 cottahs. The lower appellate Court, finding that it would be every inconvenient for all parties concerned if these plots were divided by metes and bounds, allowed the defendants to buy up the plaintiff's shares at a proper valuation: Held—That, whether s. 4 of Act IV of 1893 applied to the case or not, it is a well-known principle of equity, which must be adopted in all partition cases, that, when it is inconvenient to divide a property, that property must be left in the possession of the person in occupation, and the other person, who cannot conveniently get actual possession, compensated. A tank covering one bigha in which plaintiff owned a 1-20th share was left joint, the lower appellate Court holding that it was not convenient to divide it. The High Court affirmed that decision. BASUNTA KUMAR GHOSH v. MOTI LAL GHOSH, 15 C.W.N. 555.

(33)—Partition—Property not conveniently divisible—Sale among co-sharers to highest bidder—Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4.—Where the nature of the property to be divided in a partition suit is such that a division thereof amongst all the share holders cannot reasonably or conveniently be made, the proper course to follow is to direct a sale of the property among the co-sharers; and it should be given to that share-holder who offers to pay the highest price above the valuation made by the Court. The defendant cannot be compelled to transfer his share at a valuation to the plaintiff, merely because the latter happened to have possession of the property at the time when he commenced the action. DEBENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE v. HARI DAS BHATTACHARJEE, 7 Ind. Cas. 844.

(23 P.R. 1905, D.) Held that there is absolutely no law or authority now in force to justify a money decree being passed in a partition suit, in the exercise of the Court's discretionary powers, independently of the provisions of the Partition Act (IV of 1893). Held, also, that a plaintiff is entitled to insist on a partition, in the absence of any application to take action under the provisions of the Partition Act. MUKERJI v. and leasehold interests—Costs up to the preliminary decree by whom payable—Rateable distribution—Costs, subsequent to preliminary decree, by whom to be borne—Lessor and lessee, liabilities of, to pay costs—Apportionment.—An appeal will lie upon a question of costs, when a matter of principle is involved (12 C. 179, 12 C. 271, R.) As the plaintiff in a partition suit commences it for his own advantage, convenience and security, and as the defendant, as joint owner, holds his undivided share always subject to the right of the plaintiff to demand partition, the parties must each bear their own costs of the suit, up to the stage of the preliminary decree, and the costs of the partition should be divided between the parties in proportion to their respective shares in the estate. (12 W.R. 160, R.; 21 C. 904, D.) If, however, there has been a frivolous contest, the party, by reason of whose opposition unnecessary costs are incurred, may be made liable. A lessee, who accepts a lease of a share in joint property, does so with full knowledge that the subject matter is liable to partition, and if he finds himself a defendant in a partition suit, it is by reason of his own voluntary act, and, in such a suit, each party must bear his own costs up to the first hearing or preliminary decree, and the costs of the partition should be borne by the parties in the proportion of their interests. If the lessee took no part in the partition proceedings, and neither claimed nor obtained the benefit of a separate allotment, he could not be called upon to contribute to the costs of the partition. But if he did, the costs must be borne by him rateably with the other parties, according to his interest in the premises. A permanent lessee may be regarded as a purchaser and will be entitled to similar privileges and subject to similar liabilities. The costs of the partition should, as between the lessor and the lessee, be borne by them in proportion to their respective interests in the share covered by the mokurari (lease). NAWAB DILDAR ALI KHAN v. BHOWANI SAHAI SINGH, 5 C.L.J. 642=34 C. 878. [R., 12 C.W.N. 670=7 C.L.J. 449; F., 10 C.L.J. 503=3 Ind. Cas. 247.]

(37)—Partition, suit for—Ministerial Act—Measurement of plots—Delegation of power—Whether entire proceedings void—Costs—Principle of assessment.—When a joint judicial act is to be done, it ought to be done, by the parties jointly; but this principle has no application when the act is of a ministerial character. Therefore, the proceedings before Commissioners, appointed in a partition suit, are not vitiated in their entirety, by reason of the failure of one of the Commissioners to be present when measurements were taken in respect of some of the plots. In a suit for partition, in so far as the costs up to the stage of the preliminary decree are concerned, the parties must pay their own costs. In so far as the costs subsequent to the preliminary decree and up to the stage of the final decree are concerned, the costs must be borne by the parties in proportion to their respective shares. MOTI LAL GHOSHI v. GIRISH CHANDRA GHOSH, 6 Ind. Cas. 109 = 12 C.L.J. 346.

(38)—Mortgage of undivided share—Allotment of property on partition—Charge for owelty money—Priority.—In the absence of any suggestion or evidence that the partition of a joint estate was unfairly or improperly made to defeat the claims of creditors, the sharers thereof, who have to receive sums of money by way of owelty from a co-sharer under a partition decree, creating a charge on the allotment made to him, have priority over the mortgagees of his undivided share in the joint estate. The fact that the mortgagor co-sharer entered into possession of the allotment-made to him, before paying the owelty-money for which there was a charge created, did not alter or affect the position. SHAHEBZADAH MAHOMED KAZIM SHAH v. ROBERT SAVI HILLS, 12 C.W.N. 373 = 35 C. 388.

(39)—Partition—Mode of partition—Shareholder's right to retain possession—How to deal with occupancy holding—Act XVII of 1887, ss. 110 & 116—Mouza Pakki Bhathi, Tahsil Fazilka.—In the partition case of a joint holding of land in Mouza Pakki Bhathi, Tahsil Fazilka: Held, that possession should be respected up to the extent of each shareholder's share in each of the different classes of land, and, as regards the area occupied by hereditary tenants, the holding of each tenant should not be split up into pieces, but that each such holding should go as a whole. CHANDAN KHAN v. FATAH MOHAMMAD, 2 P.W.R. 1908, Rev.

(40)—Partition between co-sharer and ijaradar of other co-sharers—Similarity of possession—Temporary lease—Occupancy raiyat—Relinquishment of holding in favour of ijaradar—Expiry of ijara—Right of landlord to recover khas possession—Costs.—Where a lessee of lands in the occupation of raiyats, who had jote rights, obtained khas possession of the lands, with the consent of the raiyats, for the purpose of indigo cultivation: Held that the lessee, being merely a landlord in occupation, did not acquire occupancy right in the lands, and the lessor became entitled to khas possession on the expiry of the lease. A lessee held certain lands in a village under three separate temporary leases from three undivided co-sharers of the village. On the expiry of one of the leases, the lessor in question sued for khas possession, on partition of his separated share. His other co-sharers, who, with the lessee, had been made parties to the suit, raised no objection. Held that there was no bar to a decree for partition being made in the case. (24 C. 143, R.) But the plaintiff ought to pay the entire costs of the partition, as a fresh partition of the entire mouzah may be necessary on the expiry of the other leases. RAM LOCHI KOERI v. HERBERT COLLINGRIDGE, 11 C.W.N. 397 = 5 C.L.J. 307. (24 C. 575, 1 C.L.J. 40, Appr.) [D., 35 C. 807 = 7 C.L.J. 483.]

(41)—N.W.P. and Oudh Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 111, 112, 131—Partition proceedings—Objection as to title—Title decided by the Assistant Collector—Final order of confirmation—Assistant Collector's decision on title not given effect to—Subsequent suit for ejectment—Assistant Collector's order prevails.—The parties were co-sharers. Partition proceedings took place between them. In those proceedings, the appellants filed objections alleging the plots in dispute to be their exclusive khudkasht. The Assistant Collector in charge of the partition proceedings decided in favour of the appellants. In the final order of the Collector, confirming the partition proceedings, the order of the Assistant Collector was not given effect to. On the strength of the final confirmation order, the respondents sought ejectment of the appellants: Held, that, the Assistant Collector's order, not having been set aside in appeal or otherwise, must be given effect to. The final order of the Collector was due to mistake and inadvertence. It would be wrong to perpetuate the consequence of such mistake. RAM BARAN MAN v. JANKI MAN, 4 Ind. Cas. 60.

(42)—Common village land for tethering cattle, whether open to partition among proprietors.—Common land in a village, which the co-sharers have been in the habit of tethering cattle on, is not to be regarded as land dedicated as such to a common purpose. So, though the Record of rights, describing such lands as joint property, is silent as to their liability to partition, yet from the right of transfer of such lands provided for by the said Record, a right to bring them to partition is impliedly inferrible. MAKHAN SINGH v. ISHAR SINGH, 136 P.R. 1906 = 118 P.L.R. 1908.

(43)—Partition—If mokuraridar of share may sue proprietors of remaining share—Forfeiture, liability to, if affects right to partition.—The right of partition exist when two parties are in joint possession of land under permanent titles, although those titles may not be identical. A mokuraridar of a share, whose interest is liable to forfeiture in events which have not occurred, is entitled to sue the proprietors of the remaining share for partition. Whether the right exists in any other case, their Lordships expressly refrained from indicating. LALA BHAGWAT SAHAI v. BEPIN BEHARI MITTER, 14 C.W.N. 962, P.C. = 12 C.L.J. 240 = 8 M.L.T. 228 = 7 Ind. Cas. 549 = 7 A.L.J. 1137 = 20 M.L.J. 907 = 12 Bom. L.R. 997.

(44)—Partition, suit for—Lands held jointly by plaintiff and defendants—No necessity for including lands jointly held by plaintiff, and other persons.—A plaintiff is entitled to bring a suit for partition of the lands held jointly, in their entirety, by himself and the defendants; and he need not include in that suit lands held by him jointly with the defendants and other persons. JOGENDRA CHANDRA SHAHA CHOWDHURY v. SRISH CHANDRA SHAHA CHOWDHURY, 1 Ind. Cas. 110.

(45)—Share in specie—Money value of the shares.—It is a leading principle of law in cases of partition that where several persons are co-owners or co-sharers of immoveable property partition should be effected between them by giving to each his share in specie, as far as is practicable. The right of each sharer is to his slice of the property, not merely its money value. What has to be borne in mind in effecting a partition decreed by a Court is not the convenience of one party but the convenience of all the parties and the partition should be made so as to be equitable to all of them. MAHOMED V. HAJI, 7 Bom. L.R. 482.

(46)—Partition deed—Agreement between partners to divide debts.—Where the partners in a partnership business by a deed divide between themselves certain debts of the firms to be collected and appropriated, but remain joint regarding the other items of business, the deed must be construed as a partition deed and not as a deed for the dissolution of partnership for the purposes of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899. CHOTURAM V. GANESH, 3 Bom. L.R. 132.

(47)—Court-fees—Defendant seeking to recover his share in execution.—The defendant in a partition suit is entitled to seek the execution of the decree ordering partition so far as it is in his favour; and he cannot be made by the executing Court to pay Court-fees over his share, when the decree itself imposes no such term. NAWAB MIR SADRUDIN V. NAWAB NOVRUDIN, 6 Bom. L.R. 834=29 B. 79.

(48)—Suit by a Mahomedan co-sharer for, and separate possession of his share—Obligation on other co-owners to come to partition—Fresh suit by another co-sharer for separate possession of his share, maintainability of—Res judicata.—If a Mahomedan co-sharer files a suit for partition and separate possession of his share, there is no obligation on the other co-sharers to come to a partition also. This principle, applicable to a section among Hindus, applies also to a suit among Mahomedans. (6 Bom. L.R. 35, R.) And the fact that, in a suit brought by one co-sharer for partition and separate possession of his share, the share of the others has been ascertained in the judgment of the Court, with a view to deciding what share should be allotted to him, cannot be pleaded as a bar to a fresh suit by another co-sharer to have his share partitioned off and delivered into his separate possession. WADERO AYUB KHAN V. MUSAMAT WADUK, 3 S.L.R. 93=3 Ind. Cas. 899. (23 B. 188, R.)

(49)—Res judicata—Partition suit—Parties in subsequent suit arrayed on same side in previous litigation—Effect of.—A suit for partition was brought by R against the plaintiffs and M, the husband of the defendant. The Court of first instance passed a decree and defined the rights of the defendants in the suit. M died during the pendency of the suit. The plaintiffs brought this suit for declaration of their right to the property of M. Held that, having regard to the decision in the suit of R against the plaintiffs, it was no longer open to the plaintiffs to bring the present suit, inasmuch as in the previous suit a decree ascertaining and declaring the rights of the parties was passed. The nature of partition suits discussed. PUR-SOTAM RAO TANTIA V. RADHA BAI, 7 A.L.J. 451=6 Ind. Cas. 692=32 A. 469.

(50)—Declaratory decree—Suit for partition—Prayer that previous solenamah and decree may be declared invalid—Consequential relief—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sch. II, art. 17, cl. (iii) and cl. (vi). s. 7, cl. (iv) (c).—Where a plaintiff prayed to have an arrangement, carried out under the terms of a previous decree reversed, and to bring into hotchpot, for the purpose of making a partition, the properties which, since that arrangement, had been in the exclusive possession of one or other of the defendants and also to have certain additional properties brought into partition: held, that the plaintiff asked that the decree might be declared invalid and that, as a consequence of that declaration, the properties might be restored to their original state as joint property and then brought under partition; that the suit, therefore, was for a declaratory decree and for consequential relief, and that an ad valorem Court-fee was payable on the plaint under s. 7, cl. iv (c). HARO GOWRI SAHA V. DUKHI SAHA, 5 Ind. Cas. 582.

(51)—Court-fee—Partition, suit for—Joint possession, not proved—Partition award, construction of—Vested interest—Inheritance.—Where the plaintiff rested her case on a complete partition made years ago, and it is proved that she had never possessed the property in dispute, she is not entitled to sue for, partition, without suing at the same time for possession of her share, a course entailing payment of Court-fees calculated ad valorem in the plaint. One B died leaving a widow A and five sons. During the lifetime of A the family property was partitioned by an arbitration award, which was in English and was drafted by a person familiar with conveyancing. The partition award prescribed "that the said garden, both debutter and sarkari, and the sum of Rs. 3,000 will, after the demise of the mother A, be divided among the then surviving heirs and representatives." One of the sons died during A's life-time and his widow brought a suit for partition of a fifth share in the garden and the sum of Rs. 3,000. Held, that the expression "the then reversionary heirs and representatives" in the partition award meant after A's death the property should go to the heirs whoever they might be. The partition award effected a complete severance in the interests of the various co-parceners, and accordingly the plaintiff's husband obtained a separate vested interest in the property in which A was given a life estate, which separate estate descended in due course to his widow. RANGAMANI DAS V. JOGENDRA NATH MANNA, 9 C.L.J. 128=3 Ind. Cas. 304.

(52)—Partition suit—Decree drawn up by mistake on Court-fee stamp—Inherent power of Court—Non-judicial stamp directed to be filed—Decree validated from date of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 158—Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 52, sch. I, art. 45—Refund of value of Court-fee stamp.—In a partition suit, the first Court directed the plaintiff to file a non-judicial stamp of Rs. 100 for the decree to be drawn up thereon in accordance with art. 45 of sch. I of the Stamp Act. By mistake the plaintiff filed a Court-fee stamp of that value and by mistake the Court engrossed the decree on the same. The defendant appealed and the appellate Court could not detect the mistake. Then the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree in the first Court, where the defendant took the objection that the decree could not be executed, not being drawn up upon a non-judicial stamp paper. The objection was allowed and the plaintiff moved the High Court. Held, that this is a fit case for the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court which have been saved by s. 151 of the Civ. Pro. Code, that the plaintiff should be allowed to put in a non-judicial stamp of Rs. 100 which would be defaced and attached to the decree already drawn up, and that this would be sufficient to validate the decree with retrospective effect from the date when it was drawn up, and the result would be to validate the appeal as well. S. 52 of the Stamp Act does not cover a case in which a Court-fee stamp has been erroneously used where a non-judicial stamp ought to have been used under the provisions of the Stamp Act. But the Revenue Officers, as a matter of indulgence, though not as a matter of right, may grant relief to the person who has made the error. RAFI-UD-DIN v. LATIF AHMED, 7 Ind. Cas. 94=14 C.W.N. 1101=12 C.L.J. 324.

(53)—Appeal—Partition—Preliminary decree—Final decree—Appeal against preliminary decree after final decree—Not maintainable.—Where, in a suit for partition, a final decree has been made, and the preliminary decree only is appealed against, held that the correctness of the decree cannot be challenged without an appeal against the final decree also. KURIYA MAL v. BISHAMBHAR DAS, 7 A.L.J. 210=5 Ind. Cas. 276=32 A. 225. [R., 12 C.L.J. 195.]

(54)—Deed effecting or declaring partition—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 17, cl. (b), 49—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Part performance, doctrine of—Specific performance—Improvements by co-owner upon common property, effect of, at partition—Question whether property is joint to be decided by Court.—A deed, by which a partition of immoveable property is effected, or which declares such a partition previously effected by the parties, is compulsorily registrable under cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. The essence of the matter is, whether the deed is a part of the partition transaction, or contains merely an incidental recital of a previously completed transaction. Where the intention of the parties was that the document should be the only repository and the appropriate evidence of the partition, the deed, if not registered, is not admissible in evidence, under s. 49 of the Registration Act, to establish the fact that the property was so partitioned, with the result that s. 91 of the Evidence Act excludes other evidence also in support of the transaction, because the written instrument is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction. But, if there is part performance of verbal agreement, by the party seeking relief, and to the knowledge of the other party, proof will be admitted of the verbal contract in cases when an action for specific performance would lie. In other words, an act done by a party in pursuance of the parol agreement, in order to be a part performance of it, must not only be one which could not be done with any other view than to perform it, but must also be such as could not be undone without causing the party unliquidated damage. Hence, if it is possible to restore the parties to precisely the same position as they occupied before they entered into the parol agreement, the doctrine of part performance will not ordinarily be allowed to be invoked. If one joint owner has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity will take this fact into consideration upon a partition, and, in some way, will make an allowance to him, therefore, in addition to his rateable share of the property. And it is in recognition of such equitable right that to the co-owner, who has made the improvements, is assigned that portion of the property on which the improvements have been made, the division being made on the basis of the unimproved value. In a partition suit, the question whether a particular property, alleged to be joint, really possesses that character, must be determined before the preliminary decree is made; all questions involving the title of the parties and their right to any relief within the issues, are judicial in character, and must be determined by the Court. UPENDRA NATH BANERJEE v. UMESH CHANDRA BANERJEE 6 Ind. Cas. 346=12 C.L.J. 25.

(55)—Act XXXIII of 1871, s. 65, cl. 2—Partition by Revenue authorities—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts to question partition.—Where on the death without issue of Gil got Jat who owned a putti in a taraf in which some putties were held by the *Gil got*s, and the rest by Brahmins, the Tabsildar declared the estate of the deceased as the shamilat of the whole taraf, and then, on the application of certain persons, partitioned it as such shamilat, in spite of the objections of the *Gil got*s who said that the Tabsildar had no right to partition the estate, and that no part of it ought to go to Brahmins of the putti separate from theirs. Held that the order of the Tahsildar was purely an administrative act and did not operate as a bar under s. 65, cl. 2 of Act XXXIII of 1871, to a Civil suit by the Gil gots to recover from the Brahmins the portion allotted to them in the partition. Though s. 65 of Act XXXIII of 1871 forbids suits in regard to partition arrangements effected by the Revenue Officer, the section expressly saves the case of any dispute as to the principle on which division is to be effected. DHAN SINGH v. GHAZI, 17 P.R. 1877. [R., 61 P.R. 1897, F.B.]

(56)—Land Revenue Act (XXXIII of 1871), s. 65, cl. 2—Common land, suit for partition of—Civil Court—Jurisdiction.—A suit for partition of common land would lie in a Civil Court, notwithstanding cl. 2, s. 65, of the Land Revenue Act, in so far as it sought a determination of the plaintiff's shares and his right to a partition in accordance with such shares. If the Civil Court went further than determining the shares and the right to partition, and gave detailed directions as to the mode in which partition should be carried out, it would exceed its jurisdiction and intrude on the province of the Revenue Authorities. SYAD ULLA v. PIRA, 97 P.R. 1876. [F., 22 P.R. 1878, 131 P.R. 1882, 125 P.R. 1883, 24 P.R. 1885.]

—2.—Effect of Partition.

(1)—Partition, decree for, what is.—A decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property sought to be partitioned, and is, if properly drawn up, in favor of each shareholder or set of shareholders having a distinct share. SHEIKH KHOORSHED HOSSEIN v. NUBBEE FATIMA, 3 C. 551=2 C.L.R. 187. [Rel. on, 13 P.L.R. 1905=23 P.R. 1905; Diss., 8 Bom. L.R. 758; R., 12 A. 506=10 A.W.N. 1890, 128, 20 A. 81, 22 M. 494=9 M.L.J. 37, 8 C.W.N. 30=31 C. 95, 8 Bom. L.R. 652=31 B. 271.]

(2)—Title, evidence of—Commission of partition.—Land in Calcutta was apportioned among the members of a family under a commission of partition, issued by the Supreme Court, the allotments being confirmed by a final decree. Many years after, the plaintiff claimed, through one of the family, a parcel of land, by reference to one of the allotments so made. The defence made by setting up a title through the widow was not proved; but the correctness of the area allotted being also in dispute, the appellate Court excluded part from the decree, made by the first Court for the whole. Held, that there was no ground for assuming that the members of the family, who were parties to the suit for partition, were under any mistake as to the property which belonged to their father, or that there was any error or want of due care, on the part of the Commissioners (whose proceedings had been perfectly regular) or that there was ever any adverse claim to any part of the allotted land. SARODA PROSUNNO PAL v. SHAM LAL PAL, 19 C. 618, P.C. = 19 I A. 75 = 6 Sar. 189.

(3)—Suit for partition — Plea of previous partition—Onus of proof — Liability to account.—Where, in a suit for partition of joint family property, the defendant pleads that a partition has already taken place, the onus of proving the alleged partition is on him. In a partition suit, before one brother can get his share of the joint property in the hands of another, the former must himself account for and come to a partition of all the joint property which has been in his hands. GOOROO PERSHAD MOOKERJEE v. KALLEE PERSHAD MOOKERJEE, 5 W.R. 121.

(4)—Partition by Collector.—A partition made by Collector does not alter the amount of revenue payable, it merely apportions that amount. There is no settlement of the revenue in any sense at the time of such partition. KOOWAR SINGH v. GOUR SUNDER PERSHAD SINGH, 24 C. 887.

(5)—Rights of tenants — Butwara.—A butwara does not extinguish the rights of tenants. If there was a tenant of the garden at the time of the butwara, that tenant continues to be tenant after the butwara, and the mere circumstance that one of the proprietors of the estate was himself the tenant does not destroy his tenant-right, because another of the proprietors has had the land allotted to him as part of his share of the divided estate. NUTHOO LALL CHOWDHRY v. SADDAT LALL, W.R. 1864, 271. [Diss., 26 C. 434.]

(6)—Reg. XIX of 1814—Partition—Bits of land in joint occupation.—Where partition was made under the provisions of the butwarra law, Reg. XIX of 1814, by the Collector, the fact that certain bits of land either through omission, neglect, or for convenience, have, in making the partition, been left in joint occupation, does not give the proprietor of the one estate any interest in the other. SHAIKH BONDEY HOSSEIN v. LALLA PURIAG DUTT, 16 W.R. 110. [F., 12 C.W.N. 176, Note.]

(7)—Partition—Allotment of land—Extinguishment of right—Subsequent possession.—Whatever may be the plaintiff's position prior to partition, whether he personally cultivated the land in suit or made use of the services of others in its cultivation, the allotment of the land by partition to the defendants extinguished his rights in it altogether. If he has subsequently held it, he can only have held it as a trespasser, or a tenant at will. If, therefore, he has been dispossessed of it, his dispossession is not illegal, and he has no legal right of a suit for recovery of possession. MUSST. NOWAB BEGUM v. RUSTUM KHAN, 2 Agra 149.

(8)—Private partition—Butwara by Collector subsequently—Mokurruridar, right of—Ejectment.—By a private partition between the co-sharers of a certain estate, the land in dispute was allotted to A, one of the co-sharers. He granted a mokurruri of the same to another person. Subsequently, another butwara redistributing the shares was made by the Collector. Held, that, although the co-sharers must be taken to have consented to the redistribution, yet, A could not, by his consent, affect the right of his mokurruridar. JUGGESSUR DOYAL SINGH v. BISSESSUR PERSHAD, 12 C L R. 281 (13 W.R. 447, F., 1 I.A. 106 = 21 W.R. 223, 4 C. 510, D.) [App., 20 C. 285.]

(9)—Partition—Land of co-sharer held by him in another puttee—Tenure—Arrears of rent.—The proprietary right of one co-sharer to the land which has been transferred by partition to the puttee of another co-sharer, becomes extinguished, and he becomes a tenant only. A claim for arrears of rent is not sustainable in the absence of any agreement express or implied for payment of any definite sum. ZALIM RAI v. DOORGA RAI, 1 Agra, Rev. 69.

(10)—Butwarrah—Joint and undivided estate—Private partition.—Where a joint and undivided estate is subjected to private partition, and a portion of one share is granted by the owner in mokurrari, the grantee's mokurrari title cannot be got rid of by a regular butwarrah subsequently made. A joint undivided estate having been subjected to private partition, four bigahs, which were in the portion held by A, were granted by him in mokurrari. Subsequently, on the application of the parties, the Collector made a regular partition by which two bigahs of the mokurrari land were allotted to the other sharers, who refused to recognise the grantee's mokurrari rights for that portion of the land, contending that as, under the private partition, all the four bigahs were in the share of the grantor, the loss of rent should be on him and that the Collector's butwarrah could not transfer two bigahs with the mokurrari or smaller rental to the other sharers. Held, that the grantee's mokurrari title could not be got rid of by the butwarrah, and that he was entitled to recognition by the other sharers. SHEIK AHMEDULLA v. SHEIK ASHRUFF HOSSEIN, 8 B.L.R. App. 73, Note. = 13 W.R. 447. [Diss., 26 C. 434 = 3 C.W.N. 209; F., 12 C.L.R. 281; Appr., 20 C. 285.]

(11)—Arrangement between co-sharers of mahal—Assignment of particular shares to co-sharers—Payment of rent by cultivator to co-sharer—Right of co-sharer to sue for ejectment.—The sharers of an undivided mahal had by arrangements between themselves assigned particular shares to different sharers. This arrangement had been acceded to by the defendant (cultivator of a specific share) who had been paying rent to the plaintiffs (the sharers to whom the above share had been assigned) to the exclusion of the other co-sharers. Held, in a suit by the plaintiffs against the cultivator for non-payment of rent, that the former were entitled to sue for ejectment, and that the defendant was estopped from questioning their competency to sue for the above relief as the relationship of landlord and tenant had been established between the plaintiffs and the defendant. JANKEE DASS v. SYUD MAHOMED, 1 N.W.P. 76. (2 Agra 282, D.)

(12)—Rent — Enhancement — Howaldar — Occupancy ryot—Privilege.—A person held part of a howalah and called himself a Howaldar. But in reality he was a mere cultivating ryot, and tilled the land he held with his own hands. Held, that he was not privileged to hold at lower rates than his neighbours. ASMUTTOOLAH v. KALY PERSHAD DOSS CHOWDHRY, 3 W.R. Act X, Rul. 11.

(13)—Huq-e-lagaun—Heirs of sole proprietor, rights of—Butwarrah between heirs, effect of—Ryottee rights.—In a suit to recover a huq-e-lagaun or the half share of the produce of certain trees planted by the plaintiff's ancestor A, on the ground that though, by a butwarrah entered into by A's heirs, these trees fell into the share of the defendants, the plaintiffs were still entitled to recover half of the produce as succeeding to the ryottee rights of A, held, that as A was the sole proprietor of the land on which these trees were planted, and not a mere co-sharer with others, all his heirs, both the plaintiffs and defendants, were co-proprietors also, according to their respective shares, and when the butwarrah was made, the division between them was of the proprietary right, and that no ryottee right existed. MUSSAMUT AMEERUN v. MUSSAMUT SUNJEEDA, 11 W. R. 226.

(14)—Butwarrah, conclusive effect of, as between shareholders of only, holders of under-tenures not affected by.—A butwarrah is only conclusive between the shareholders themselves, but not between them and other parties who may happen to have held under-tenures, etc., at the time. If they were fraudulent, or in any way invalid, the mere circumstance of the butwarrah could give them no validity. WOOMASH CHUNDER MOJOMDAR v. DWARKANATH ROY, 4 W.R. 80.

(15) Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 20—Butwarrah regularly carried out—Auction purchaser when a party.—If a butwarrah is regularly carried out and is sanctioned in due course by the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue, under s. 20, Reg. XIX of 1814, all questions relating to the different shares are finally disposed of, and no suit for altering them can lie. A person who, purchasing the defaulting share, takes the place of the defaulting shareholder and objects to the butwarrah proceedings, is a party to the butwarrah, and the order passed thereon by the revenue authorities are by law final and conclusive. SHAIK ZAKER ALI CHOWDHRY v. JUGDESSUREE, 1 W.R. 323. [Appr., 2 B.L.R. App. 40; D., 16 W.R. 190.]

(16)—Act XIX of 1863—Claim to cultivating right of occupancy—Determination conflicting proprietary titles—Seer land—Partition among co-sharers—Effect on cultivators.—A question involving a claim to a cultivating right of occupancy is not one which could be properly decided in a suit for partition under Act XIX of 1863, under which only questions of conflicting proprietary title can be determined. Where an estate in which the proprietors have seer land is partitioned, such partition among the co-sharers in no way affects any cultivating rights which may be possessed by cultivators, not co-sharers in the estate, but it is also a well understood effect and consequence of partition that co-sharers retain no right of occupancy in respect of any seer land which may have passed under the partition into the share of the other co-sharers. As seer holder, a proprietor has no cultivating right distinct from, and independent of, his proprietary character, and when, therefore, by partition, he loses proprietary title to any particular land, any cultivating right which he had in virtue of his proprietary character necessarily ceases. AMAN SINGH v. JEYGOPAL SINGH, 3 Agra 164.

(17)—Solenamah—Butwarrah.—Rights created under a butwarrah in regard to certain lands are not affected by a decree for that land obtained on a previous solenamah. RAKAB DOSS CHUCKERBUTTY v. SHUMBOO CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 1 W.R. 285.

(18)—Partition of parent-estate—Effect—S. 188, Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.—On the partition of the parent-estate, the original arrangement by which there was one tenancy under one holding of landlords comes to an end. The effect of the partitions is to create separate and distinct tenancies under the proprietors of each estate. It cannot be said that the proprietors of the several estates are joint landlords of the tenure, for the estates are separate, the share of the rent allotted to each forming a portion of the assets of that estate alone. So, a suit for enhancement of rent is maintainable by a proprietor of one of the estates in respect of the rent allotted to his estate. HEM CHANDRA CHOWDHRY v. KALI PRASANNA BHADURI, 26 C. 832. (22 W.R. 530, 5 C. 273, F.) [R., 10 C.W.N. 818.]

Partition—continued.—2.—Effect of Partition—concluded.

(19)—Partition of joint property in Calcutta—Right to easements.—Where a partition of joint property in Calcutta takes place by mutual conveyances, whether under the order of a Court or otherwise, the parties impliedly take their shares together with the easements of light and air according to the existing state of the premises. Where, in a suit for partition of a family dwelling house, the parties were directed to take their shares by mutual conveyances, with liberty to the plaintiff to raise a partition wall, but no conveyances were executed although the shares were allotted, held that the parties must in equity be considered to have taken as if under such conveyances, so far as the easements of light and air were concerned. BOLYE CHUNDER SEN v. LALMONI DAS, 14 C. 797. [R., 26 C. 516.]

—3.—Form of Partition.

(1)—Joint tenancy, severance of—Separate collections and management—Actual division of subject-matter not essential.—The only point taken in this special appeal was, that the plaintiff's case ought not to have been dismissed until the defendants proved a complete and formal partition, and that a separate enjoyment of the collections was not sufficient. The lower Court had found, as a fact, that the collections and management were separate, in short, that ownership was exercised over the property in certain defined shares. It was, therefore, clear that the joint tenancy was severed though not immediately followed by a de facto actual division of the subject-matter. MUSST. MOHROO KOOREE v. MUSST. GUNSOO KOOREE, 8 W.R. 385.

(2)—Declaration of title to enjoy separate possession of land—Suit for partition—Maintainability—A plaintiff, who has obtained a declaration of title to continue to enjoy separate possession of certain land, cannot sue the same defendant again for partition of the same land. ANDI v. THATHA, 10 M. 347.

(3)—Mode of partition—Principle—Improvements by one sharer.—The correct principle to be observed in effecting a partition is to make every allowance for the trouble taken by the defendant in bringing the land to a cultivable state and to respect his possession as far as possible, permitting him to remain in possession of the lands improved by him, except where land equal in original value could not be awarded to plaintiffs from the rest of the joint holding. RAM JOWAYA v. AMRIT RAM, 9 P.R. 1885, Rev.

(4)—Partition Act, XIX of 1863, ss. 18, 43—Suit for possession of property by co-sharer—Partition whether complete or incomplete.—In partitions under Act XIX of 1863, it is the Commissioner's decision that gives effect, that prior to it is merely the proposal of the Collector. Partition under the Act, whether by private arrangement or by arbitration, is subject to the confirmation of the Collector as imperfect partitions, depending on the consent of the parties, and effected from first to last only with their consent. The Courts in their judgments should bear in mind the very distinct character of the several kinds of partition, and until it has been ascertained with what description of partition they have to deal in each case, the question of the sufficiency of the sanction or confirmation which it may require cannot be determined. MIRZA MUHUMDEE BEG v. MEER HOSSEIN ALI, 2 N.W.P. 26.

(5)—Suit for partition of lands and houses and recovery of rents and profits—Moveables not claimed originally.—A person's claim was for the partition of certain immoveable property, and the profits of such property and the claim did not refer to moveables. The defendant in his account of the application of the income took credit for a sum as having been expended by him for jewels and clothes. Held that it followed on his (defendant's) own showing that the things so purchased (the purchase-money being charged against plaintiff) must belong to the plaintiff, and a decree declaring his right to obtain them may be supported though they were not originally claimed. BULDEO SAHAI v. CHADEE LAL, 2 N.W.P. 95.

(6)—Suit for land—Plaintiff found entitled to a share—Partition.—Plaintiff sued for the land in dispute as his own, on which defendant had trespassed and built a wall. Defendant claimed the land as his jointly with plaintiff. The lower Courts found that the land was in plaintiff's own share and that the defendant held his separately. Held, that no further formal partition was necessary. MUDHOO SOODUN CHATTERJEE v. JUDDOOPUTTY CHUCKERBUTTY, 9 W.R. 115.

(7)—Agreement to pay each lambardar his proportionate share of rent—No partition of holding.—The mere fact that a tenant has agreed to pay each lambardar his proportionate share of the entire rent has not the effect of partitioning the holding. The tenant continues to hold his land from the entire proprietary body. SARJUPRASAD v. MURATLAL, 14 C.P.L.R. 33. (5 W.R., (Act X, Rul. 78, F.).

when there would remain other land incapable of division and the tenure of the village would not be altered. Even if there is no such other land, partition may be made reserving a portion from division as common land. MIN v. BELA, 1 P.R. 1873, Rev.

(9)—Shamlat—Trees—Right of grower.—In a partition of Shamlat, land containing trees grown in the shamlat by a share-holder can be given to such share-holder though such a principle of division should not generally be followed. WARIS v. DARA, 15 P.R. 1881, Rev.

(10)—Waste — Common — Breaking up — Custom—S. 65, L.R. Act—Arbitrators—Court's interference.—In a hilly broken country in the Punjab, shareholders who have broken up common waste land retain by custom at partition such cultivated land as their share of culturable waste, if other culturable waste of equal quality is available to make good the share of share-holders who have not broken up. The Court has power to modify the arbitrator's proposals as to the mode of partition under s. 65, L.R. Act. SHARFU v. MALIK SULTAN MAHOMED, 11 P.R. 1881, Rev.

—4.—Partition, How effected.

(1)—Partition of joint property—Principle.—The principle in suits for partition of property (e.g., a number of houses) is that, if a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property, or of the shares, such partition ought to be made. If, on the contrary, no partition can be made without destroying the intrinsic value, then a money compensation should be given instead of the share which would fall by partition. ASHANULLAH v. KALI KINKER KUR, 10 C. 675. [R., 7 Bom. L.R. 482; D., 52 P.W.R. 1907, 36 P.R. 1909.]

(2)—Partition—Property in possession of sharers—Transfer of sharers—Debts—Security.—In affecting a partition, every sharer holding any joint property must bring it into account. But before any transfer of the shares to the sharers, security must be given by each to protect and indemnify the other co-sharers in respect of such portion of the debts, as the person giving security undertakes himself to discharge. MIRZA ALI HOSSEIN v. MIRZA ALI HOSSEIN, 2 Agra 96.

(3)—Butwarra—Object of butwarra—Necessity to award in exact proportion to jumma paid.—In every case of a butwarra, each party need not be awarded the same quantity of land. The object of a butwarra is to divide the lands in as compact a form as possible; consequently, the lands to be awarded to each party need not be in exact proportion to the amount of jumma paid by them respectively to the Government. MEER AFTABOODDEEN v. SHUMSOODDEEN MULLICK, 18 W.R. 461.

(4)—Execution of decree for partition of family property.—It is not open to the Court, in executing a decree for partition of family property, to order that any part of the property should remain joint, unless all the co-parceners, who are parties to the suit, agree to such an order being passed—Per White, J. Where, however, some of the co-parceners desire to keep a part of the property undivided and entire and if such appears, from the nature of the property, (place of family worship for instance) reasonable, the Court would be disinclined to order it to be divided without giving them an opportunity of keeping entire by allowing them, for example, to purchase the interest of the other co-parceners in it. Obiter.—Courts are not precluded by the decree from keeping a part of the property entire as a family dwelling-house if they are of opinion that a fair and equitable partition of the part is impossible between the members—Per Mitter, J. RAJCOOMAREE DASSEE v. GOPAL CHUNDER BOSE, 3 C. 514.

(5)—Irregular partition proceedings, how far effectual.—Plaintiffs were proprietors to whose share certain lands in the village were allotted on partition. Defendants were hereditary cultivators recorded as such in the Settlement paper, but at the partition, they were entered as non-hereditary cultivators in respect of these lands. In a suit by the plaintiffs to eject the defendants from the said lands which continued in their possession, it was contended by the latter that the partition was not effected in a legal manner and as such not binding upon them. Held that the requirements of para. 12, s. 9, Part I, Punjab Civil Code, which provides that the several possessions should be maintained as much as possible, if parties require it, had not been observed in the partition proceedings, and that the partition could not be accepted as final and conclusive. SURFURAZ KHAN v. EEDDOO KHAN, 53 P.R. 1866.

(6)—Partition suit—Arrangement inconvenient to party—Better arrangement not suggested—Right of party to demand different arrangement.—Where, in a partition suit, division was directed to be effected in a particular way and a party complained that his convenience was not consulted in making the arrangement, the Court would not disturb the arrangement, unless some other arrangement is suggested which would better satisfy or would be more equitable for all parties than the arrangement made by the Court. SUMMUN JHA v. BHOOBUT JHA, 18 W.R. 498. [R., 7 Bom. L.R. 482.]

(7)—Single co-sharer in sole enjoyment of plot—Procedure—Where, in a suit for partition, it is found that a single co-sharer is in sole enjoyment of a certain piece of land, the latter should be given as a whole to that one or other of the joint-owners, without its being subdivided between them. SREEMUTTY PUDDO MONEE DOSSEE v. DWARKANATH BISWAS 25 W.R. 335.

(8)—Necessity for all members of family being parties to suit.—No partition can be effected by a decree of Court, unless all the members of the family entitled to a share are brought before the Court, either as plaintiffs or defendants. UCHHAB NAIK v. LAKHAN NAIK, 9 C.P.L.R. 93.

(9)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 265—Decree for partition sent up to Collector for execution—Duty of Collector to divide lands and deliver shares.—The question referred for decision, in this case, was whether the Collector, to whom an application for execution of a decree for partition or separate possession of a share of land paying revenue to Government had been referred under s. 265 of the Civ. Pro. Code, was simply to make a division of land by measurement, or was also bound to deliver possession of the shares, as directed by the decree? Held that the Collector should, in such a case, after making the requisite division, proceed also to deliver possession of the divided shares. S. 265 of the Civ. Pro. Code, contemplates the "partition" being completely carried out by the Collector; and the circumstance that it does not provide for the Collector's reporting to the Court, as is the case in s. 396 with regard to lands not paying revenue to Government, points to the conclusion that the term "partition" in s. 265 is not confined to the mere division of the lands into the requisite parts, but includes the delivery of the shares to their respective allottees. This view is confirmed also by the language of ss. 113 and 114 of Bombay Act, V of 1879. PARBHUDAS LAKHMIDAS v. SHANKARBHAI, 11 B. 662. [R., 12 B. 371.]

(10)—Suit for partition—Improvements made by one joint owner.—If, in a suit for partition, it appears that the defendants, some members of the joint family, had improved and enhanced the value of the lands in their occupation, the partition ought to proceed on the basis of each co-sharer having an equal share of similar lands, compensation being allowed to each co-sharer for any expenditure in labour or otherwise by which it could be shown that the value of any portion of the partible property had been enhanced. If, on the partition, it should prove that the lands occupied by the defendants are not in excess of the share to which they are entitled, and that there are other lands of a similar description, out of which the plaintiff's share could be properly made up, the defendants may equitably be left in the enjoyment of the estate which they have reclaimed. If there are not other lands of a like character sufficient to make up the plaintiff's share, the portion necessary for this purpose must be taken from the lands reclaimed by the defendants, the plaintiffs in that case paying to the defendants whatever sum, it is shown, the defendants have expended on its reclamation. KALLIAN BANERJI v. MODHUSUDUN BANERJI, 8 C.L.R. 259.

—Plaintiff and defendant were share-holders in a mouza. Subsequent to a partition among the share-holders, the defendant by an agreement (ekrar) undertook to give the plaintiff certain land from his own share. Then proceedings for partition of the entire mouza were instituted under Reg. XIX of 1814, and the plaintiff applied to the Collector to grant him the land given by the defendant in addition to his own share, but the Collector left the parties to settle the matter between themselves. The plaintiff alleged that the lands originally held by him under the ekrar fell into the defendant's puttee and was held by him, and that, in lieu of them, the defendant gave other land out of his puttee to the plaintiff. The defendant denied the allegation in a way. Subsequently, a further partition was made by the Collector, and the land which the plaintiff alleged he held in exchange for the original land given by the defendant went into the share of a third person entirely, unconnected with the agreement. Hence the present suit by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant land under the original agreement. Held that in a case of this kind the only principle that can be adopted is that the Court should ascertain the relative value of the land originally made over to the plaintiff by the defendant to the entire lands of the defendant's puttee and assign, out of the present share of the defendant, land having the same relative value to the whole that the former land bore. In making this decree the proceedings of the Collector under the Butwarra law by which new estates were defined and recorded should not be interfered with and the plaintiff should be brought in as a co-sharer to a certain limited extent in the land which has been assigned by the defendant. OOMA DUTT CHOWDHRY v. HUNOOMAN CHOWDHRY, 22 W.R. 453. Appl., 23 B. 385.]

(12)—Partition—Butwarra, evidence of—Regulation XIX of 1814—Division, mode of.—Proceedings for partition having been instituted under Regulation XIX of 1814, it was proposed, in order to make equality of partition, that three villages should be divided in unequal proportions, and a goshwara was accordingly prepared by the Ameen, setting out in one column the extent of the shares to be allotted, and in another the assessed jumma of each share allotted. In a suit in 1873 by the representatives of one of the shareholders to recover portions of the three villages, the only evidence that the partition had been completed was an istahar of the Deputy Collector, dated October 1864, directing the nazir to require the ryots to pay their rents according to the extent of the shares as set forth in the first mentioned column of the goshwara; that is, according to the quantity instead of according to the quality and value which were the basis of the partition. Held (affirming the judgment of the High Court), that the plaintiff having failed to prove any order for partition drawn up, under s. 13 of the Regulation by the Collector, was not entitled to recover according to the quantity of the land; but if at all, according to its value as ascertained in the column of the goshwara in which the assessed jumma was set forth. HURRO SUNDARI DEBIA v. (13)—S.128, Bengal Act VII of 1876—Partition by Collector, effect of—Private partition—Incumbrances.—If a co-sharer of an undivided estate mortgages any portion of the estate, and if, subsequent to such encumbrance, the Collector, partitioning the estate under the Estate Partition Act VIII of 1876, allots the encumbered portion to another co-sharer, the latter takes the portion allotted to him free from the encumbrance created by the first mentioned co-sharer. In the case of a private partition, it is otherwise. JOY SANKARI GUPTA v. BHARAT CHANDRA BIRDHAN, 26 C. 434=3 C.W.N. 209. (1 C.W.N. 62, D.; 1 I.A. 106, P.C., F.)

(14)—Partition between partners—Separate possession taken with consent of other co-partners—Erection of wall—Injury to neighbours—Privacy—Right to light and air.—Co-partners may, on partition, be allowed to retain possession of such joint lands as they may have taken separate possession of with the express or implied consent of all or at least of a majority of the co-partners. A person cannot be allowed to maintain a wall to the injury of his neighbours. [D., 14 W.R. 103] Where the plaintiff has built an upper-story to his house, overlooking the inner apartments of the defendant who thereupon built a wall which deprived plaintiff of light and air, held that even if it were shown that light and air had long been enjoyed by the plaintiff and had then been cut off by defendant's wall, still, as plaintiff had no right to build an upper-story, with reference to the circumstances of domestic life in India, so as to intrude on the privacy of the females of the defendant's family, the plaintiff would have no relief in this respect, as he was the first and greater wrong-doer. SREENATH DUTT v. (15)—Easements—Construction of grants—General words—Severance of tenement—Passing of continuous easements—Light and air—Interim injunction—Mandatory injunction.—One of two houses, belonging jointly to several owners, possessed an easement of light and air over the other. Held, on a partition of the houses, the dominant tenement must continue to enjoy the easement, which was a continuous one, both by implication of law, and by the general words of the deed of partition. On a partition of a tenement, easements that are continuous will pass both by implication of law and by the general words of the conveyance. [R., 14 B. 452, 26 C. 516=3 C.W.N. 400.] Where there is an aperture capable of admitting light and air, such a fact will confer the same legal right to light and air, whether it be used exclusively for the passage of light and air, and termed a window, or intended to be used as a means of communication and called a door. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to obtain an injunction to restrain the defendant from constructing a building, so as to cause obstruction to the ancient light of the plaintiff, the Court granted an interim injunction from further proceeding with the building, upon the terms of the plaintiff submitting to obey any order the Court might make as to loss or damage that might be caused to the defendant by making such order. Whenever it is shown that the comfort and enjoyment of a man or of his family in the occupation of his house is seriously interfered with, or when there is a material injury to that which is a clear legal right, and it appears that damages, from the nature of the case, would not be a complete compensation, the Court will interfere and grant an injunction. [R., 3 N L. R. 114, 7 Bom. L. R. 352.] The exercise of the power of granting mandatory injunctions is one that must be attended with the greatest possible caution. It is confined to cases where the injury done to the plaintiff cannot be estimated in money and cannot sufficiently be compensated by a sum of money, for example where the interference with light and air renders it in a material degree unsuitable for the purposes to which it is applied, provided of course there is nothing, in the circumstances of the case, inequitable in putting in force that remedy. RATANJI HORMASJI BOTTLEWALLA v. Partition—continued.—5.—Private Partition.

(1)—Private partition—Effect upon co-parcenary and its members.—A private partition is enough, and no partition by metes and bounds is necessary, before a co-parcenary can be said to have ceased to exist, and those who were co-parceners have become "strangers" to one another. DIGAMBUR MISSER v. RAM LAL ROY, 14 C. 761. (11 M. I. A. 75, Rel. on.)

(2)—Butwarra Proceedings—Private arrangement—Onus of proof.—When, admittedly, an independent arrangement was made between the four annas plaintiff-proprietors and the patnidars of the twelve annas share, by which, as between them, the whole estate was partitioned, and this arrangement was acted on by possession following according to the partition, then, the plaintiffs cannot set aside this arrangement by simply relying on a butwarra to which the patnidars were not consenting parties. They must show that the arrangement was of a limited and conditional character. It was quite within the power of the plaintiffs and of the patnidars to divide the estate between them, and once this division was made and acted on, no conduct of the plaintiffs with a third party can disturb it or affect its validity. OBHOY CHURN SIRCAR v. HURI NATH ROY, 8 C. 72 = 10 C.L.R. 81. [Appr., 20 C. 285.]

(3)—Butwarra—Joint and undivided estate—Private partition.—Where a joint and undivided estate is subjected to private partition, and a portion of one share is granted by the owner in mokurrari, the grantee's mokurrari title cannot be got rid of by a regular butwarra subsequently made. A joint undivided estate having been subjected to private partition, four bigahs, which were in the portion held by A, were granted by him in mokurrari. Subsequently, on the application of the parties, the Collector made a regular partition by which two bigahs of the mokurrari land were allotted to the other sharers, who refused to recognise the grantee's mokurrari rights for that portion of the land, contending that as, under the private partition, all the four bigahs were in the share of the grantor, the loss of rent should be on him and that the Collector's butwarra could not transfer two bigahs with the mokurrari or smaller rental to the other sharers. Held that the grantee's mokurrari title could not be got rid of by the butwarra, and that he was entitled to recognition by the other sharers, *SHEIK AHMEDULLA v. have the land partitioned by metes and bounds. In order that persons may be co-parceners, and so have a right to partition, it seems, that not only must they be in joint possession of the property but that, that joint possession must be founded on the same title. A person holding a subordinate interest in land has been held not to have a right of partition as against the superior holder. (4 B.L.R., App. 57, note, 7 C. 577; R.) [Overruled, 24 C. 575, F.B. = 1 C. W.N. 406; R., 9 C.W.N. 699.] There is no rule which would compel a plaintiff, when suing for partition of lands, in which he and the defendants are jointly interested to ask for the partition of other lands in which third parties are also interested. MUKUNDA LAL PAL CHOWDHRY v. LEHURAUX, 20 C. 379. (12 C. 566, 6 B.L.R. 134, R.) [F., 1 C.L.J. 40.]

(5)—Private partition—Exercise of right for a long period—Subsequent butwarra of whole estate.—The division of an estate into four puttees took place more than 50 years ago. Some of the defendants' ancestors sued the ancestors of the present plaintiffs upon it, and obtained a decree in 1815 for possession of the puttee which under it fell to their share, and all the co-sharers had exercised rights of ownership over their respective puttees quite independently of one another, some co-sharers having actually purchased portions from others as if they were dealing with entire strangers. This private arrangement remained in force till in 1847 the one-fourth proprietors (including the plaintiffs) by suit in the Civil Court, obtained a regular separation of their share, and in assigning to them their proper area of land and proportion of the assets, a quantity of land was withdrawn from the share up to that time enjoyed by the plaintiffs and their co-sharers in one-fourth of the whole estate. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to demand a butwarra of the whole estate and that the several co-proprietors being thus wholly separate in their rights and interests, the defendants were not liable to compensate the plaintiffs for losing what another litigant has obtained from them by action of the Court. PERMESSUR DUTT SAHEE v. AUDH SAHAJEE, 5 W. R. 40.

(6)—Private butwarra binding parties—Not binding on Government.—A private butwarra is certainly binding as between the parties to it and persons claiming title under them. Such a butwarra is no doubt not binding against the Government, or against a purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue who derives his title directly from the Government. TRIPOORAH SOONDORRE CHOWDHERANEE v. KALI CHURN ROY CHOWDHRY, 18 W.R. 327.

(7)—Right of suit—Butwarra—Annulment by decree—No eviction.—Though a private partition might have been annulled by a decree of the Court, in the absence of eviction of the plaintiff consequent upon the decree, he has no cause of action to maintain a suit for possession of his share in the estate. POOROOSOTTUM CHUNDER v. NITYE SOONDER PANDEY, 22 W.R. 105.

(8)—Partition proceedings under Reg. XIX of 1814—Suit for stay—Nature of suit—Stamp—Power of collector—Proceedings in Revenue Courts under the regulation—Private partition no bar.—An allottee under a private partition, suing for stay of subsequent partition proceedings under Reg. XIX of 1814 and for confirmation of possession, should not stamp the plaint on the value of the entire estate, the suit being one for a declaratory decree or for something in the nature of an injunction. The Collector's power to bring an estate under partition under Reg. XIX of 1814 depends upon whether it is "held in common tenancy;" if not, he would only be competent to make an assignment of the revenue, in proportion to the holdings of the shareholders. A private partition of such lands is no bar to proceedings in Revenue Courts under s. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814. JOYNATH ROY v. LALL BAHADOUR SINGH, 8 C. 126 = 10 C.L.R. 146.

(9)—Partition by Collector—Private partition—Butwarra—Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 30.—It is not correct to say that, under s. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814, the Collector is not at liberty to make any partition where the owners have already partitioned the lands amongst themselves. The true meaning of the section is that the Collector must be guided by the nature of the estate in applying the rules contained in the preceding sections of the Regulation; and that, where estates are not held in common tenancy, only a portion of those rules will apply. If the parties have divided the lands without agreeing as to the shares of the Government revenue to be paid by them respectively, all the Collector has to do when a partition has been applied for, is to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the interest of each shareholder. If they have divided the lands and arranged amongst themselves as to the portion of the Government revenue which each has to pay, it is open to the Collector to accept or reject that arrangement. The Civil Court has nothing to do with the matter. AJODHIYA LALL v. GUMANI LALL, 2 C.L.R. 134.

(10)—Reg. XIX of 1814—Act XIX of 1863—Private partition of shamilat by consent of parties—Imperfect Revenue partition—Effect—Distinction between private and imperfect butwarra.—A private partition of the shamilat made by the mutual consent of all concerned, is not any the less of binding effect than an imperfect partition conducted by the Revenue authorities under the rules. If a private partition has been completed and has taken effect, and it be established that a particular plot of land fell to a certain proprietor by that partition, then, the title of that proprietor in the land is as good as if he held it by a butwarra; and a subsequent partition, the absence of any agreement between the parties to that effect, altering the distribution of land previously divided among the proprietors by a private partition, complete in all its features as above explained, cannot legally be had. There is no difference in the effect of a private and an imperfect partition; but the main distinctions between such partitions and a regular butwarra under Reg. XIX of 1814 or Act XIX of 1863, where this Regulation or Act is in vogue, consists in the maintenance of the joint responsibility of the whole village for the Government revenue by the one, while it is put an end to by the other. WALI v. GAMAN, 66 P.R. 1869.

(11)—Private partition of joint estate—Subsequent survey-proceedings not affected by partition—Survey demarcation proceedings valid without special sanction of Collector.—In this case, the lower appellate Court had proceeded on the ground of a private partition being inconsistent with survey proceedings and having the effect of taking away any legal effect from them. Held that this view was wrong. There might well have been an anterior private partition as alleged by the plaintiff, and subsequently, when the survey officers came to demarcate the lands, the representatives of the parties concerned might have indicated one parcel to be separately demarcated, and marked in one colour as one portion of the property and another parcel to be separately demarcated and marked in another colour as another portion. And in order to make such demarcation effective, no further special sanction by the Collector is necessary than the general acceptance of the survey proceedings as correct. HUNOOMAN CHOWBAY v. BINDOOTORABA, 10 W.R. 336.

(12)—Share-holders in Zamindari villages—Dispute among them—Partition—Compromise, construction of—"Hakh jethansi."—A compromise made, on a dispute among proprietors of shares in zamindari villages as to the respective amounts of the holdings undivided till then, to which they were entitled, by their common ancestor's five sons, of whom the plaintiff's father was the eldest, and filed in proceedings prior to the suit, was construed to have assigned to the plaintiff's father, an additional share according to a custom recorded in the khewut at settlement, in virtue of which the eldest brother was entitled to a share greater than that allotted to the others—a right termed "hakh jethansi." MANICKCHAND v. HIRA LAL, 20 C. 45, P.C. = 6 Sar. 235.

(13)—Mahomedan Law—Private partition—Holder of share in property sold, Right of pre-emption of.—According to the Mahomedan law, a sharer in the property sold has the first or strongest right of pre-emption. On the facts, as found by the lower Court, it was conclusively settled that the plaintiffs were sharers in the particular puttee which was the subject of the sale, and that the defendants, the purchasers, were not. It was argued that the plaintiffs and the defendants who purchased had equal rights, because they were originally sharers in the whole village, and did not, by reason of the partition which took place, cease to be so in such a manner as to alter their title to claim the right of pre-emption, inasmuch as the partition was private, and not officially recognised in the Collectorate books or otherwise, but the High Court was of opinion that, so long as the partition was complete and final, as among the parties to it, it sufficed to alter their position as effectively, so far as regards the exercise of the right of pre-emption, as if it had been made and recorded in the most formal manner possible. GOPAL SAHI v. OJODHEAPERSHAD, 2 W.R. 47. [Appr., 14 C. 761; R., 11 W.R. 71, 35 C. 575.]

(14)—Application for partition—Plea of private partition—“Question of title”—Entry in settlement record.—The objection to an application for partition that the land had already been partitioned, though wrongly recorded as joint in the revenue records raises a “question of title” within the meaning of s. 116, Punjab Land Revenue Act, so that an appeal lay in such matters from the decision of an Assistant Collector to the Collector and not to the Commissioner. *MALANG v. His remedy is by a suit for a declaration of his share and for partition as provided by s. 5, Reg. XIX of

(3)—Claim to partition—Portion of property in possession of claimant—Surrender of portion.—Where the plaintiff in a suit for partition is in possession of any portion of the estate for his own use, he must surrender it for the purpose of a strict account being taken of the whole joint ancestral property before he can get a decree in his favour. BABOO LALLJEET SINGH v. BABOO RAJ COOMAR SING, 25 W.R. 353.

(4)—Suit for partial partition—Partition of revenue—Paying land—Jurisdiction of Civil Court and Collector.—A suit for khas possession by partition of a certain portion only of a revenue-paying estate will not lie. [R., 14 C. 122.] A partition of revenue-paying lands cannot be made by a Civil Court independently of the Collector. The Civil Court can only pass a decree for partition of a revenue-paying estate, but the decree must be carried into execution solely by the Collector. RAM JOY GHOSE v. RAMRUNJUN CHUCKERBUTTI, 8 C.L.R. 367. [R., 24 C. 725.]

(5)—Joint property—Suit for partial partition.—Where the plaintiff sued for partition of one only of three khanabaris to which, along with other property, he was entitled jointly with the defendant, held, the suit would not lie. HARIDAS SANIYAL v. PRANNATH SANIYAL, 12 C. 566.

(6)—Suit for partial partition—Jurisdiction of High Court (original side).—If a man sues for partition of joint property and the defendant alleges that there is other property, the plaintiff is bound to submit to partition of all the properties; and if he sued in the mofussil, he would either have to amend his plaint accordingly and pay the extra stamp duty, or have his suit dismissed. But there is no ad valorem fee in the original side of the High Court, and if the defendant claims that there is other property to be partitioned, and it turns out that there is other property, that is no reason for the dismissal of the suit. It is a reason for including the other property in the suit, if the Court has jurisdiction to deal with such property. Where one of the properties sought to be partitioned is outside the jurisdiction, and no leave has been granted under the charter to sue in respect of that property, the High Court in its original side can deal with so much of the land as is within the jurisdiction. *PUNCHANUN MULLICK v. He must implead all the ryots whose rights he questions, but he need not implead other ryots whose rights and privileges are not questioned. [R., 18 M.L.J. 85.] The partition must be carried out by the Collector, and, therefore, when a preliminary decree has been made, it would be sent to the Collector, and, when partition is concluded by him, the final decree would be prepared. RAMANUJA v. (8)—Partition between subordinate tenure-holders—Landlords made parties—Joint proprietors—Contract.—A was a putnidar of a four-anna share, and B of another similar share of an undivided eight-anna share of a zemindari, held as two separate estates by the two zamin-dars, one of whom gave the putni to B, and the other gave the putni to A. The lands of the entire eight annas were undivided. B sued for division and partition of lands, and brought his action against A, who had never entered into any contract with B or his landlord to divide the lands. The two landlords were made defendants. B's landlord gave his consent to the suit, and the other landlord did not appear. Held that there was no law that allowed one putnidar to sue another putnidar for a partition, there having been no contract between the two, or between the putnidar and his zemindar, to divide. RIDAI NATH SANDYAL v. (12)—Application for partition—Ground for refusal—S. 65, rule 6, P.L.R. Act 1872—Where, in partition proceedings before the commissioner, the parties made no general objection to partition, but attacked the principle and modes of partition as fixed by the Settlement Officer, and the Commissioner on the ground of faction disallowed partition under rule 6 framed under s. 65, P. Land Revenue Act, held that the said rule concerned only objections taken in limine by the parties and not to the present case. JAHANGIR KHAN v. AKBAR KHAN, 8 P.R. 1887, Rev.

(13)—Revenue Court—Grounds for stay of proceedings.—The only grounds on which a Revenue Court can stay proceedings to allow of a Civil suit being brought are those set forth in Rule E. II, 4 of the rules under the Land Revenue Act. All objections except those regarding the correctness of the entry in the record-of-rights upon which the shares to be assigned to parties or the mode of division to be adopted may depend must be decided by the Revenue Court. SALIG RAM v. BADHAWA MAL, 3 P.R. 1886, Rev. [F., 91 P.R. 1902.]

(14)—Partition—Power of Revenue Courts—Discretion.—Under the rules regarding partition framed under the Land Revenue Act, the Financial Commissioner held that Revenue Courts may order partition, whenever in their opinion it may be advisable to do so, even though a minority only desire it. SUBA v. DOWLAT, 12 P.R. 1885, Rev.

(15)—Reclamation and planting of common land—Effect on partition.—The fact that some of the proprietors of a village have reclaimed and planted out a large portion of the common land will not be a ground for them to resist a partition of such land. They can only claim to be maintained, in the division, as far as possible in the occupancy of the land they have planted out. NUTHOOA v. SOBHA, 8 P.R. 1868, Rev.

(16)—Partition not satisfactory—Suit to revise whole partition—Rectification of part divided.—Where a property has been partitioned, and one of the sharers was dissatisfied, he could only claim to have the whole partition revised, but could not ask for a rectification of a portion of the property so divided. TREPOORA SUNDARI v. (18)—Hindu Widow—Act XIX of 1873 (N.W. P. Land Revenue Act), s. 108.—A Hindu widow who has succeeded, as heir of her deceased husband, to his share of an estate which is a defined and separate share (though there has been no division by metes and bounds), who is in possession by inheritance, and not as an assignee of the profits of the share for her maintenance, and who is recorded as a co-sharer, is, under the terms of s. 108 of the Land Revenue Act, as such, entitled, as any other recorded shareholder would be, to claim a perfect partition of her share. The circumstance, that she might afterwards alienate her property contrary to the Hindu Law, so as to prejudice the rights of reversioners, would not bar her right as a co-sharer to partition. JHUNNA KUAR v. CHAIN SUKH, 3 A. 400.

(19)—Hindu Widow—Suit for partition of revenue paying estate—Bengal Act (VIII of 1876), s. 10.—A Hindu widow succeeding to her deceased husband's share in a revenue-paying estate is not the holder of merely a life-estate within the meaning of s. 10 of the Act of 1876; and even if s. 10 were applicable, still a Civil Court would not be debarred from decreeing partition of such estate at her instance, if a proper case for passing such a decree be made out by her. Distinction between a life-estate and a Hindu widow's estate and principles that should guide Courts in decreeing partition at a Hindu widows' instance, stated. MOHADEAY KOOER v. HAKAR NARAIN, 9 C. 244. (9 M.L. A. 539, 9 W.R. 108, 2 I.A. 256, R.)

(20)—Hindu law—Partition—Widow's right.—By Hindu law, a widow taking possession of the share of her deceased husband in joint undivided property has only a limited interest therein for the term of her life. She cannot claim the partition of her late husband's share. When partition by the sons takes place after the father's death, his widow may claim a share but that is very different to a claim to enforce partition. KAHN SINGH v. MUSSUMAT PREM KOUR, 28 P.R. 1870. (Appr., 11 P.R. 1899, 100 P.L.R. 1909 = 155 P.W.R. 1909; R., 22 P.R. 1878; D., 27 P.R. 1879, 116 P.R. 1879.)

(21)—Widow, co-sharer—Suit for partition—Discretion of officer—Guide to discretion.—A widow having a life interest in a share of a joint holding may apply for partition which the Revenue officer has full discretion to grant or refuse. Such discretion will be exercised in her favour, only if it is found that private partition had been effected during her husband's lifetime or when the other co-sharers do not allow her due enjoyment of her share. DAN SINGH v. MUSST. SUKHAN, 11 P.R. 1895, Rev. [Appr., 6 P.R. 1896, Rev.]

(22)—Hindu Law—Widow not entitled to claim partition, either in her own right or as representative of her son.—One F left two widows; one of them was the plaintiff, and the defendants in the suit were the son and grandson of the other widow. Plaintiff claimed partition of one-third of the land left by her late husband, alleging that the defendants had separated from their father in his life-time and obtained two-thirds of his lands, when F retained for himself, as his share, the remaining one-third and afterwards bestowed it on his son by the plaintiff, which son had subsequently disappeared and not been heard of, and that defendants had obtained and cultivated the one-third that had formed the share of the plaintiff's husband on the partition. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the land was joint and had never been divided and the plaintiff was only entitled to maintenance. The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the land was never divided but joint, and holding that, on that account, as well as in accordance with the family custom of the parties, plaintiff was only entitled to maintenance. The Chief Court was of opinion that it was not clear whether the plaintiff claimed a partition in her own right or in that of her son as his representative, but that, in either case, her claim was untenable. ATTUR SINGH v. MUSSAMAT PURTAPEE, 93 P.R. 1869. [R., 22 P.R. 1878, 116 P.R. 1879, 100 P.L.R. 1909.]

(24)—Mahomedan law—Division of property—Disposition of property—Sons by different wives.—It is not open to a son in Mahomedan law to compel his father to divide his property during his life-time and he cannot bring such a suit even as an objection to the distribution made by the father of his property among his sons by different wives. *PHULLEEKHAN v. And having done this, he would alone be entitled to have an order for partition of that mouzah as between himself and his co-sharers therein. Where the zemindari is so intermixed with the neighbouring zamindaris that the line of boundary cannot be identified, there is nothing in the law which entitles the plaintiff to call upon the Collector to make a new line of division between the zemindaris. But if the Collector has the means of ascertaining where the boundary between the zemindaris really lies, he is bound to carry out a partition between the parties, even though it may cost him some unusual trouble to effect it properly. BHURRUT THAKOOR v. the village proprietors in proprietary right. A village servant occupying one of two houses, within a Court-yard, cannot claim to have it divided as against a proprietor in the village who inhabits the other house, as the former is not entitled to any proprietary right in the village. He is only entitled to a right of way and user, during his occupation, in the Court-yard, but he has no proprietary right, and on his ceasing to occupy, the Court-yard goes to the proprietor of the land. BUTA SINGH v. (31)—Permanently settled estate—Partition between owners of separate shares—Effect as against Government.—Where two separate shares in a mouza were permanently settled at different dates, the purchaser of one of such shares at a revenue sale, may obtain a partition but cannot insist upon a partition of the estate under the Butwara Act, so as to bind the Government, also, except with its consent. AJODHYA PERSHAD v. (32)—Partition by Collector—Private partition—Butwara proceedings—Cause of action—Act VIII of 1869, s. 15.—Where there had been a private partition of an estate and the several share-holders had held their lands in accordance therewith, an application was made by some of the share-holders to the Collector to have a fresh partition made as if the whole lands were held jointly. Plaintiff, who was also a share-holder, objected, but his objection was overruled. Thereupon he brought a suit for confirmation of the partition and for an injunction to stay the partition pending before the Collector. Held that the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendants arose upon their moving the Collector to interfere with the first partition, and that the period of limitation in respect of such cause of action was the same as in any other suit for determining the rights of parties to immoveable property. MUSSAMUT BEBEE KHOOBUN v. (34)—Suit for partition—Duty of plaintiff to bring into hotchpot property in his possession—Omission to get included property in different jurisdiction—Subsequent suit for partition barred by res judicata.—As a general rule, a member of an undivided family cannot sue his co-sharers for his share in a portion only of family property, and he is bound to bring into hotchpot any undivided property in his own possession, in order that there may be a complete and final partition. The rule that every partition suit shall embrace all the joint family property, has been held to be subject to certain qualifications, as, for instance, where different portions of it lie in different jurisdictions, or where a portion is not available for actual partition as being in the possession of a mortgagee. But there is no authority for the proposition that a member who sues for partition of property in the hands of the defendant, can refuse to bring into hotchpot any undivided property held by himself, on the ground that it is situated within another jurisdiction. HARI NARAYAN BRAHME v. (36)—Joint occupancy tenants, decree in suit for partition between, effect of, on mutual rights of landlord and tenant.—In order to grant partition as between joint tenants of a holding, it is not necessary that the landlord should be a party to the suit. The decree for partition, however, which might be made in such a case, would be binding and effective only as between the joint-tenants, and could not bind the landlord or affect his rights as such: that is to say, it would not split up, so far as regards the landlord, the holding, or the rent payable to him or his remedies for the non-payment of the full rent of the whole holding and for the ejectment of the tenants from the whole in case the full rent was not paid. Consequently, the partition effected under the decree, to which he was no party, could not have the effect of apportioning the rent as between himself and the joint-tenants who were alone parties to the decree. MUHAMMAD BAKSH v. necessary to be taken into consideration, the balance of convenience is in favour of allowing partition. If it determines that question in the affirmative, the mere fact of the parties owning interests which are not co-ordinate in degree, ought not to be a bar to partition. (*Baring v. (43) — Inam village and cash allowance payable by Government—Co-sharer's right to claim partition—Right to manage imposed on particular branch of family by original grant—Family custom.—Plaintiff sued for partition of an inam village and of a cash allowance payable by Government out of the revenue of another village. Plaintiff's right to a one-fifth share in the above was admitted but his claim was resisted by one of the defendants on the ground that he was entitled to manage the village, and to receive the cash allowance on behalf of all the co-sharers and to distribute the profits of the village and the cash allowance amongst them in proportion to their respective shares and that the plaintiff was therefore, not entitled to partition. Holding that the defendant had established the above position the Subordinate Judge decided in his favour. The High Court reversed his decree and held that the right to manage property on behalf of co-sharers may be a distinct interest in land when the land is held on stranjam or impartible tenure. In the present case, the village in suit was an ordinary inam village, and there was nothing peculiar or impartible in the nature of the cash allowance. Although it may be that, even in such cases, the terms of the original grant can impose as a condition upon its enjoyment that the management of the property shall rest with a particular branch of the family of the grantees and that a long continued practice amounting to family custom may also operate to bring about the same result, the existence of such circumstances will have to be established by very clear and cogent evidence. In this case, on the other hand, neither by the terms of the original grant, nor by subsequent orders of the ruling power, nor by family custom, had the defendants' family acquired a right to perpetual management of the village in question or in consequence to resist its partition. *GOPAL HARI v. (44) — Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 265—Decree in suit for ejectment and possession, transfer of, to Collector for execution—Partition proceedings by Collector, ultra vires.—In this case, there was no such decree as is contemplated by s. 265 of the Civ. Pro. Code which could give jurisdiction to the Collector to proceed to a partition. There was no decree for the partition of the family property or for the separate possession of a share against co-sharers as contemplated by the said s. 265. The proceedings before the Collector were, therefore, altogether ultra vires and plaintiff in this suit for recovering money by sale of the mortgaged property, impleading as defendants also the purchasers of the property at the Collector's sale, was held entitled to ignore the Collector's proceedings and assert his claim under his mortgage. But as the defendants were at any rate in possession, even though as purchasers under a void decree, they could not be ousted in this suit, because, they were entitled to say that plaintiff had not established his title to sell the specific lands mortgaged to him. *NARAYEN NAGERKAR v. (45) — Shop jointly owned by two persons.—Suit for partition—Defendant's plea of injury likely to arise from partition—No legal injury where plaintiff legally entitled to partition.—In a suit for partition of a shop jointly owned by himself and the defendant and for separate possession, the defendant urged that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce partition of the shop to the injury of the defendant and that the shop was not capable of partition. Held that it was practicable to make a partition of the shop and that the plaintiff was legally entitled to have a partition effected and that therefore no injury in its legal sense would be caused to the defendant by the partition. GOBIND v. NARAIN DAS, 29 P.R. 1882.

(46) — Partition—Zemindari and joint liability for Government revenue—Partition assented to by all parties concerned—Effect of partition.

—A partition was made by the zemindars of their respective holdings and of their joint liability for the Government revenue. Though this partition was not carried out by the Revenue Court, it was acted upon by the Zemindars and the assignee of Government revenue also consented to such partition by accepting revenue from individual Zemindars and by holding them to be individually responsible for the amount due in respect of their several holdings. Held, that there was nothing to prevent the maafeedar who was the assignee of the Government revenue from assenting to any arrangement which the zemindars did make for the conversion of their joint into separate liability. RANEE SARNOMUY v. RAM CHARUN SINGH, 3 Agra. 251.

(47)—Co-sharers—Suit for partition—Right of co-sharer to sue for partition of portion of joint estate.—Where a co-sharer in a joint undivided estate sued to have his rights ascertained and partition made in respect of an orchard which formed part of the joint estate, the Civil Court was not entitled to decree partition or give possession of a separate share in the orchard, as there is no law which entitles a share-holder to obtain partition of a portion of an undivided estate against the will of the other co-sharers. MITHOO LAL v. GHOLAM NUSEER-UD-DIN, 3 Agra 276.

(48)—Co-sharer of shikmee talook, suit for partition by—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—In this case plaintiff sued against his own co-sharer and his superior landlords, for a partition of his share of a certain shikmee talook. The lower appellate Court held that the Civil Courts could not of themselves decree the partition sought by plaintiff; they might direct the Collector to carry out the partition under the Revenue Laws of butwarah, and its decree conveyed such an order. On special appeal the defendant contended that the Civil Courts cannot order any partition either themselves or through the Collector; and that no such partition can be made without the consent of all co-parceners of the shikmee talook, and of the superior landlords also. But the High Court held that the declaration of a right to a share of any property is a civil right open to be sued for by civil action and such a suit as the present is therefore cognizable in the Civil Courts. Also, the consent of the landlord is not necessary, nor is he a necessary party where partition has been asked to be made only between the co-sharers and not so as to be binding upon the landlord. MOTHOOR CHUNDER KURMOKAR v. (50)—Shikmee tenure, partition of, when can be upheld.—There can be no objection to an order for the partition of a shikmee tenure being made in any mode which does not affect the rights of the Government or of the zemindar or of the shikmeedars. OMESHCHUNDER SHAHA v. MANICK CHUNDER BONICK, 8 W.R. 128.

(51)—*Entry in wajib-ul-arz prohibiting partition—Question of title—Procedure.*—The question whether an entry in the wajib-ul-arz can operate to prevent partition is not a "question of title" within the meaning of s. 116 (a) P. NADIM GUL, 30 P.R. 1898.

(53)—Act XIX of 1863, s. 47—Decree of Civil Court for partition—Decree not executed.—A person who has obtained a decree from the Civil Court, declaring his right to certain sharers in the village, and directing a partition, and who has taken no proceedings to enforce his decree within the prescribed period of limitation, is not in the position of a sharer whose rights have been determined and who can be declared entitled to partition. His right having been determined, he is not a person entitled to partition under s. 47 of Act XIX of 1863. KISHEN SINGH v. DABEER SINGH, 2 Agra 272. [D., 13 A. 309 = A.W.N. 1891, 117.]

(54)—Right of defendant to take out execution.—In a suit for possession by partition, the decree is not one in favour of plaintiff only. In such a suit, the decree will be, or ought to be, for a joint declaration of the rights of the persons interested in the property of which partition is sought and is a decree in favour of each sharer. It decides what interest each of the sharers has in the property, the subject of partition. Such a decree renders a subsequent suit, by any of the sharers for a declaration of his interest in the subject of the partition suit, unnecessary. It is enough if the defendant's share is allotted to him in the decree, though it does not direct possession being given to him. Every one of the co-sharers, be he plaintiff or defendant, may execute the decree and take possession of the share allotted to him by the decree." WASDEO v. RUP CHAND, 23 P.R. 1905 = 13 P.L.R. 1905. (20 A. 81, 23 B. 184, F.; 12 A. 506, D.)

(56)—Act XIX of 1841, application under—Disallowance—Suit to establish right—Limitation.—A suit for establishing one's right to a share in certain property as regard which an application under Act XIX of 1841 was disallowed, may be brought within 12 years from the date of the cause of action, and does not require to be brought within one year from the date when the said application was disallowed. Where the defendant in a case not only admits the plaintiff's claim within twelve years, but also asserts that he has satisfied it, he himself removes the bar to the plaintiff's claim, and the law of limitation does not affect it. MUSSUMAT MOWEEDUNNISSA v. MAHOMED ALI, 1 W.R. 39. [Appl., 8 W.R. 126; R., 7 W.R. 199.]

(57)—Decree declaring plaintiff's right to share of common land—Partition and separate possession in execution refused—Suit against co-proprietors for value of share of profits, whether maintainable.—On obtaining a decree from the Tahsildar for the fourth share of the common land of the village, plaintiff applied to the Revenue authorities for partition and separate possession of his share. This having been eventually refused, plaintiff brought the present suit against his co-proprietors for a fourth share of the profits. Held that in whatever way the suit might be regarded, it was not maintainable. The defendants were co-proprietors with plaintiff and others of the shamilat land of which the land in question was a portion; but even if the defendants be regarded merely as tenants-at-will, they were not liable in the present suit to pay the plaintiff a share of the profits which they made from the land. They did not hold their land as tenants for the plaintiff, and were consequently not liable to be ejected by him alone, nor was their rent liable to be enhanced in a suit brought against them by him alone. If the suit be looked upon as a suit for mesne profits or for a share of mesne profits, it could not lie, for the defendants were rightly in possession of the land under a well-defined and recognised title. JAMUN SHAH v. (9)—Partition suit—Possession of property by manager—His liability to account—Suit for partial partition—Plaintiff agreeing to bring in to hotch pot property not first admitted—Frame of suit.—In a suit for partition against a brother who has been managing the family properties, where it is admitted that certain properties are not in the possession of the plaintiff and the defendant also admits the existence of those properties as joint family property, and cannot charge the plaintiff with possession of them, the defendant, as manager of the family, is primarily responsible for them and is bound to account for them. A suit for partition will not be converted into one for partial partition and so liable to be dismissed, merely by the failure of the plaintiff to disclose at the outset his possession of certain properties of the family though the plaintiff seeks a complete partition of the whole of the family property, if at an early stage of the case, the plaintiff expressed his willingness to bring those properties into hotch-pot. *VENKATA NARASIMHA NAIDU v. subsequently—A step in the action and not a step in aid of execution—Limitation.—Where a decree merely states the shares in the immoveable property to which plaintiffs are entitled, and leaves these as well as all other necessary figures to be worked out and settled at some subsequent period, the decree is not a final or executable decree. Before there can be any final or executable decree, all these matters must be worked out and determined in the suit, and, therefore, an application for the partition of the immoveable property in the above case is merely a further step in the action to which no limitation applies. *RAMASAWMY NAICKER v. The buildings had already been divided between them. A Courtyard appertaining to the premises was not partitioned. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant alleging that his share in the courtyard was two-thirds, and praying that a certain portion might be assigned for common use, and a certain other portion might be partitioned and a portion thereof, representing his two-thirds share, might be assigned to his separate use. Held that the relief sought was peculiar, inconvenient and impracticable and that therefore it could not be granted. *PARAS DAS v. The wajib-ul-arz contained a record of the custom, but declared that the amount was not fixed, but that the eldest son got whatever amount might be agreed upon. The matter was referred to the Tahsildar for report; but, before he could make a report, the parties presented a petition by way of compromise. The defendant prayed that the partition should be effected, in terms of the compromise. Held, that the wajib-ul-arz, whether prepared before or after Act XVII of 1876, is not necessarily to be accepted as sufficient proof of a custom even when not rebutted by other evidence or not shown to have been irregularly prepared. It may be presumed of a wajib-ul-arz prepared under Reg. VII of 1822 or under the Circular Order of the Chief Commissioner in 1863 and 1864, until the contrary is shown, that it was regularly prepared and that it is a correct record of a local custom. The wajib-ul-arz must be taken to be as it stands, and it is not open to the Court to fix the amount of Jethansi when the record of the custom shows that no amount has been fixed. It is of the essence of a valid custom that it shall be binding upon the parties concerned and not binding only to the extent to which one of the parties may choose to submit to it: Held, that the petition, stating that the matter had been compromised, could not be said to contain the terms of a contract between the parties such as is referred to in s. 92, Act I of 1872; but, if it were such a contract, oral evidence as to the alleged conditions precedent would be admissible under proviso (3) of that section. JANG BAHADUR SINGH v. (17)—Suit for declaration of right to share larger than that allotted—Bengal Reg. XIX of 1814.—Where a partition of an estate under Reg. XIX of 1814—Right to partition determinable only by Civil Court.*—It is competent to a Civil Court only to determine whether a plaintiff has or has not a right to a partition of a revenue-paying estate where such right has been disputed. The Civil Court has no authority to make the partition itself and such partition of an estate paying revenue to Government can only be made by the Collector under Reg. XIX of 1814. That part of the order by which the lower Court in this case had directed the partition itself to be made, was consequently set aside by the High Court. MOHSUN ALI v. NUZUM ALI, 6 W. R. 15.

This partition is beyond the power of the Civil Court to make. MUSSAMUT BHURTUN KOEREE v. TANGORE SINGH, 18 W.R. 147.

(20)—Partition effected under Reg. XIX of 1814—Suit, by share-holder in Civil Court for larger share—On the effective carrying out of a partition of an estate under Reg. XIX of 1814, one share-holder is not entitled to maintain a suit in the Civil Court to have it declared that he is entitled to a share larger than he claimed in the partition proceedings. RAMSAHAYA SINGH v. SYUD MUZAR ALI, 2 B.L.R. App. 40 (6). (1 W.R. 323, 6 W.R. 75, Cited & Approved)

(21)—Reg. XIX of 1814—Butwara—Finality—Right to sue—Cause of action—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Act VIII of 1859.—A butwara proceeding under Reg. XIX of 1814 may be final for fiscal purposes, but it cannot take away the right of suit conferred by Act VIII of 1859. Where a Collector declares the title of the defendant to an entire share of an estate, and proceeds to divide the share for him, such acts do cause an injury to and a slur upon the plaintiff claiming a fraction of the share, and give him a sufficient cause of action. SHEO PERSHAD SOOKOOL v. SHUNKER SAHOY, 16 W.R. 190. [R., 2 C.L.J. 351.]

(22)—Partition of lakhiraj estate—Jurisdiction—Civil Court.—The purchaser of a share in an undivided lakhiraj estate can sue his co-parceners for a batwara of his own portion. The cognizance of a suit of this nature by the Civil Court is not barred by any Act of Parliament or by any Regulation. The Collector could not make the batwara under the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1814. The Civil Court alone has jurisdiction, and the division must be made by the Court, either by the Munsif or by an officer of the Court. FATTEH BAHADUR v. JANKI BIBI, 4 B.L.R. App. 55=13 W.R. 74.

(23)—Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 4—Partition by Collector.—Where certain proprietors of estate held in common apply to the Collector for partition and the Collector partitions without objection being raised by any one, held that, so far as those shares were concerned, they were rightly and legally separated from the estate and cannot be re-united to it, by a suit in a Civil Court. Where the Collector has judicial notice of there being a dispute with regard to a certain share, he has no jurisdiction to make any separation of that share until the claim of the one or of the other has been disposed of by a Civil Court. In any suit to cancel the Collector's partition as regards such share, the Collector should be made a party. JOYMO-NEE DABIA v. IMAM BUKSH TALOOKDAR, 13 W.R. 471.

(24)—Partition of revenue-paying estate.—No partition of a revenue-paying estate can be effected through the Civil Court; and, even if it could be so effected, it should not be left to be carried out in the course of the execution of the decree. BADRI ROY v. BHUGWAT NARAIN DOBEY, 8 C. 649 = 11 C.L.R. 186. [D., 16 B. 528, 24 C. 725, F.B.]

(25)—Partition suit—Right of each party to get his share divided by way of execution of decree.—Held, that, where a suit originally framed for possession of certain property has been treated as a partition suit by the arbitrator to whom it was referred by the parties, and the decree based on the award allots a certain share to plaintiff as well as to each of the defendants, every one of them is entitled to get his own share divided by way of execution of the decree just like plaintiff. NARPAT RAI v. DEVI DAS, 16 P.W.R. 1912 = 14 Ind. Cas. 375 = 252 P.L.R. 1912. (12 P.W.R. 1911, R.)

(25-a)—Partition of revenue-paying estates.—Revenue paying estates must be partitioned by the Collector, and not by the Civil Court Ameen, by metes and bounds; and if the shares in such an estate are not themselves separate estates, but are mere fractional shares of integral estates, they cannot be partitioned in the absence of the other co-sharers. DAMOODUR MISSER v. SENABUTTY MISRAIN, 8 C. 537. [R., 24 C. 725, F.B.]

(26)—Joint owners of taluks—Possession of distinct parts within estates—Encroachment—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.—Case where it was held that a Civil Court had jurisdiction to effect a partition in a suit between joint owners of two talooks, who have been occupying and using separate and distinct parts of premises within the estate, where the object of the suit was to maintain the statu quo and to prevent further encroachment by defendants upon the part occupied by plaintiffs so that either party might occupy without dispute what they formerly occupied without any division of the Government revenue or alteration of the joint liability to pay that revenue. KALEE MOHUN SEN v. RAM SOONDER SEN, 24 W.R. 243. (22 W.R. 333, D.)

(27)—Civil Court, Jurisdiction of, to give decree in such case.—A Civil Court in the Punjab is competent to give a decree for the division of an estate or the separate possession of a share of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government, when the right to a share or the extent of the share is disputed; and such Court can direct that the person entitled to such decree may be put in possession thereof in accordance with the provisions of s. 225 of Act VIII of 1859. *MUTSADI MAL v. (28)—Act XIX of 1873, ss. 111, 113, 241—Partition by Collector, objection to—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.—The procedure provided by s. 113 of Act XIX of 1873 does not become obligatory on a Collector or Assistant Collector in partition proceedings, unless an objection to the partition has been made by a co-sharer in possession, and unless such objection was made before the day specified in the notice which the Collector or Assistant Collector is bound to issue under s. 111, and not even then unless such objection raises a question of title. And when s. 113 does not come into application in partition proceedings, s. 241 of that Act prohibits the Civil Courts from exercising any jurisdiction in the matter of the distribution of the land or the allotment of the mahal by partition. And if a Civil Court could not alter that distribution of the land, it follows that it could not entertain a suit so far as it sought to set aside the deed of sale of land allotted in the partition to the parties who made the deed. HARDEO SINGH v. NARPAT SINGH, 20 A. 75 = A.W.N. 1897, 197. [Not F., 23 A. 291, F.B.]

(29)—Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 20—"Subject-matter in dispute"—Partition suit—Jurisdiction—Competency of Court to decree partition of defendants shares inter se.—For the purpose of determining jurisdiction in a partition suit, the words "subject-matter in dispute" in the section must be taken to mean the share which the plaintiff asked to have partitioned, and not the entire estate. (3 C. 551, 8 C. 757, 8 M. 235, 11 B. 216, R.) [Appl., 22 B. 315; R., 15 C.P.L.R. 81, 4 L.B.R. 279.] Where a member of a joint family institutes a suit for partition of his share of the family property and no partition among the defendants inter se is prayed for, the Court can decree for partition only of the plaintiff's share, and it has no jurisdiction to partition as amongst the defendants the residue of the property. HIKMAT ALI v. WALI-UN-NISSA, 12 A. 506 = A.W.N. 1890, 128. [D., 23 P.R. 1905 = 13 P.L.R. 1905.]

(30)—Ss. 154 (c) and 96, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886)—Suit for "imperfect partition"—Jurisdiction.—A suit for partition, without any division of the Government Revenue, of some lands held and owned jointly by the parties in four different estates governed by the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, is one for "imperfect partition," according to s. 96. S. 154 (c) is a bar to the suit. ABDUL KHALIQ AHMED v. ABDUL KHALIQ CHOWDHRY, 23 C. 514. [D., 32 C. 1036 = 1 C.L.J. 421.]

(31)—S. 154, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886—Suit partition—Jurisdiction—Entire estate.—When the plaintiffs bring partition suit, they by lumping together the lands of a number of taluks, cannot give the Court a jurisdiction which it could not exercise in respect of any one of them, nor can they give it jurisdiction by excluding plots of land which properly appertain to them. Putting the narrowest construction on the Regulation, the Civil Courts are debarred from entertaining any claim for the division of an entire revenue-paying estate into two or more portions or from making any distribution of the land of such an estate. The plaintiff must show that the Court has jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matters of the suit. An estate does not cease to be an entire estate within the meaning of the Regulation, because a few plots of land are common to it and some other estate, or because they are brahmutter or debutter, or because they are held in some undefined way ijmali with other person. SARAT CHANDRA PURKAYASTHA v. PROKASH CHUNDRA DAS CHOWDHURY, 24 C. 751.

(32)—Partition, suit for—Question of title—Dismissal of objection involving question of title—Appeal—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Land Revenue Act, 1901, ss. 111 and 112—Decree.—In a partition case, the appellant presented a petition in which he set forth certain objections to the proposed partition, one being that the property was not partible. The Court of first instance held that the question of title raised by the appellant had already been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction and dismissed the petition. Held, that the order of the Court dismissing the petition was not a decree within the meaning of s. 112 of the Land Revenue Act, 1901, and that no appeal lay to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It is only when the Revenue Court goes into the merits of the objection that its order dealing with the objection is appealable as a decree. SHAHAMAT KHAN v. MUSSAMMAT AZIZUN-NISSA, 7 O. C. 161.

The latter contended that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Bombay Vatan-dars Act (III of 1874). Held that there was nothing in the Act, which took away the power of the Civil Court to make such a declaration as prayed for. The Act does not prevent the Court from declaring the plaintiff's right to the status of vatan-dars where the share defined is in respect of the share in the vatan belonging to their own particular branch and the declaration does not interfere with the rights of the Collector in any way as given him by the Act. (34)—Punjab Land Revenue Act (XXXIII of 1871), s. 65, cl. 2—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Right of widow to sue for partition.—In a suit for partition, although the extent of the share to which the plaintiff would be entitled is not contested, yet if the right to partition itself is contested, the cognizance of the suit by the Civil Courts is not barred by cl. 2, s. 65 of Act XXXIII of 1871. (97 P.R. 1876, R.) After the death of her father-in-law, a Hindu widow was recorded as owner of a $\frac{1}{5}$ th share of the khata in dispute and since then, she had been receiving from the defendants, her mother-in-law and brothers-in-law, who were recorded as owners of the remaining four shares, a fifth portion of the produce. The defendants having ceased to give her her share, she instituted a suit for partition. Held that she was entitled to a partition because "a separation in interest and right," though without "a de facto actual division of the subject-matter" had taken place between the parties and thus the joint family relation between them had been put an end to. (50 P.R. 1870, D.; 93 F.R. 1869, 1 B. H.C. 189, R.; 11 M.I.A. 75, 3 B.L.R. P.C. 41, F.) Held also that there was nothing inconsistent with the Hindu law or custom in holding that when there was a right to maintenance out of the ancestral estate and a continuous omission on the part of those actually managing it to discharge their obligation, a portion of the estate may be assigned to the widow in severalty upon the ordinary widow's tenure to secure that maintenance to her and render her in that respect independent of those who neglect to fulfil their duty towards her. RANJHA v. must, if he wishes to preserve his rights, take action within the time allowed by law. In the case of land coming under the Land Revenue Act of 1887, the remedy for the plaintiff in such a case is, at any time during the first three years, to apply under s. 122 of that Act to the Revenue Court to be put in possession of the field allotted to him, or thereafter, sometime during the following nine years, to bring a suit in the Civil Court for possession. FATEH DIN v. The District Judge on appeal considered that the Court-fee payable should be calculated ad valorem on the property in suit, and the case re-tried as a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The plaintiff agreed to amend his plaint so as to make it one for a declaration of title as well as for partition and to pay the necessary Court-fee. The District Judge thereupon remanded the case to the first Court for re-trial. The plaintiff appealed from that order: Held, that, if the plaintiff has title to the property and was a co-owner of that property with the defendant, the suit was one for partition of joint property and not one for declaration of title and recovery of possession. (12 C.W.N. 37, 6 C.L.J. 651, 3 M.L.T. 33, Rel. upon.) Held, also, that the plaintiff is not precluded by his conduct in acquiescing in the decision of the District Judge and amending his plaint, from filing this appeal, if, on reflection, he thought that the action he had taken was injudicious. SHASHI BHUSHAN v. Objections so taken could not be regarded as having been made at such a stage of the Revenue Court proceedings in the matter of the partition, as would have made s. 113 of the N.W.P. Land Revenue Act applicable. They could only be regarded as objections taken to the mode and form of partition, so that an appeal from the order of the Revenue Officer would lie to the Commissioner and not to the District Judge. —Appeal—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—N.W.P. and Oudh Act, III of 1901, ss. 107, 111, and 112—Court Fees Act, sch. ii, art. 1.—The respondent made an application for partition under s. 107 of the N.W.P. and Oudh Act, III of 1901, against which the appellant filed a petition of objections to the effect that the village was impartible and that he was entitled to haqq jethansi. The Assistant Collector made an order that the parties should produce their documentary evidence and adjourned the hearing to another date, on which issues were to be fixed. The parties filed their documentary evidence and the Court after hearing their pleaders passed an order granting partition. In his order the Assistant Collector gave certain reasons for holding that the appellant was not entitled to haqq jetnansi, that it was unnecessary and improper to consider it a dispute regarding proprietary right under s. 111, Act III of 1901, and that the estate was partible. The appellant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the memorandum of appeal bore a court-fee label of Rs. 2. Held, that the Assistant Collector's order contained a formal expression of an adjudication upon the objections raised by the appellant and amounted to a decree and was appealable to a Civil Court. The word "decree" in s. 112, Act III of 1901, is not defined, but, having regard to the reference to the Code of Civil Procedure and to the injunction to follow the procedure prescribed by that Code, it must be held that the intention was to allow an appeal against an order which would amount to a decree as defined in that Code, so far as that definition can be applied. Held that the memorandum of appeal was sufficiently stamped. THAKUR BALDEO BAKHSI v. THAKUR BALBHADAR SINGH, 6 O.C. 372. (4 O.C. 289, F.) [Contended, 7 O.C. 161.]

(5)—Partition suit—Title of plaintiff to share in many of the properties included in plaint denied—Court-fee payable.—Where there was a dispute between the parties as to what constituted the joint family properties, and the title of the plaintiff's share in many of the properties included in the plaint was denied by the defendant, it was ruled on appeal to the High Court that the suit was maintainable upon payment of a Court-fee of Rs. 10. It was also pointed out that for the purposes of the stamp duty, the cause of action alleged in the plaint and that alone must be looked at. The appellate Court, however, differed in opinion as regards the question of costs. MOHENDRO CHANDRA GANGULI v. ASHUTOSH GANGULI, 20 C. 762.

(6)—Preparation of butwarah—Question of title—Decision—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court, Reg. XIX of 1854.—When, in preparing a butwarah under Reg. XIX of 1859 it is ascertained that the parties are at variance on a question of title, the proper procedure of the Collector is to stay the proceedings until all such questions of title are decided by a competent Court. The Collector has no authority to decide such questions, unless special power is given to him by the law. MUDDUN MOHUN v. KARTICK NATH PANDAY, 14 W.R. 335.

(7)—Act XIX of 1863—Decision by Collector—Question of title—Objection by parties—One of the plaintiffs made an application before the Collector long after partition had been ordered and while the process was going on praying that a certain item in the estate should be partitioned as being part of the joint property. Held that order of the Collector on the application was not open to appeal under s. 9 of Act XIX of 1863, as the objection taken did not fall under ss. 7 and 8 of the Act, not being urged prior to the order for partition. The Act contains no provision of the judicial decision by the Collector of objections raising questions of title arising in the course of the partition. CHOWDHRY ZALIM SINGH v. SEETLOO, 2 N.W.P. 404.

(8)—Partition Act (XIX of 1863), ss. 8, 9—Application for partition—Objection—Disposal of case by Collector without regard to provisions of Act VIII of 1859—Appeal.—A Collector before whom a party objects to a partition application under Act XIX of 1859, may either decline to grant the application or may himself proceed to enquire into the merits of the objection. In the latter case, he must follow the procedure prescribed in Act VIII of 1859. Under s. 8 of Act XIX of 1863, his omission to do so cannot change the form of appeal, and the parties aggrieved by such order passed in the enquiry in which Act VIII of 1859 was not followed have the same right of appeal to the District Court, as under s. 9 of the Partition Act, all orders, etc., under s. 8 for declaring the rights of parties are to be held to decisions and to be open to appeal. There is nothing said about procedure in s. 9 of Act XIX of 1863, but it is provided that when, of the two courses open to him, the Collector elects to determine the objection, his decision is open to appeal. RAMESHAR RAI v. SUBHOO RAI, 1 N.W.P. 134. [R., 2 N.W.P. 64; D., 2 A. 839.]

(9)—Act XIX of 1863, s. 33—Partition—Defendant's house falling to share of plaintiff—Right of defendant to retain possession against plaintiff.—Where upon partition the defendant's house fell within the plaintiff's lot, the plaintiff was entitled to sue to obtain possession of the house, and it lay on the defendant to prove that under s. 33, Act XIX of 1863, he was entitled to retain possession by having agreed to pay an equitable rent for the ground, which rent had been determined by the officer making the partition and had been stated in the paper of partition. LAIKHRAM v. Partition—continued.—8.—Miscellaneous—continued.

occupancy is not one which could be properly decided in a suit for partition under Act XIX of 1863, under which only questions of conflicting proprietary titles can be determined. Where an estate in which the proprietors have seer land is partitioned, such partition among the co-sharers in no way affects any cultivating rights which may be possessed by cultivators, not co-sharers in the estate, but it is also a well understood effect and consequence of partition that co-sharers retain no right of occupancy in respect of any seer land which may have passed under the partition into the share of the other co-sharers. As seer holder, a proprietor has no cultivating right distinct from, and independent of, his proprietary character, and when, therefore, by partition, he loses proprietary title to any particular land, any cultivating right which he had in virtue of his proprietary character necessarily ceases. AMAN SINGH v. JEYGOPAL SINGH, 3 Agra 164.

(11)—Mortgage by co-parcener—Partition—Reg. XIX of 1814.—P, L, B, K, and others were owners of a Zemindari called S, L, B, and K, mortgaged their 2-anna share in Mauza Kishoopore, one of the component parts of the Zemindari S to D. At the time when this mortgage was executed, the mortgagors were fully entitled to the 2-anna share above referred to. Subsequently, by virtue of a partition made under Reg. XIX of 1814, P, one of the share holders, got a 13-anna share in village Kishoopore in lieu of his entire interests in the zemindari; and of the three mortgagors, two, B and K, got their shares in other villages of the mehal. P brought a suit against D to recover possession of a 1-anna 15 dams share of mauza Kishoopore out of the 2-anna share held by him under his mortgage. Held that P had no cause of action against D and that the butwara was a butwara under Reg. XIX of 1814 and made no difference. If P chose to take his share in a village already burdened with a valid mortgage, he had to thank himself for it and whatever his remedies might be he could have no cause of action whatever against D who had an undoubted right to hold possession of the property mortgaged to him until his lien over it had been determined in due course of law. BABOO NISHAN SINGH v. BABOO JUJDEO SINGH, 4 B.L.R. App. 97.

(12)—Reg. XIX of 1814—Partition—Suit for confirmation of possession.—To a partition effected by the revenue authorities under Reg. XIX of 1814, the plaintiff presented a petition of objection, in which he alleged that his share had been included in and declared to be part and parcel of defendant's share. Plaintiff's petition of objection was rejected by the Collector. In a suit for a declaration of his right to the share claimed by him, and for confirmation of possession thereof, both the lower Courts gave a decree for the plaintiff. On special appeal, an objection was taken that the plaintiff's suit would not lie, no application having been made in it for the annulment of the butwara proceedings.

which had definitely included the property sued for in defendant's share. Held that the suit would lie; that there was no necessity for the plaintiff, who claimed to be in possession of his proper share, and sued only for a declaration of his title thereto, to include in his plaint an application for the renewal of the partition proceedings; and that those proceedings were final. INDRABATI KUNWARI v. MAHADEO CHOWDHRY, 1 B.L.R.S.N. 6.

(13)—Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 9—Land made over under butwarrah—Ejectment—Rate in butwara papers—Division of parent estate—Ryot.—In a suit for khas possession of certain land which fell to the plaintiff's share as per a butwarrah conducted under the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1814, it was alleged that the defendant, who was a co-sharer in the estate, had withheld possession. The defendant pleaded adverse possession for more than 12 years and on the merits contended that, as the land claimed was occupied by gardens made by his ancestors, he was entitled to hold possession, paying a fair rent to the plaintiff, and was not liable to ejectment. Held, that s. 9 of Reg. XIX of 1814 did not in any way apply to this land. That section referred to the dwelling-houses of the co-sharers, and to the offices, buildings, and ground immediately attached to these dwelling-houses, which the lands in dispute were not shown to be. Where the defendant never held the disputed lands as a ryot, the mere fact of a division of the parent estate does not reduce him to the position of a mere ryot. Where he held the land as the plaintiff held lands of a similar description until the butwarrah which awarded the land to the plaintiff's share, he is clearly entitled to possession of it in ejectment of the defendant, whose occupancy is not that of a ryot. The rate given in the butwarrah papers is not the fair rate for the lands; for, under s. 19, Reg. XIX of 1814, the gross produce of each village is calculated with the proportion of the public jumma assessed thereon. LULEET NARAIN SINGH v. GOPAL SINGH, 9 W.R. 145.

(14)—Butwarrah proceedings—Application to Collector—Suit for declaration of right to property—Suit based on baseless apprehensions—Cause of action—Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 20, Applicability of.—Plaintiff was the owner of an estate called S. Defendant was a sharer in a neighbouring estate called B alias S. When the defendant applied for a butwarrah of his share in the latter mouzah, the Collector ordered it to be made. Thereupon the plaintiff being apprehensive that the land of his estate S would be incorporated with the lands of the defendant's mouzah, applied to the Collector for a declaration that the former land had nothing to do with the latter. On the rejection of his application which was confirmed by the Revenue Commissioner on appeal, the plaintiff brought a suit to set aside the order and to have a declaration of his rights in mouzah S, and obtained decree in the Court of first instance which was however reversed by the lower appellate Court. On appeal to the High Court, held that the suit had been properly dismissed, as it had been clearly proved that the estates of the parties (plaintiff and defendant) were separate and distinct and were separately recorded in the towjee with distinct areas and sudder jummas, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action as the defendant did not dispute the plaintiff's ownership of the estate S, and the plaintiff did not state that any of the lands of his estate had been incorporated by the butwarrah in the estate of the defendant. S. 20 of Reg. XIX of 1814 applied to orders of the Board of Commissioners on the paper of partition and with reference to disputes between co-sharers, and had no reference to a case in which no partition had been yet made, and in which the plaintiff was a third party and not a co-sharer. FOOLBASHEE KOWAR v. ARZUN SAHOO, 12 W.R. 134.

(15)—Land assigned under legal butwara, dispossession of party from—Suit for restoration to state before butwara not maintainable.—Where a party has been dispossessed from land that had been assigned to him under a butwara legally made, though such dispossession may amount to a wrongful act, it is not competent to the party so dispossessed to maintain a suit for being restored to the old state of things prior to the butwara. Although he is at liberty to take any steps allowed by law to set aside the butwara itself, yet, until such a step has been taken, he is bound by the butwara, and the present suit instituted as on the ground of the wrongful act of the party dispossessing is not sustainable as such. HURO PERSHAD ROY v. (18)—Partition—Building—Unconditional division.—On partition of an undivided mahal, the plot in question with a "chabutra" belonging to the appellant fell to the share of the respondent. When the latter attempted to remove the "chabutra" the appellant objected. Held that, in the absence of any reservation in the appellant's favour entitling him to maintain the "chabutra" on the land which fell to the lot of the respondent on partition, he could not object to its removal. MULCHAND v. BHO-LANATH, A.W.N. 1883, 136.

(19)—Suit for share in inheritance—Partition of charges against estate—Separate suit—Unsecured debt.—A plaintiff will not be allowed by merely framing a suit for partition to evade his obligation to submit to a partition of the charges against the estate and the co-heirs could not be driven to a separate suit to recover their share of the debt, merely because the debt was not secured upon some specific portion of the estate. *RUKEN DIN v. In 1899, the Revenue Court declined to allow plaintiffs any share on partition on the ground that they were not then the owners of any land in the village. It appeared that, in 1854, the plaintiff's family owned 140 bighas of land which was carried away by river in that year or soon after. In 1880, a great portion of the village lands that had previously been carried away re-appeared and the plaintiffs took possession of some land and continued to remain in possession of it on the allegation that it belonged to them, though their right to it was not admitted by other landholders of the village. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a share in the land in proportion to their original land in the village for their rights as owners were not lost by submersion of their land. *AHMADYAR KHAN v. In execution of the partition decree mentioned above the partition of R's share was referred to a Commissioner who, however, by consent, made a partition of the bulk of the estate among all the parties interested. On an application by the defendants in execution of this decree, to be allowed their share thus allotted by the Commissioner, held that the duties of the Commissioner had ceased, and that the Court executing the decree had no power to go beyond its terms,

A purchaser of a specific portion in such land does not become a co-sharer. Where one of the co-sharers transferred his portion to a third person and the other sharer sued to have the deed cancelled and declare the holding to be still joint and his right therein; held that the suit was not one for cancellation of deed under s. 39, but a declaratory decree under s. 40, Specific Relief Act. MATU v. The same custom which prevails as to houses occupied by kamins should prevail as to land occupied by their workshops, even though the latter be not roofed in. Held by Lindsay, J., that there was no satisfactory proof of custom nor any proof of easement, and the case should be remanded for determination whether the plaintiffs had acquired an easement, and if not, whether there was satisfactory evidence of custom. Per Boulnois, J. It is open to the proprietary body, in whom the right of property in the whole of the common land of the village subsists, to allow persons to occupy portions of that land for their use and benefit in such a way as to acquire a right of user, and, under some circumstances, especially after a long

(1)—Partnership—Debt paid out of profits.—To constitute a partnership the parties must have agreed to carry on business and to share profits in some way in common. The relation of principal and agent ought not to be implied, any more than that of partnership, from the fact of a commission on profits and powers of control being given, when such relation is opposed to the real agreement and intention of the parties. Agreement in writing entered into between W. & Co., British merchants, carrying on business at Calcutta with a Hindu Rajah, by which, in consideration of moneys already advanced and which might be thereafter advanced by the Rajah to them, they agreed to carry on the business subject to the control of the Raja in several particulars; stipulating that the Rajah should receive a commission of twenty per cent. on all profits made by the firm, until the whole amount of the debt due to him should be paid off, with twelve per cent. interest upon all cash advances which had been or might be thereafter made by him to the firm. Further advances having been made by the Rajah to the firm, W. & Co. executed to him a mortgage of certain tea plantations, to secure the then amount of his advances, and the Rajah by a deed released his right to commission and interest under the original agreement between them. No proceeds of the business were ever received by the Rajah, and though he was credited in the books of the firm with a considerable sum, that sum was never received by him and was afterwards written back in the books of the firm. The Rajah did not interfere or exercise any such control in the business as to make him an ostensible partner in the firm. Held having regard to the restrictions and modifications made of late in the rule of law formerly prevailing, that participation in the net proceeds of a business made the participant liable as partner to third parties, and looking at the whole scope of the agreement, the primary object was to give security to the Rajah as a creditor of the firm of W. & Co., and that the participation given in the net proceeds of the business was not sufficient to establish a partnership between W. & Co., and the Rajah, as regards third parties. Although a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership and there may be cases where, from such participation alone, it may, as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be enforced, yet, whether that relation does or does not exist, must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. In the absence of any law or established custom existing in India in respect to partnership transactions, the law of England is to be resorted to for principles and rules to guide the Courts. At the same time, the usages of trade, and habits of business of the Indian community, so far as they may be peculiar or differ from those in England, are to be taken into consideration. MOLLWO MARCH v. COURT OF WARDS, 10 B.L.R. 312, P.C. = 18 W.R. 384 = I.A. Sup. Vol. 86 = 3 Sar. 168 = 9 Moo.P.C.N.S. 214. [F., 10 C. 166, 23 C. 406, 10 C.W.N. 313; R., 8 B. 105.]

(2)—Managing partner—Position of.—The law of partnership is, no doubt, a branch of the law of agency, but the position of the partners inter se cannot be altered because one partner chooses to take no part in the business, nor can he acquire greater rights on that account against his partners. Managing partners are principals as well as agents and cannot be compelled to prove payments made by them in the same way as an agent. DAJI ABAJI KHARE v. GOVIND NARAYAN BAPAT, 10 Bom. L.R. 811.

(3)—*Inheritance—Hindu Law — Widow's right to inherit her husband's joint property—Hindu khatris residing in towns—Hindu family — A brother making other brothers partners in his business—Nature of partnership—Death of one partner dissolves the partnership—Suit by widow for an account of partnership property—Limitation of such suit—Res judicata—Previous suit for partnership debt—Widow as co-plaintiff — Presumption of union—Separation—Re-union—Power of a Hindu over self-acquired property—Share of profits in agricultural land — Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Courts—Application of old or new Civ. Pro. Code (Old) Act XIV of 1882, ss. 13 and 32 and of new Civ. Pro. Code, (Act V of 1908), s. 11.—Held that: (1) Where a Hindu governed by Mitakshara Law is the sole proprietor of a business and makes his brothers or nephews his partners, and by way of gift assigns to each a certain share in that business and they are allowed to have such shares in that business ever since and to take its profits to the extent of their respective shares, the relationship thus created is that of partners of an ordinary partnership as defined by s. 238 of Act IX of 1872, but not of a hereditary trading partnership contemplated by Hindu law, and it dissolves under s. 253 (10) on the death of the donor or any of the other partners. (2) (A) A suit brought by the representative of one of the partners on his death praying the following reliefs is practically a suit for an account of a dissolved partnership and is governed by the three years limitation prescribed by art. 106, Limitation Act (XV of 1877). (a) It may be declared that the plaintiff is representative and heir of Lala Nathu Mal, her husband, and as such is entitled to the entire property left by her husband and also to two-thirds of the* entire property acquired with the joint capital of the shop after the death of the plaintiff's husband, no matter in whose name it is acquired. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 may be ordered to render account of the entire property and the business of the shop mentioned in paras 7 and 8 of the petition of the plaintiff from the date of the starting of the said firm up to 23rd April 1900, and the subsequent period up to the institution of the suit and (the plaintiff) may be awarded two-thirds share of the entire property, viz, cash, valuable securities of every description, shares in firms and companies, decrees passed by Courts and all other moveable and immoveable property of every kind acquired with the capital of the said firm or belonging to it, together with interest up to the date of realization; the bahis and all other documents are in possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the plaintiff cannot, therefore, give detail of such property. According to s. 7, cl. IV of the Court Fees Act, she has fixed the value of this relief at Rs. 15,00,000. (b) The defendant may be ordered to file in Court the bahis, account registers relating to the account of property in dispute belonging to the said firm and shown in the list marked (E), she (the plaintiff) may be awarded two-thirds of them, she may be ordered to obtain copies of the rest; the defendant may be ordered to file in Court other papers and documents of every kind relating to the property in dispute, a clue to which may be found from the registers and bahis shown in list marked (E) or which are proved in some other way to be in possession of the defendants, and she (the plaintiff) may be awarded documents and certificates relating to the property which is awarded to her by the Court, or some other order which the Court deems proper for protection of her (plaintiff's) rights and to do justice may be passed; according to s. 7, cl. IV, the value of this relief is fixed at Rs. 1,00,000. (c) She may be awarded possession of the houses shown in list marked (A) and valued at about Rs. 30,000. The buildings mentioned at No. 8 of the list are in possession of defendants Nos. 3 to 5, as stated in para 14, consequently they have been made defendants. (d) She may be awarded possession as manager of the property entered in list marked (C) valued at Rs. 10,200-10-0 an account of the income thereof may be prepared and the amount realized by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 may be awarded. (e) Any other orders that may be necessary for grant of the above relief may be passed or any other relief to which the plaintiff may be found entitled under the circumstances of the case and according to law and justice may be granted and the defendants may be ordered to pay the costs of this case. (B) Every suit involving a claim to account of the general partnership property and its share in the same and its profits is governed by the said art. 106. (C) Where a suit relating to the general account of a partnership business is barred by this article, it is equally barred in respect of the assets of the business, acquired within three years of institution. 3. Even in the absence of plea of limitation by defendant, both the first and appellate Courts are bound to see suo moto whether the claim, as laid down in the plaint, is barred by limitation in whole or in part. 4. Where, in a previous suit brought by a widow's husband's brothers for recovery of joint debt, the widow was impleaded under s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code, as co-plaintiff and, on an issue specially raised, it has been finally decided that she is entitled to the share to which her husband would have got, if alive, the widow is also entitled to get share in the rest of the property, and the question of widow's right therein becomes res judicata in a subsequent suit between the widow and her husband's brothers as regards that property, provided that all the other ingredients of the rule of res judicata are not wanting. 5. As the question of res judicata involves a substantive and real right within the meaning of s. 6 of Act X of 1897, its decision is to be governed by the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code in force at the time of instituting the suit, although it has been repealed by another Civ. Pro. Code, before the appeal is decided. But the principle as to the competency of the appellate Court is confined to the ordinary Courts established in this Province and does not apply where, having regard to the value of the two suits, one of them is appealable to their Lordships of the Privy Council and the other is not. 6. The Civil Court is not debarred under s. 77 (3) (k) of the Punjab Tenancy Act (XVII of 1877), from taking cognizance of that portion of the claim which relates to the share in profits of agricultural land entered in the books as part and parcel of the partnership property. 7. Among non-agricultural khatris residing in towns, brothers are presumed to be members of a joint family. But where one of them becomes separate and upon such separation shares of others are fixed, there is virtually a separation of all, and without proving that rest of the members agreed to remain united there is no presumption of re-union. 8. According to the text of Vrihaspati (Mitaksbara, Ch. 11, s. 9) a re-union in estate, properly so-called, can only take place between persons who were parties to the original partition. 9. A Hindu has full power to dispose of, as he likes, the acquired property. MUSSAMMAT NEHAL DEVI v. KISHORE CHAND, 142 P.W.R. 1910=97 P.R. 1910=8 Ind. Cas. 999.

(7)—Parties—Partnership firm—Debt due to—Representatives of a deceased partner—Not necessary parties—Contract Act, s. 45—Application of.—Money was advanced to the defendant by a partnership firm consisting of B and H. The only surviving member of the partnership at the date of suit was one M. He, together with the representatives of B, brought this suit for recovery of the money. Held that the representatives of a deceased partner were not necessary parties to a suit for recovery of a debt, which accrued due during the lifetime of the deceased partner. Held further that s. 45, Contract Act, does not apply to a suit for recovery of a debt due to a partnership firm. UGAR SEN v. LAKHMI CHAND, 7 A.L.J. 759 = 6 Ind. Cas. 840 = 32 A. 638.

(8)—Practice—Parties—Suit on a pro-note in favour of firm—Joinder of partners at the time of contracting the obligation—Necessity—Subsequent retirement of a partner—Effect—Negotiable instrument—Oral assignment—Invalidity—Ss. 130, 137, Transfer of Property Act.—The proper parties to a suit on a pro-note executed in favour of a firm are the members of the firm when the obligation was contracted, and the fact that one of them has retired makes no difference and he is still a proper party to join in the suit, just as a fresh partner who is brought in would not be a proper party. Even if such actionable claims as a negotiable instrument ought to be considered as capable of transfer otherwise than by methods recognised by mercantile law, it can only be by treating them as actionable claims within the meaning of s. 130, Transfer of Property Act, and ignoring their character as mercantile documents, and their transfer can be effected only by an instrument in writing signed by the transferor. S. 137 of the Act does not render oral transfer of such documents valid. R.M.A.R. RAMAN CHETTY v. P. NAGARATHNA NAICKER, 11 M.L.T. 246 = 15 Ind. Cas. 380. (17 M.L.J. 393, F.)

(9)—Suit between partners—Decree in favour of one partner against a debtor of the firm—Debtor not party to suit—Right of debtor to show that the sum is not due.—In a suit among partners, a decree was passed in favour of one of them for a certain amount as being due from a person who is not a partner. This latter person was not given an opportunity to show that such an amount was not due by him. Held that he had the right of showing that the sum was not so due. SHEIK MIRAN SAIB v. THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF INDIA, LTD., 8 M.L.T. 344 = 8 Ind. Cas. 490.

—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 27.—Though, under s. 263, Contract Act, the rights and obligations of partners continue, after the dissolution of the partnership, in all things necessary for the winding up of the business, yet it is only agents of a special kind that are recognised by the Civ. Pro. Code, as having authority to make an appearance, or application, or do an act, on behalf of party to the suit. No ordinary agent is recognised, nor has a partner, as such, any power to act for, or represent, a co-partner, except for the purpose of accepting service of summons (s. 74, Civ. Pro. Code). Hence, a plaint, which purports to be in the individual names of the partners, but is signed and verified by one of them as managing partner, and which is presented by a pleader having a vakalatnama from and after the dissolution of the partnership, is not duly filed or presented. Such a presentation is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by an amendment. S. 27, Civ. Pro. Code, only applies where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, or, where it is doubtful whether it has been instituted in the name of the right plaintiff, and it is not intended to cover the case of the non-joinder of a necessary party. Where a claim is time-barred at the time the necessary party expresses his willingness to be joined as a party, or comes forward to repudiate his interest in the claim, the suit must be dismissed. RELUMAL DEVLARAM v. CHELLARAM JODHARAM, 1 S.L.R. 191.

(11)—Practice—Parties—Suit by a partnership—Non-joinder of some partners—Effect.—A suit by one partner alone on behalf of a firm is bad for non-joinder of the other partners. SUBRAYA KINI v. A. RAMACHANDRA PAI, 7 M.L.T. 432 = 6 Ind. Cas. 438.

(12)—Suit for dissolution of—Necessary parties—Party, death of—Substitution of heirs, not made in time—Abatement of suit.—A suit for dissolution and winding-up of a partnership involves the determination of the plaintiff's share and the taking of accounts, and the plaintiff's share could not be determined definitely without making all the parties interested in the partnership, parties to the suit, and the accounts could not be properly taken in the absence of any of them. If, on the death of one of the defendants, his heirs are not made parties to the suit by substitution in time, the whole suit is to be dismissed, even where no relief against the deceased defendant or his heirs was asked for specifically. SRINATH PAL v. HARI CHARN PAL, 7 C.L.J. 266. (14 C. 791, R. & F.)

(13)—Suit by or against firm, maintainability of—Partners—Recognised agent of party not a party to suit—Court's error in entering names of parties to proceedings.—A firm cannot sue or be sued: only the partners can sue or be sued. The recognised agent of a party is not, as such, a party himself. In proceedings, generally, and in judgments and decrees especially, Courts must take care to enter the names of parties correctly, as any error or neglect of such points may lead to needless confusion and expense and delay to suitors. MUTU RAMAN CHETTI v. MYAT NYEIN, 4 L.B.R. 23.

(14)—Suit for money by one partner against another.—Where a partner sued a customer, for recovery of price of jewellery sold and, also, made his co-partner a defendant praying that, if the latter had received the money, the decree might be passed against him: Held, that one partner cannot sue another in this wise; that, if one partner thinks that his co-partner has not been treating him properly, his proper remedy is to apply for the dissolution of the partnership and to have its accounts taken. BHUT NATH DAS MALAKAR v. GIRISH CHANDRA BANERJEE, 11 C.W.N. 311.

(15)—Partnership carried on by two persons—Partnership debt, pro-note executed by one partner for—Cause of action—Effect of note on original liability.—If two partners are indebted on the partnership account and one of them alone gives a promissory note for the debt and it is not alleged or shown that the creditor intended to substitute the liability of the one giving the promissory note for the joint liability of the two, the partner who has not joined in the promissory note will continue liable only on the original cause of action, and he cannot be sued upon the promissory note. DARGA-VARPU SARRAPU v. RAMPRATAPU, 25 M. 580. [R., 27 M. 540.]

(16)—Maintainability of suit by one partner on pro-note given him by another.—The proper remedy of one partner against the other members of the firm is ordinarily a suit for a dissolution of partnership, and one partner is not entitled to maintain a suit, other than a suit for dissolution against, the other members of the firm in respect of the partnership transactions, on the ground that the plaintiff as a member of the firm would be a necessary defendant and that a man cannot maintain a suit against himself. (25 B. 606, Expl.) But this rule does not bar a suit by one member of the firm, upon a promissory note given him by two other members of the firm, in respect of an advance made by him to the firm and interest thereon. VALLAMKONDU SUBBIAH v. MALUPEDDI VENKATRAMIAH, 4 M.L.T. 195 = 18 M. L.J. 347 = 31 M. 343. (23 M. 597, R.)

(17)—Wrongful attachment of partnership property—Right of individual members to sue for damages.—Any member of a firm, whose property has been wrongfully attached by a Court-bailiff, must necessarily suffer some damage to his business reputation, and distress of mind. He has, therefore, a right to maintain a suit for damages against the attaching creditor. MAGHANMAL ROCHIRAM v. TIKAMDAS HOTCHAND, 2 S.L.R. 26.

Maintainability—Claim, if to be disallowed to the extent of the interest of the fraudulent partner—Apportionment, before dissolution.—A fraud committed by a partner while acting on his own separate account and not as agent for the firm is not imputable to the firm although he had not been connected with the firm he might not have been in a position to commit the fraud. Where one of the partners of a firm sued to recover a debt which was really due to the firm on the allegation that it was due to himself and not to the firm and his suit was dismissed on the ground that he had materially altered the hatchitta executed by the debtor by striking out the other partner's name without the debtor's consent. Held, that the other partners were not precluded from suing for the debt on behalf of the firm, making the first-mentioned partner a defendant in the suit. (33 C. 812, D.) That it was not open to the Court in such a suit to give them a decree for such portion only of the claim as represented their share in the firm. Questions regarding the share of the debt to be allocated to the partners inter se can only be decided when the accounts of the partnership are taken. MUNSHI BASIRUD-DIN MULLICK v. SURJA KUMAR NAIK, 12 C. W.N. 716.

(19)—Partnership—Conversion of partnership property—Right of creditors.—Held, that when partners transfer partnership property to one or more members of the firm, the transfer is valid and binding on the firm and its creditors if it is made bona fide. HAZARI MAL v. NARSINGH DAS, P L.R. 1900, p. 477.

(20)—Deceased partner—Surviving partner's right to bind representatives of deceased.—A surviving partner cannot bind the representatives of a deceased partner unless he is authorized to do so. The fact that the partnership is being wound up is not of itself sufficient to authorize a surviving partner to bind the representatives of a deceased partner by acknowledging a debt. RAJAGOPALA PILLAI v. KRISHNASAMI CHETTI, 8 M.L.J. 261.

(21)—Hindu joint family trading firm—Contract by managing member.—Where the managing member of a joint Hindu family which was carrying on a trading business, entered into a partnership with another firm, and the evidence showed it was on behalf of the family firm, held that not only the contracting member but the whole firm was bound by the contract of partnership. *AJUDHIA PRASAD v. (22)—Pro-note executed by member of partnership firm, not as agent of partnership—Liability of other partners.—Where a member of a partnership firm executed a promissory note to a stranger and signed his own name on the promissory note and neither signed the name of the firm nor described himself as a mere agent, the other partners are not liable to be sued on the promissory note, though the promissory note was executed for partnership purposes. It is a settled rule of law that on the one hand, the agent is liable as principal where he does not sign a promissory note as a mere agent, whilst on the other, his other partners are not liable unless the name of the firm is signed. No body is liable upon a promissory note unless his name or the name of some partnership or body of persons, of which he is one, appears on the note. Where the pro-note was executed for partnership purposes, a suit on the pro-note could be brought against the partnership upon the consideration for the promissory note. BASIVI REDDI v. TAMMANNA, 4 M L J. 76.

(23)—Single partner's power to mortgage immoveable property of the firm — English and Indian Law — Mahomedans living as joint family — S. 251, Contract Act.—The English doctrine that a single partner cannot mortgage the immoveable property of the firm appears to be due to the technical rule of English Law that an agent cannot execute a deed on behalf of his principal unless so authorised by deed. In India one partner can effect a legal as well as an equitable mortgage of partnership property (5 C. 792, F.; 4 A. 437, Diss.). Power to borrow is incidental to power to trade and power to pledge the business assets is incidental to power to borrow. Where, therefore, some Mahomedan brothers entered into a partnership in the nature of a joint family business, the eldest brother has power as manager to mortgage the business, and the express mention of a power to mortgage certain properties in a later deed would not restrict the power to sell or mortgage other properties, which may be inferred from the power to borrow given by a prior document. S. 251, Contract Act, does not apply in the absence of any agreement between the parties restricting the partner from executing a mortgage. T.P. ASAN KANI RAVUTHAR v. ARU ARU, SOMASUNDARAM CHETTIAR, 4 M.L.T. 66 = 31 M. 206.

(24)—Partnership—Right of creditor of a partner to attach assets of partnership.—When under a deed of partnership one of the partners is to supply the capital and to realize the assets of the partnership, and distribute profits among the partners to which they might be entitled on settlement of accounts, a creditor of the other partners is not entitled to recover debts due by them to him by attachment of any of the assets of the partnership, e.g., a cheque issued in the names of other partners for work undertaken and done in pursuance of the partnership deed. *DEWAN DAS v. against each individual plaintiff, separate counter-claims. In order to avoid multiplicity of suits, questions of this character should be disposed of in one action, unless any inconvenience would arise by their being so disposed of. If any inconvenience would arise, the Court has a discretion, under r. 47, Madras High Court Rules, 1902, to decline to allow the counter-claims to be set up. R.M.M. RAMANADAN CHETTY & CO. v. K M. ABDUL KARIM SAHIB, 8 M.L.T. 73 = 7 Ind. Cas. 267.

(26)—Dissolution—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 17, 215 and 215 A—Amendment of plaint—Jurisdiction.—K and others sued J. and others for recovery of a debt alleged to have been advanced for working a cotton and flour mill. The plea was that, under an agreement with their father, the plaintiffs became partners in the factory to work which they advanced capital, their share being fixed at one-fourth of the profit and losses, and the rate of interest on their advance at 6 per cent. per annum. The Lower Court on this plea held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue as for recovery of a loan, but that their proper remedy was to sue for an account of the partnership. It ordered amendment of the plaint accordingly, and, after inquiry, decreed the full amount with interest. Held, (1) that the amendment of the plaint, as being approved of by the Chief Court in appeal from that order, could not further be discussed; (2) that s. 215-A, Civ. Pro. Code, is imperative and a preliminary decree for dissolution of partnership must have been passed before the accounts could be gone into. Suit remanded on this point (27 A. 374, F.)—(3) that the suit being one arising out of contract, the agreement of partnership being written and executed at Ferozepur, and the defendants being British subjects of the Ludhiana District, subject to the law of British India, it did not matter that the factory, which was the subject matter of the partnership, was situated in a foreign territory, and, hence, that the Ferozepur Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. (11 W.R. 141, F.) (5) Methods that may be applied against the party bound by the decree to furnish accounts pointed out and held also that the party may be treated as in default, if, after being allowed suitable opportunities to furnish accounts, the party fails to do so. *JAGNANDAN SINGH v. (27)—Dormant partner — Shikmi Sharik—Notice of dissolution on retirement of dormant partner whether necessary—His liability—Contract Act, ss. 249 and 264—Evidence Act, s. 105.—The phrase Shikmi Sharik, by its etymological sense, means a partner whose name is not disclosed, that is, a dormant partner. Therefore, on the retirement of a Shikmi Sharik, no notice of the dissolution of the partnership need be given. But he is liable to all the claims on the partnership till the date of his retirement. The onus of proving that he has retired from the partnership at a specific period lies on him, on general principles as well as under s. 105, Evidence Act. HASHMAT ALI v. LACHMI NARAIN, 75 P.R. 1908 = 122 P.W.R. 1908.

(28)—Debt due from the firm—Liability of assignees of a partner on admission—Contract Act, ss. 140, 251.—Where the plaintiff paid sums on a security bond, executed by him on behalf of a partnership firm, the assignees of a partner admitted into the partnership by the other partners would also be liable to re-imburse the plaintiff, although the creditor had not absolved the assignor or accepted the assignment. It is not open to a partner in a firm, who is himself alone under a certain liability to an outsider, to engage on behalf of the whole firm that all its members shall be subject to that liability, unless he obtains authority from his partners so to engage. NIHARKU v. MADHO, 107 P.R. 1907. (4 A. 437, R.)

(29)—Partnership—Debtor—Payment to one partner, whether payment against all—Setting off amount due from one partner to debtor against amount due by latter to firm, whether binding on other partners.—Although a payment made by the debtor of a firm to one of the partners is a good payment against all, yet one partner cannot discharge a separate debt of his own by setting it off against a debt due to his firm, to the prejudice of his co-partners; that is, a payment by a debtor to one of the partners cannot be treated as a good payment binding upon the firm, when no money is paid by the debtor, and all that happens is that the partner sets off the amount due from him to the debtor against the amount due by the latter to the firm. But if the partner has already been made liable by his other partners for the amount set-off by him against the partnership debt due from the debtor, the latter will be entitled to a credit. BAIKUNTA NATH v. HARA LAL, 9 Ind. Cas. 116 = 13 C.L.J. 234. (19 W.R. 710, 19 M.L.J. 221, 5 M.L.T. 209, 1 Ind. Cas. 200, Rel. on.)

(30)—Company's paper endorsed in blank—Partnership transaction—Assets—Right to share.—Partnership property partly consisting of Company's paper was endorsed in blank by the deceased son of the testator shortly before his death, and handed over by him to his brothers. Held, that it was a mere ordinary partnership transaction, for the purpose of carrying on the business, and that they formed part of the partnership assets, in which the deceased son was entitled to share after the expenses of the partnership were discharged. BISSONATH CHUNDER v. SREEMUTTY BAMA-SOONDERY DOSSEE, 12 M.I.A. 41.

(31)—Contract Act, s. 253—Distribution of assets—Contribution to losses.—Under s. 253 of the Contract Act, the share of each partner in the partnership property is the value of his original contribution, and partners must contribute equally to losses sustained by the partnership. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the share of loss or profit is ascertained by dividing the total loss or profit by the number of partners. The rule laid down is, that, if the assets of the partnership will not suffice to pay the amount of capital to be credited to each partner, the deficiency is a loss of capital, and is to be borne or made good by the partners. NAM RAJ v. GOKAL CHAND, 40 P.R. 1908. (26 C. 281, R.)

(32)—Settled accounts—Error—Re-opening—Surcharge and falsification—General words of release—What passes.—B. and S, partners, had the partnership accounts strictly adjusted, and Rs. 39,465-7-0 was found due to B. By a deed of assignment, B, in consideration of Rs. 34,000 assigned and released his share in the firm to S. By common mistake, Government promissory notes for Rs. 7,000 were omitted from the accounts. On discovery of the mistake, B. sued for a share of the notes. Held, either the whole account may be re-opened, or leave may be given to B. to surcharge and falsify. The latter is the more proper course on the facts of this case (5 M.I.A. 372, R.). General words of release in a deed can only operate to pass what the parties had in contemplation, and not something with which they had no intention of dealing. BANEY MADHUB MULLICK v. SUBAL CHUNDER LAW, 11 C.W.N. 776.

(33)—Partnership accounts—Dissolution of firm—Deceased partner—Right of representatives to have an account—Dissolution does not affect liability of firm for subsisting contracts—Duty of surviving partners to take steps for completion of unperformed engagements—One member not competent to refer to arbitration unless authorised by the other members—Production of account books—Presumption if books not produced.—The right to call for an account upon the dissolution of a firm is mutual, and each partner is entitled to an account from his co-partners of their partnership dealings and transactions, unless he has legally waived or parted with such right. The personal representatives of a deceased partner are entitled to an account from the surviving partners. As the surviving partner is bound to account to the representatives of the deceased partners, they are bound to account when the deceased partner had the management or control of the assets of the firm. Before the accounts are taken, therefore, it is necessary to determine the precise extent to which each partner took part in the management of the firm. The dissolution of a partnership does not affect the liability of the firm for subsisting contracts, and it is, therefore, the duty of the surviving partners to take all steps necessary for the completion of their unperformed engagements. It is incompetent to one of the members of a partnership to bind the firm by a submission to arbitration, unless there be some special delegation of authority to that effect, either formal or informal. It is the duty of the surviving partners of a firm to produce the account books, so that the accounts may be properly adjusted; and if the accounting party does not produce them, or destroys them before the matters have been finally adjusted, the Court will presume everything, most unfavourable to him, consistent with established facts. HAZI MOHAMMAD AKBAR v. RAI DWARKA NATH SARKAR BAHADUR, 6 Ind. Cas. 63 = 11 C.L.J. 658 = 14 C.W.N. 1106.

(34)—Expulsion of one member by others, if causes dissolution—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 253 (7)—Suit for account or dissolution by excluded partner—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 106 and 120.—Under the Indian law, there is no dissolution of partnership, when one partner expels the other. A suit by the expelled partner for account or for dissolution of partnership and a share of the profits is not governed by art. 106, but by art. 120 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, and is within time, if brought within six years of the date of expulsion. Under the Indian law, a partner can be expelled only by an order of the Court. DWARKA DAS KARNANI v. CHUNI LAL DAGA, 12 C.W.N. 455.

(35)—Partnership—Suit against manager for accounts without asking dissolution of partnership.—It is a sound general principle that one partner should not be allowed to sue a co-partner for an account without, at the same time, claiming a final settlement of all questions between them, and a dissolution of partnership. But the general rule is clearly subject to exceptions. Where the parties were partners in respect of certain contracts, and in addition to being a partner, the defendant was also manager, receiving remuneration for his services as such, and the plaintiffs sued him to have an account rendered of his stewardship, alleging that he had not acted straightforwardly in respect of his management of the partnership affairs, held, that the suit was maintainable, and it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to have prayed for a dissolution of partnership. BABU AZIM KHAN v. MUHAMMAD RIAZ-UD-DIN, 4 P.L.R. 1902.

(36)—Contract Act, s. 253 (10)—Partnership business carried on after death of partner on the assumption of representative continuing as partner—Widow of deceased, a purdanashin lady, not taking any part in business and not examining accounts—Accountability of working partners—Accounts to commence from beginning of partnership, if accounts not settled—Partnership money, diversion of—Accounting with interest or profits—Remuneration to working partner—Balancing of accounts, effect of.—Where, on the death of a partner, the business was carried on on the assumption that his widow was a partner.—Held that the conduct of the parties showed that there must have been a contract between the original parties that the partnership would not be dissolved by the death of a partner within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 253 of the Contract Act, but should be continued with the representative of the deceased as a partner. The mere balancing of account in a book of account does not of itself constitute an account stated, much less does it constitute an account settled which the parties cannot re-open. In a general account of partnership dealings, the time from which the account is to begin is the commencement of the partnership, unless some account has since that time been settled by the partners, in which case the last settled account will be the point of departure. Where one of the partners, having the right to examine the partnership accounts, did not for a long time exercise the right; held, that, unless fraud was established, purchases and sales in respect of the business by the working partners should not be challenged, but they were bound to account for sums withdrawn from the partnership business and applied for purposes unconnected therewith, with the profits realized therefrom, or with interest at the option of the partner demanding the account. Where one of the partners wilfully leaves the others to carry on the partnership business unaided, the Court may, upon dissolution, decree an allowance in favour of the partner who had carried on the business alone. GOKUL KRISHNA DAS v. SAHIMUKHI, 16 C.W.N. 299 = 15 C.L.J. 204 = 13 Ind. Cas. 23.

(37)—Criminal breach of trust—Dishonest conversion by partner—Liability of partner to account for partnership money.—In a partnership, it is open to a partner to spend the money he receives and to account for it in dealing with the partnership; and such a partner is plainly entitled to be called upon for an account of the expenditure of the money which he has received. In a case where it was not satisfactorily made out that this was not done, and it could not be made out in the absence of a proper demand for an account, it was held that no dishonest conversion could be found, which would justify the conviction of the partner under s. 406, Penal Code. DEBI PRASAD BHAGAT v. NAGAR MULL, 35 C. 1108.

(38)—Dissolution—Partner's remedy for general account against co-partner barred—Co-partner recovering a particular item of partnership assets—Right to recover share therein—Maintainability of suit.—A partner, whose remedy against his co-partner for a general account is barred, can recover by suit his share of a particular item of partnership assets which the co-partner received after dissolution of the partnership. TIRUVENGADA MUDALIAR v. S. SADASIYA MUDALIAR, 8 M.L.T. 231 = 7 Ind. Cas. 811 = 20 M.L.J. 987.

(39)—Lease—Agreement by one partner on behalf of firm—Suit by lessor—Proper parties—Right to sue other partners for use and occupation.—The fact that a partner of a firm took a lease of premises in his own name on behalf of the partnership and with the assent of his partners, will not entitle the lessor to sue the other partners directly for the rent reserved by the lease. A lease is not a mere contract; it is a conveyance, and effects a transfer of property. The lessee can only be the person named in the lease. If he becomes a lessee on behalf of some one else—as he may do—the law regards him as a trustee for that other person and does not consider that other person the lessee, for the simple reason that there is no demise or conveyance to him. It is true that a lease usually contains a covenant or agreement to pay rent and that such agreement may be made on behalf of a person different from the one named in the instrument, provided it is not under seal. But so far as the lessor is concerned, the only person directly liable to be sued on such a covenant is the person to whom the demise is made. The lessor in the above case cannot make the other partners liable for use and occupation of the premises occupied by them. A claim for use and occupation can arise only when immoveable property is occupied by the defendants by the permission of the plaintiff. The lessor, having transferred or demised the land to one partner cannot have, during the continuance of the lease, any power to suffer or permit any one to occupy the same. Therefore, the foundation of a claim for use and occupation was necessarily wanting in the case. RAGOONATH DAS GOPAL DAS v. MORARJI JUTHA, 16 B. 568. [Diss., 19 M. 471.]

(1)—Partnership—Dissolution—Adultery with co-partner's wife.—The adultery of one partner with his co-partner's wife is a sufficient ground for dissolving the partnership. ABBOT v. CRUMP, 5 B.L.R. 109.

(2)—Partnership—Dissolution of partnership on death of one of the partners—Non-liability of his representatives before new partnership is formed—Indian Contract Act, s. 253 (10).—Held, that a partnership dissolves on the death of a partner, and unless a new partnership is formed, the representative of the deceased partner cannot be made jointly liable with the surviving partners. NATHU v. SHEO NARAIN, 60 P.W.R. 1911.

(3)—Suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 106.—Where the business of a partnership entered into for a specific period was not continued subsequent to the expiration thereof, held that it terminated on the date of the expiry of such term and that a suit by a partner for an account of such partnership fell under art. 106, Limitation Act, 1877. RAM CHAND v. SUBBAN BAKSH, 69 P.R. 1902.

(4)—Partnership—Death of one partner and introduction of another—Dissolution—Keeping of separate account-books.—In this suit, the defendant firm produced three account books and explained that this was due to the death of one partner and the introduction of another. Held that it was necessary to get the defendant to explain what effect the retirement of one partner and the introduction of another had upon the partnership, and, if this change caused no dissolution of the firm, why separate accounts were kept. It was also necessary that the defendant should explain his accounts with the plaintiff from the beginning. MOOST. ROOKMA v. MOOLCHUND, 94 P.R. 1866.

(5)—*Partnership accounts—Banking concern, joint—Deposit by a partner payable with interest—Suit to recover deposit if maintainable—Suit if maintainable when suit for dissolution and accounts previously instituted—Civ. Pro. High Court in revision directing an account to be taken of the amount alleged to be in deposit if plaintiff's appeal should fail: Held, that the suit was rightly dismissed as barred by the provisions of s. 10 of the Civ. Pro. Code, as the matter in issue in the suit was directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit. To stay the suit according to the strict language of s. 10 until by the decision of the previous suit the matter would be res judicata was needless. Obiter—Though, on general principles, the claim of a partner against a joint banking concern must, in course of winding-up proceedings, be postponed to those of outsiders, there may be cases in which the complete solvency of the bank is admitted and a partner might sue, like any other customer, for the taking separately of his private account as a customer and for the recovery of the balance found standing to his credit. Relief in such a case will only be refused when a partial account will work injustice to the other partners. MOHADEO PROSAD SHAHU v. GAJADHAR PROSAD SAHU, 16 C.W.N. 897 = 16 Ind. Cas. 459. (32 M. 76, Rel. on.)

—3.—Partnership, what constitutes.

(1)—Elements of—Participation of profits—Existence of partnership.—The right to control the property, the right to receive the profits, and the liability to share in losses are the elements of partnership. Participation in profits is no conclusive evidence of the existence of a partnership, but it is one of the circumstances and a very strong one, which is to be taken into consideration for the purpose of seeing whether or not a partnership exists. VADILAL v. KHUSHAL, 4 Bom. L.R. 968 = 27 B. 157.

(2)—Partnership—Participation in profits.—It is a fallacious argument that, because a man is interested in the profits of a partnership, he is therefore a partner. Participation in profits does not of itself constitute a partnership. The true question is not whether the person sought to be made liable participated in the profits, but whether the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf. There is no rule of law which imposes partnership liability on a person who advances money to others for carrying on their business and in return secures to himself a share of the profits which may arise from the employment in the business of the money so advanced by him. RAJA PRATAP CHANDRA SINGH BAHADUR v. MOLLWO, MARCH AND CO, 3 B.L.R. A.C. 238 = 12 W.R. 56. [Affirmed, 10 B.L.R. 312, P.C. = 18 W.R. 384.]

(3)—Loan to a person engaging in trade or undertaking—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), ss. 239, 240.—By s. 239 of the Indian Contract Act, partnership is defined to be "the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour, or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof between them." But where there is no such combination of property, labour, or skill, and one of the parties simply finances the other to enable him to engage in any trade or undertaking, upon a contract with such person that the lender shall receive interest at a rate varying with the profits, or that he shall receive a share of the profits (of the trade of undertaking which is solely conducted by the borrower), such a transaction does not of itself constitute the lender a partner, or render him responsible as such, even though the agreement between the parties may describe them as partners and may itself be designated a partnership agreement. BHAGGU LAL v. DE GRUYTHER, 4 A. 74 = A. W.N. 1881, 122. [R., U.B.R. 1903, 4th Quarter, Contract, 240, 58 P.L.R. 1904.]

(4)—Test of partnership—Borrowing of money—Equity in favour of the lender.—It is the carrying on of a business, and not an agreement to carry it on, which is the test of partnership. Hence, where the carrying on of the business of a partnership has already commenced, heavy liabilities have already been incurred, and some expenditure has been made, the mere delay in the formal execution of the deed of partnership is immaterial. Where money borrowed by one partner in the name of the firm but without the authority of the co-partners has been applied to paying off the debts of the firm, the lender is entitled in equity to repayment by the firm of the amount which he can show to have been so applied and the same rule extends to money bona fide borrowed and applied for any legitimate purpose of the firm. LAKSHMISHANKAR v. MOTIRAM, 6 Bom. L.R. 1106.

(5)—Sharing of gross returns—Effect of.—The sharing of gross returns does not of itself create a partnership. GANOO v. MUKUND KRISHNA BRAHMIN, 14 C.P.L.R. 12.

(6)—Ship—Co-owners—Partners.—The several co-owners of a ship are not partners on that account. There is a distinction between co-ownership and co-partnership. HYDERALI v. ELAHEE BUX MALOOM, 8 C. 1011 = 10 C.L.R. 606.

(8)—Family firm not partnership—Member—Drawing of hundis.—A partner in a trading firm may draw, endorse, etc., hundis for the purpose of partnership. A family firm is not a partnership within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act, because such an association requires the individual assent of all the members to it. HAJI NOOR MAHOMED v. joint Hindu family, the manager of the whole or any portion of the family property, is not, by reason of his occupying that position, bound to render any accounts whatever to the members of the family. There is no analogy whatever in this respect between the members of a joint Hindu family and the members of a partnership. An arrangement amongst the members of a joint Hindu family, that the accounts of a banking business carried on by them should be kept on the understanding that the profits, when realised, should be divided amongst the individual members in certain proportions, and that the expenses of each member should be credited and charged in the name of each member, is in the nature of a partnership. In such a case, an account will be decreed. S. M. RANGANMANI DAS v. KASHINATH DUTT, 3 B.L.R. O.C. 1 = 13 W.R. F.B. 76, Note. [R., 1 B. 561, 5 B. 589, 19 B. 532; Cons., 17 B. 271.]

(10)—What constitutes partnership—Cultivating partnership—Advance of working capital sufficient—No actual tilling by owner of land necessary.—To constitute a cultivating partnership, as distinguished from a tenancy, it is not essential that the person who provides the land should himself actually take part in tilling it. Where a Malguzar undertakes to provide, not only the land but a portion of the working capital on condition of receiving a proportion of the produce corresponding to the proportion of the capital, which he provides, a relation of partnership becomes constituted thereby. DEOPURI v. ARJUN, 10 C.P.L.R. 29. (6 C.P.L.R. 117, Expl.)

(11)—Partnership arrangement—Rent payable to one partner from the firm—Rent portion of capital—Act VIII of 1859, s. 377—Appeal by one of several defendants—Decree reversed against all.—Where the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract of partnership to work certain mines in a certain dur-putnee belonging to the plaintiff and it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff was to receive a sum of money as a bonus and also a certain sum yearly as rent for the land, and that the parties were to share the profits and bear the losses in certain proportions, and it was further stipulated that, in case coal should not be discovered beneath the soil, the plaintiff was to refund to the defendant both the amount of the bonus and also any sums which might have been received on account of rent: Held that this was a partnership arrangement and that the rent payable was to form part of the working expenses of the concern, after which the profits were to be divided in the agreed proportions, and that the payment of rent, or the money which went by the name of rent, was not a payment to be made as by a tenant to a landlord, but was in the nature of a fixed sum to be received by the plaintiff in consideration of the land which she brought into the concern, and which in fact, represented her portion of the capital. When any one of the defendants is enabled to appeal at any time against the judgment of the Court below, the appellate Court may, under the circumstances set forth in s. 377 of Act VIII of 1859, reverse the judgment appealed against, in favour of all the defendants. SREEMUNJUREE DOSSEE v. POORUSUTTUM DOSS, 9 W.R. 499.

(12)—Document creating partnership—Determination of partnership.—Where a document creating a partnership for a particular business is silent as to the date at which the partnership is to commence and end, held that the partnership is conterminous with the business for the purpose for which it was created. BUDDREENATH v. ISREE PERSHAUD, Cor. 114.

(13)—Partnership not sanctioned by law—Suit to recover capital invested in such a partnership.—Plaintiff sued defendant and two others for the dissolution of a partnership claiming a certain share of money including capital and profits. The partnership related to opium and ganja contracts. Defendant pleaded that the partnership was illegal on account of the terms of the license which prohibited partnership: Held, that the suit to recover even the money advanced as capital for the purposes of a partnership which was partly illegal was not maintainable at law. GOPAL-RAV v. KALLAPA, 3 Bom. L.R. 164.

(14)—Power of nominating successor in firm, devise by Will not exercise of—Failure to nominate successor, effect of.—This suit was brought by the widow of a deceased partner in a firm to recover a share in the profits made by the firm since the death of her husband. One of the original partners becoming involved in pecuniary difficulties, transferred his interest in the firm to the other partners H and S: so that, henceforward, they were the only partners in the firm, —H being entitled to sixty shares of the profits and S to forty shares. The widow of H now claimed her husband's share of the profits. The first question to be determined in the case was whether the Will of H operated as an exercise of the power of nominating a successor given by the partnership agreement. If it did, then, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed by her. It was, however, held that the Will of H did not operate as an exercise of the power of nominating his successor, and did not constitute the plaintiff a partner in the firm. Looking at the nature of the duties of the agents as defined by the articles of association coupled with the language of the agreement constituting the firm, and the circumstance that there was no capital employed in the business, it was clear that it was intended that, in default of nomination of a successor by a retiring or a deceased partner, the agency should be carried on by the continuing or surviving partners or partner. Under these circumstances, though the plaintiff was entitled to an account up to the death of H, her contention was not upheld that she was entitled to share in the "good-will" of the business as an asset of the firm. In this case, a receiver had been appointed for deceased H's estate to "get in the outstandings due to the deceased." This receiver figured as a co-plaintiff with the widow of H, the executrix, and it was thereon contended on behalf of the defendant that the suit was bad for misjoinder, as the receiver could sue only for what accrued due up to the date of the death of H, and not for anything accruing due subsequently to H's death. Held that there was no misjoinder. Apparently the receiver might have sued alone to recover everything that was due to the estate; but for greater safety, the executrix was also added as a plaintiff. BACHUBAI AND L.A. WATKINS v. SHAMJI JADOWJI, 9 B. 536. [R., 26 M. 330, 28 B. 94, 30 B. 250=6 Bom.L.R. 995.]

—4.—Rights and Liabilities of Partners.

(1)—Partnership—Liability of dormant partner—English and Indian Law—Bond entered as factory malik—Loan advanced on personal credit—Obligee's rights.—The doctrine that a dormant partner, when discovered, is liable for every debt incurred for the partnership by the active partner, is not absolute even in the Courts in England; and even if it were, the Courts in this country are not bound to follow it unless it is, as applied to a particular case, found to be consonant with the rules of equity, justice and good conscience. A bond was executed in favour of plaintiff by U in his capacity as "Malik and Mooktear" of a certain factory, and the bond recited that the money covered by it was borrowed by U in his above capacity to pay off a decree against the factory, and that the factory should stand pledged for repayment. Plaintiff subsequently discovered that two other persons were partners in the said factory. It was clear on record that the plaintiff lent on the personal credit of U and on the credit of the factory itself. The plaintiff sued the two partners jointly with U for recovery of the money due under the bond from them personally. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against U personally and as against the factor, and that he could not be allowed to go beyond his contract and recover personally from the two partners, for, neither did they pledge their credit to him, nor did he rely upon their credit when he lent his money. NUNDEE-PUT MAHATAH v. URQUHART, 9 W.R. 355.

(2)—Partnership in an undertaking—Abandonment by partner—Refusal to advance money in terms of agreement—Partner spending honestly for the firm mixing his accounts with partnership accounts—Effect.—Although the subject-matter of a partnership is precarious and speculative, it is a matter of inference to be drawn from the facts of each case, whether or no there has been abandonment by a partner of his share, or loss of interest by laches. The mere fact that a partner, suing for partnership account and for winding up, had previously declined to advance more money for the business, and left the management to a co-partner, is not sufficient, to infer that the former abandoned or lost by laches, his position as a partner. [D, 25 M. 149=11 M.L.J. 353.] A partner, who has mixed up his accounts with the partnership accounts, so as to make it impossible to discriminate between them, will not be allowed amounts honestly spent by him for the firm. MOUNG THA HUYIN v. MAHTHEIN MYAH, 28 C. 53, P.C.=27 I.A. 189=5 C.W.N. 114=7 Sar. 776

Partnership—continued.—4.—Rights and Liabilities of Partners

(3)—Hindu Law—Family trade—Power of manager to bind minor partner members of family—Compromise between co partners in absence of representative of deceased partner.—Ancestral trade, like other Hindu property, will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family; and such a family can, by its manager or its adult members acting as managers, enter into co-partnership with a stranger. In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided family will be bound by all acts of the manager, or the adult members acting as managers, which are necessarily incident to and following out of the carrying on of that trade, whether it be singly or with a co-partner. The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade. Third parties in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property. Were such a power not implied, property in a family trade, which is recognised by Hindu law to be a valuable inheritance, would become practically valueless to the other members of an undivided family wherever an infant was concerned, for, no one would deal with a manager, if the minor were to be at liberty on coming of age to challenge as against third parties, the trade transactions which took place during his minority. The general benefit of the undivided family is considered by Hindu Law to be paramount to any individual interest, and the recognition of a trade as inheritable property, renders it necessary for the general benefit of the family that the rule should confer powers on the manager necessary for the carrying on and consequent preservation of that family property; but that infringement is not to be carried beyond the actual necessity of the case. It is not easy to draw a well-defined line between what is, and what is not, an act necessarily incident to the carrying on of a trade; but taking into account the intimate and fiduciary position of one partner towards a co-partner, and the anxious protection afforded by Hindu law to the interests of a minor, it is safer and more in accordance with its spirit, to hold in a case like the present (where the property, so far as the minor's interest is concerned, is of an ancestral character), that a compromise of partnership differences and accounts, by a division and transfer of the partnership property, should not be treated as an act necessarily incident to the carrying on of a trade, but should be left to be governed by the law applicable to ordinary dealings with the manager of an undivided family when the interests of an infant member are concerned. And as to this the law is that persons dealing with an undivided family are bound, to enquire as to the purposes for which a sale or a mortgage of family property is effected by the manager, especially where minors are concerned; and the infants in general will not be bound but by "necessary acts" or such as are "evidently for their benefit." By "necessary acts" are meant such as are necessary for the material existence of the undivided family, in addition to expenditure upon religious ceremonies and marriages which, for members of the family, are, by Hindu Law and usage, looked upon as in the nature of paramount charges upon the undivided inheritance. Where it is found that a compromise entered into by the managing members is not necessary for the preservation of the family property, or would not be for the benefit of the infant whose interests are sought to be bound by its provisions, held that the compromise was not binding on the interests of the infant. And the avoidance of a law suit to take up partnership accounts does not, standing alone, fulfil either of the conditions mentioned above. As between adults, it might be a sufficient ground for enforcing specific performance, but where a minor's interests are to be taken notice of by the Court, the case made should go further and show either in express terms or by necessary inference from facts, that it would be for the advantage of the minor that the compromise should be carried out, or at least that the amount of property which the plaintiff was to receive (as in the present case) was a fair and reasonable adjustment upon foot of the partnership accounts. Cas. 173; D., 3 C. 503=1 C.L.R. 343.] A co-partner dealing with an undivided Hindu family will be placed, with reference to its component members, in the position that a partner according to British Law is placed in with reference to co partners and their representatives in the case of death. And where the surviving partners of a firm, in the absence of a representative of a deceased partner, adjusted the partnership accounts and agreed to hand over a portion of the partnership property to one of the partners in compromise of his claim, and the partner whose claim was so agreed to be compromised prayed for a dissolution of the firm upon the basis of such compromise, held, that a representative of the deceased partner was a necessary party to the suit. And where such representative was subsequently impleaded, held that the plaintiff would not be entitled to specific performance of the compromise; inasmuch as the surviving partners were treated as trustees of the partnership property for the benefit of the representative of the deceased partner; and that an agreement entered into by such surviving partners in the absence of the representative of the deceased partner which was inconsistent with the nature of such trust—to deal with the partnership assets only by way of sale—could not be specifically enforced. RAMLAL THAKURSIDAS v. (5)—Partnership—Incoming partner—Liability for debt contracted before becoming partner—Kiln—Execution sale—Suit for contents of kiln by defeated claimant—Burden of proof.—Where on one of the two parties retiring from a partnership business, a third person became a partner, the incoming partner was not liable personally for the partnership debt contracted before his advent, unless he had made himself liable by some contract, but the original partners and the partnership property were liable just as before. Where a kiln was sold in execution of a decree, held, in a suit by a defeated claimant to establish his right to the contents of the kiln under a pledge, that the burden of proof lay on him to show that by the pledge he got a right to the contents of the kiln as well. GUJADHUR PERSHAD v. KUNHYA LALL, 3 Agra 27.

(6)—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 249—Admission of new partner—His liability for debts incurred before admission.—It is true that a newly-admitted partner does not, ordinarily become liable for the existing debts under s. 249 of the Contract Act. But that section has no application to a case where, by the understanding between the parties, a person admitted as a partner becomes entitled to the profits and liable for the debts accruing to, and incurred by, the Firm before his admission (Rolfe v. Flower, L.R. 1 P. C. 27, R.). SHEWAK MAHTOON v. J. ST. JOSEPH, 9 C.L.R. 21.

out of the scope of the partnership business and without the authority of the other. MARTIN v. BAKER, 15 B.L.R. 372.

(8)—Partnership—Bill drawn by partners.—Every one of the partners in a mercantile firm of ordinary trading partnership is liable upon a bill drawn by a partner in the recognised trading name of the firm for a transaction incident to the business of the firm, although his name does not appear upon the face of the instrument, and although he may be a sleeping and secret partner. In order to take a case out of the principles of the general law, it must be shown that the holder of the bill knew at the time he received it that the transaction was the private affair of a single partner. BUNARSEE DOSS v. GHOLAM HOSSEIN, MUDDUN MOHUN AND LALA BHOLANATH, 13 W.R.P.C. 29 = 13 M.I. A. 358. [R., 6 Bom. L.R. 1106.]

(9)—Partnership property—Separation of—Notice to creditors.—Partners may convert the partnership property into the separate property of one or more of its members, and they are not bound to give notice of the said conversion to their creditors. HAZARI MAL v. NARSINGH DAS, 77 P.R. 1900. [R., 75 P.R. 1908.]

(10)—Partnership—Lien of banian on goods under agreement—Construction of agreement.—Where, sometime after the date of the agreement under which the plaintiff became banian to the defendants and by which he had a lien on all goods "belonging to" them in their godowns while there was a balance due, the defendant's firm took in a new partner, held that the words "belonging to" included all goods in the possession of the new firm that came to them in the way of business and that the new firm, not having given notice to the contrary, must be taken to have engaged the plaintiff as banian, upon the terms expressed in the agreement with the old firm, and to be liable for the balance due. BALDEODAS AGARWALLA v. ALEXANDER KAICH, 3 B.L.R.O.C. 80.

(11)—Suit by Agent of firm—Power of attorney given by only one partner—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 350—Acknowledgment of debt obtained under threat—Contract not to sue, Validity of.—This suit was brought by A, the agent and attorney of certain persons carrying on business under the style of H. & Co. to recover a debt. The power of attorney under which A sued was executed by B, one of the partners, but purported to be given by the three partners who constituted the Firm and not by B for himself alone, and under it A brought the suit describing himself as the agent and attorney of H. & Co. Held that the plaint was no doubt informally entitled, but that it was not such an error as would have entitled the defendant to have the action dismissed, for the plaint might have been amended by striking out B's name and substituting the names of the partners as plaintiffs. One partner may institute a suit in the names of his co-partners without their consent, at the risk of having to indemnify them against costs if they objected. The power of attorney given to A was no doubt informal as, though a partner in the ordinary course of his business had full power to sign the name of the Firm and bind his partners by his act as their authorised agent, yet, such an agent, unless he was expressly authorised to do so by deed, could not execute a deed on behalf of his principals, as B was not shown to have authority to enable him to execute the power of attorney on behalf of his absent co-partners. But this error, having reference to s. 350 of the Civ. Pro. Code, would not affect the merits of the case. [R., 38 P.R. 1882, 127 P.R. 1906=58 P.L.R. 1907.] Where an acknowledgment of a barred debt was made on account of a threat to put the matter into Court and apply for arrest before judgment, the threat was held to amount to such compulsion as would nullify the acknowledgment. [D., 161 P.R. 1879.] A contract not to sue for a limited period or until the happening of a certain event is perfectly valid. It is only where an agreement is made not to sue at all or under any circumstances that the law will consider it void as being contrary to public policy, for that would oust the Courts of their jurisdiction altogether. HAMILTON AND CO. v. SHOWERS, 62 P.R. 1873.

(12)—Partnership—Agency—Partner represented at settlement of accounts—Effect.—In order that one person may act as agent on behalf of another, it is not necessary that there should be any written authority. The authority may be given by words or acts. It may even be inferred from silence or acquiescence. So, where the question was whether a partner was duly represented at the settlement of accounts among his co-partners, it was held that he was so represented by a person without any written authority, his agency being inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case. SODHA SINGH v. CHIPPUL, 84 P.R. 1867.

(13)—Rights of a deceased partner—Adjustment of a partnership account—Payment by partner—Presumption.—A suit based on the right of a deceased partner cannot be limited to a demand for his share in the proceeds of property alleged to have come into the possession of the partnership during its existence. The agreement on which the partnership was formed, the amounts advanced and drawn out by the several partners, and the subsisting liabilities and assets, if any, must all be taken into account, and the suit must demand such a sum, if any, as, on a general account, and an account between the deceased partner and the co-partnership, being taken, shall appear to be due. The presumption as to payments made by the different partners of a firm is that they have been made out of the funds of the firm unless the contrary is proved by satisfactory evidence and when the death of one partner dissolves a firm of two members, the presumption is that the deceased was entitled to a moiety of the existing assets. Principle on which the account of a dissolved partnership should be adjusted, explained. KESHAV GOPAL GINDE v. RAYAPA, 12 B.H.C. 165.

(14)—Application to wind up business of partnership after its termination—Suit for dissolution of partnership—Contract Act, s. 265—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 25, 215—Transfer of suit—Power of partner to borrow for partnership purposes.—An application under s. 265 of the Contract Act, to wind up the business of a partnership after its termination, is one exclusively cognisable by a District Judge. But a suit for a declaration that a partnership existed between certain persons, praying that it may be dissolved if it still subsists, and if it had terminated, that the date of such termination may be fixed, and that a liquidator may be appointed, and so forth, is one not so exclusively cognisable, and may be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade according to its valuation. Such a suit, instituted in a District Court, and transferred to a Subordinate Judge, may be transferred by the High Court to its own file, in the exercise of its extraordinary original jurisdiction. [R., 5 A. 500, 10 C. 669.] One partner cannot create a charge on partnership property, nor borrow money for the purposes of the partnership, so as to make other partners liable, except under their authority, express or implied. But when they allow him to conduct the business of the partnership in such a manner as to make it appear that, to all intents and purposes, the whole control and management was vested in him, they would be liable to make good all advances that were made for the necessary purposes of the firm. HARRISON v. THE DELHI AND LONDON BANK, 4 A. 437=A.W.N. 1882, 87. [Diss., 31 M. 206=4 M.L.T. 66.]

(15)—Money due to Partner—Application of payments—Set off—Barred debt—Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, O. 8, r. 6.—A managing partner cannot appropriate money due to another partner out of the assets of a partnership firm, in liquidation of a debt due from that other partner to the managing partner and alien to the business of the firm. There can be no right of set off between parties mutually indebted if there is no agreement to that effect. Neither does O. 8, r. 6, Civ. Pro. Code, apply to the case of a debt sought to be set off, when it is barred by limitation before the suit was filed. SOHNA v. NAND RAM, 53 P.R. 1898.

(16)—Imputations of fraud—Court winding up partnership—Policy holder disentitled to share of profits—Extension by implication of written agreement—Commission on sale—Dissolution of partnership—Compensation for loss of commission.—Imputations of fraud should be disposed of at the first hearing, and should not be left open to be disposed of subsequently. [R., 18 B. 551.] In the case of a winding up of a partnership by Court, all questions arising between the partners out of the partnership business must be disposed of in the winding-up suit. It is difficult to imply, from the circumstance of a policyholder being entitled to a share of profits, a contract on the part of the Company that they will, in order to give him a better chance, continue to carry on business even though it should turn out to be disadvantageous to them to do so. Where parties have entered into written engagements with the express stipulations, it is manifestly not desirable to extend them by implication. The presumption is, that, having expressed them, they have expressed all the conditions by which they intend to be bound under that instrument. Where the plaintiff was the founder of a company, in which he was a partner and of which he became the manager, broker and agent, with a commission during his lifetime, and after the company commenced work it was found that it had expended all its capital and was heavily involved in debt incurred by the plaintiff without the sanction of the co-partners, which necessitated the bringing of a suit for the dissolution of the partnership by some of the co-partners, which was opposed by the plaintiff and other co-partners, held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation for the loss of his commission, as there was no obligation on the part of his co-partners to subscribe more capital after the original capital of the co-partners had been exhausted, and as there was no implied covenant to continue the work of the partnership in order that the plaintiff should be in a position, to earn his commission during his lifetime. LALBHAI VALLABHAI v. KAVASJI NANABHAI, 8 B.H.C. O.C. 209. [On appeal, 1 B. 468, P.C.; R., 16 Bom. L. R. 811.]

(17)—Liability of partners for partnership debt.—If two out of three partners are sued for a debt due from the partnership, and a decree is obtained against those two, and execution issues against the partnership property, if the third partner should apply successfully in the execution proceedings to have his share in the property released, the plaintiff's only remedy would be a regular suit, not for the purpose of making the third partner personally liable for the debt, but for the purpose of making the share of the third partner available to satisfy the decree. NOBINCHANDRA ROY v. of the debt, making the co-partners defendants. Held, that the aggrieved partner can sue, and that the general rule, that one partner can give a valid discharge of a debt due to his partnership, has no application, if the discharge so given is in fraud of the aggrieved partner and is the result of collusion between the debtor and the partner who gives the discharge. VEERSAMI NAICKER v. (19)—Partner, whether can bind firm by submission to arbitration.—Although a partner is entitled, on behalf of the firm of which he is a member, to sue for the recovery of a debt due to the firm, he has no power, without special authority, to bind the firm by submission to arbitration. It must be shown that the reference to arbitration was either an act necessary for, or such as is usually done in, carrying on the business of the firm. RAM BHAROSE v. (20)—Lease taken by one partner—Liability of the others.—When certain persons constitute themselves an agricultural association, and agree that any one of them may take a lease and execute any necessary document, such documents being taken to be binding on all the partners as if executed by them, the representatives of a partner who has not executed a rental agreement, but has worked as a partner after it was executed by the other partners, may be held liable on the agreement. CHINNA-RAMANUJA AYYANGAR v. (1)—Dissolution of partnership—Defective investigation—Former partner ceasing to be such—Effect of.—The acts of the principal member of a firm, done by virtue of special provisions in the partnership agreement or otherwise, to effect a dissolution as between a member and other partners, could not operate as to the third persons, strangers, who might well be wholly unacquainted with them, and who, in their dealings with the firm, might well suppose, in the absence of notification of a change, that the partnership continued unaltered as to its members. If a customer deals with a firm well knowing that a former partner has ceased to belong to it, he cannot be allowed to treat the retired partner as still a member of the partnership. GUNGA RAM v. GUNGA DHUR, 1 Agra 198.

(2)—Dormant partner—Partner contracting on behalf of himself and a dormant partner—Dormant partner cannot sue the contracting party after the death of the partner entering into the contract.—If one partner enters into a contract in his own name, still, if he is acting as the agent of the firm, his co-partners will be in the position of undisclosed principals. They can be sued on the contract and may join as plaintiffs in suing. A Railway Company entered into contracts with a person in the belief that he was the only person interested in them, but he had a partner unknown to the Company. After sometime the person who contracted with the Company died, and the dormant partner claimed payment of the amount due to the firm under one of the contracts. The Company refused to pay except on a joint receipt of the plaintiff and the administrators of the deceased. The dormant partner brought a suit to recover the amount: Held, that the Company having contracted with deceased partner alone the right to claim performance rested with him during the lifetime and he could have sued on the contract alone; and that the dormant partner might have joined his co-partner in suing but he could not sue the Company alone. ALI MIYAN MAHOMED-BHAI v. B.B. & C.I. RY., 10 Bom. L.R. 306.

(3)—Contract Act, s. 264—Notice of dissolution—Dormant partner.—Where there persons carry on trade under the names of two of them, the third being only a dormant partner, and, after the partnership is dissolved and the dormant partner's retirement from the business, the others carry on the business under the old name, persons, who become creditors of the firm for the first time after the dissolution, though they had no notice of the dissolution and retirement of one of the partners, have no claim as against that person. *RAMASAMI v. and agreeing to account yearly to that person for a share in profits must be taken to have admitted him to proportionate partnership in the business where death dissolved the partnership, the representatives of the deceased, by receiving some six months after the death, an account, about two-thirds of the money advanced and some profits cannot claim to have become partners. SHAIKH PEER MAHOMED v. NEKJAN BIBEE, 25 W.R. 49.

(5)—Contract of partnership—Right to dissolve partnership.—In a contract between a partner and his co-partners, a provision for remuneration to the former by a certain commission on the sales, on account of his undertaking to manage the partnership business, does not imply the renunciation by the co-partners of their right to apply for a dissolution of the partnership during his life, even if they find that the business cannot be continued without loss, nor does it imply any undertaking to pay him compensation in the event of their exercising such a right. COWASJEE NANABHOY v. LALLBHOY VULLUBHOY, 1 B. 468, P.C. = 26 W.R. 78 = 3 I.A. 200 = 3 Sar. 645.

(6)—Partnership debt—Liability of partner for debts incurred during partnership.—A and B were partners. C supplied the firm with some goods, and brought a suit to recover their value from both A and B. A confessed judgment; but B pleaded non-liability on the ground that in a suit between himself and A for settlement of partnership accounts, his liability was fixed at a certain amount, and that as to the balance, he had been released and he is not therefore liable to pay the suit debt. Held, that as C was not a party to the partnership suit in which the liability of B was fixed at a certain amount, he was not bound by the decision and B remained therefore liable for the outstanding debts, unless he had caused his release from liability publicly notified before the goods were supplied by C. ROOLDOO MULL v. JOWAHIR, 90 P.R. 1868.

(7)—Suit for account without praying for dissolution.—A member of a common trading partnership, dissoluble at will, cannot, under ordinary circumstances, seek an account without praying for a dissolution. *GOLLA NAGABASHANAM v. (9)—Partnership—Suit by partner prior to dissolution—Suit for share in losses and advances.—If is only when the action is for a dissolution of partnership, that the partners may claim an account and payment over of moneys that may be found to be due to them on the account being taken. Except under exceptional circumstances, no action lies between partners, which involve the taking of partnership accounts prior to dissolution. KASSA MAL v. GOPI, 9 A. 120 = A.W.N. 1886, 316. [F., 110 P.R. 1901 = 4 P.L.R. 1902.]

(10)—Partnership subsisting—Suit for account without prayer for dissolution if maintainable.—A suit which is virtually a suit by a member of a subsisting partnership, for an account of profits up to date, which has been framed accordingly, and in which the plaintiff does not seek any dissolution of the partnership, could not be maintained in that form. Plaintiff is therefore competent to bring a fresh suit against the defendant for an account of the profits of the partnership and for payment of the amount found due to him on taking the accounts from first to last. UMAR BAKSH v. FAIZULLA, 13 P. R. 1879.

(11)—Suit for share of profits due to one partner, not maintainable during pendency of partnership—Suit for account without praying for dissolution.—Plaintiff brought this suit for his share of the probable profits on a partnership account between 1st December, 1871, and 30th November, 1872. Defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable because the parties thereto were at the time partners and the plaintiff's only remedy was by a suit for the dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. Held, that the plaintiff as the defendant's partner, was not competent to ask the Court to declare him entitled to a share in the probable profits of a particular period antecedent to the suit, since such a suit would not at all lie. There is no authority whatever for the position that a member of a common trading partnership, dissoluble at will, may, under ordinary circumstances, seek an account without praying for a dissolution. NAWAB KHAN v. SHEIKH GOLAM AHMED, 7 P. R. 1875.

(12)—Suit for dissolution of partnership and winding up of firm—Dissolution before suit—Indian Contract Act, ss. 265, 254—Partnership not entered into for fixed term—Mode of dissolving.—This suit was brought for the dissolution of the partnership and the winding up of the firm of which the parties were members. The Courts below had held that the suit under s. 265 of the Indian Contract Act could not be entertained until the partnership had been dissolved by a regular suit under s. 254. Held, that, in the absence of an allegation that the partnership had been entered into for a fixed term, a suit was not the only mode of dissolving the partnership. Under s. 253, cl. 8, any partner is at liberty to retire at any time from a partnership which has not been entered into

for a fixed term, and by bringing the present suit, the plaintiff had sufficiently indicated his intention of retiring. Under cl. 7, such retirement dissolved the partnership, and there was therefore held to be no sufficient reason for refusing to entertain the suit. RULDU MAL v. ARJUN, 12 P.R. 1881. (76 P.R. 1876, R.)

(13)—Partnership, dissolution of—Notice to customers.—When parties carry on business together and open current accounts with customers, they must, on dissolution of partnership, give full and fair notice of their dissolution to their customers and, if they fail to do so, they will be properly liable to customers paying on the partnership account current to one partner in the belief that he represents the firm. SHEWRAM v. ROHOMUTOOLLAH, W.R. 1864, 94.

(14)—Dissolution—Accounts—Loan—Limitation—Acknowledgment by managing partner—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19—Receiver.—Where the manager of a firm has full power to borrow and re-pay money, it follows of necessity that he has power to acknowledge the debt, by either immediately giving a promissory note, or subsequently, upon an adjustment of accounts, or in any other way in the course of business, making bona fide admissions in writing. To require express authority from each one of the partners to acknowledge the debt would be placing a very narrow construction on s. 19, Limitation Act, 1877, and would open the door to very serious fraud. It is a part of the duty of the Court, in the course of a suit for dissolution of partnership, in which a receiver has been appointed, to discharge the debts and liabilities of the firm, and the mere fact that the Court does not adjudicate on the claim of the creditor, until after the expiration of more than three years, does not render the claim a bad claim against the assets of a firm which is being administered by the Court. LALTA PARSHAD v. BABU PARSHAD, 6 A.L. J. 953 = 32 A. 51 = 4 Ind. Cas. 708.

(15)—Suit against co-partners—Question of account—Proper form of suit.—The plaintiffs sued to recover from their co-partners a sum of money alleged to have been lent at interest to the firm by two of the partners for the purpose of the partnership business. Held, that the Court ought not to have admitted the plaint as this suit which, on the face of it, involved a question of account, would not lie by one partner against another. Held also that, under the circumstances, the suit should have been for a dissolution of partnership and for an account. PHULA AND DANA v. SHIBDIAL, 34 P.R. 1873. [R., 7 P.R. 1875, 110 P.R. 1901.]

(16)—Partnership—Suit by member of dissolved partnership for money due on balance of accounts—Reservation in decree—Review.—In a suit by a member of a dissolved partnership for balance due on the partnership accounts, the parties referred the accounts to arbitration through Court. The arbitrators, in delivering the award, awarded to plaintiffs a certain sum of money subject to certain objections raised by defendants, which could not be disposed of without a reference to certain other accounts, which were not then available. The Provincial Court, to which the award was submitted, confirmed it, reserving to the defendants a right to recover what they could on the objections. Later on, the defendants, securing the original books of account on which they relied, applied for a review, which was rejected by the Provincial Court on appeal. The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut confirmed the order of the lower Court. On appeal to the Privy Council, held that the Provincial Court ought, in the first instance, to have postponed passing its decree pending the production of the original books of account or allowed an opportunity to the defendants to produce verified copies of the same unless it was satisfied that the objections were invalid. But, since it was considered that the objections were valid inasmuch as the decree reserved a right to the defendants to recover what they claimed, by means of a suit, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ought to have received in evidence the original books of account, under s. 16 of Reg. VI of 1793, and ascertained the sum actually due, having regard to the objections. MUSSUMAT SEETUL BAHOO v. BAHOO HURKISHEN DOSS, 5 W.R.P.C. 76.

II, art. 106—Accounts, suit for, after dissolution of partnership—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Evidence—Oral evidence as to contents of a document.*—In a suit for accounts, where the plaintiff has valued his claim at a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,000, the appeal against the preliminary decree passed in favour of the plaintiff lies to the Divisional Court and not to the Chief Court. When, in a case, appeal lies to the Chief Court, but is filed in and heard by the Division Court, and a further appeal is filed in the Chief Court, the further appeal may be converted into a first appeal, if this course does not prejudice any of the parties (58 P.R. 1902; 46 P.R. 1906=94 P.L.R. 1906, 31 C. 365, D.) In the case of a joint Hindu family carrying on a trading business, the ordinary rules of partnership do not apply in toto; the concern must be governed also by rules of Hindu Law, and one of such rules would be, that the death of one member of the family cannot operate to dissolve the family partnership. But it is equally clear that, where a partnership is composed of certain individual members of a joint Hindu family and outsiders, the relations of the parties are governed by the ordinary law of contract and not by Hindu Law (25 A. 378, 28 M. 344, R.) Some of the members of a joint Hindu family entered into a partnership. The deed did not show that the members of the family were acting on behalf of the family. It was contended that, on the death of one of the members of the family, the partnership was dissolved. Held, that the contention was valid. Held, also, that no extraneous evidence was admissible to prove that the members of the family were acting on behalf of the family in the concern and not in their individual capacity. A suit for accounts after the dissolution of a partnership is governed by art. 106 Limitation Act (1877). Copies of document required by s. 78 or s. 86 of the Evidence Act to be certified are not admissible in evidence when they are not duly certified. The Chi (23)—Partnership—Assignment by partner—Decree for winding up and for account.—Where two out of a firm of three partners assigned their shares to two others, and it was not proved that the third partner relinquished his claim upon the assignors as a partner, although he might have had knowledge of the assignment, he is entitled to sue for the winding up of the partnership and for a decree for account as against the assignor-partners and the assignees. DOMATY NURSI AH v. (24)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 7—Splitting of claim—Disputes among partners respecting accounts.—The words of the section are inoperative against the splitting of a claim into parts, but the consequence of an infringement of this direction is not that the suit which does not include the whole claim shall, for this reason, be barred. The words "in bar of suit," in the last clause of the section, refer to any subsequent suit brought for the portion of the claim which has been relinquished or omitted from the previous suit, and not to such previous suit itself. The words point either to a deliberate relinquishment, or an accidental or involuntary omission. But a plaintiff who omits to sue for a portion of his claim, stating at the same time that he does not relinquish it, but means to sue again for its recovery, can gain nothing by such a statement, which would be of no avail to save any subsequent right of suit; but neither, on the other hand, can such a statement furnish a reason for holding that the first suit is barred. In dispute between partners respecting their accounts, the plaintiff should frame his suit in such a way, that there may be a general adjustment of the partnership accounts. A particular item or claim should not be made the subject of a distinct suit; for a decree might thus be obtained by the plaintiff upon one matter, notwithstanding that a full enquiry into the accounts might show a balance due from him. MUSUMAT SOONDER BEBEE v. (27)—Jurisdiction—Cause of action—Partnership—Contract—Beng. Reg. II of 1803.—A contract was entered into at Rutlam, in the independent State of Malwa, between the firm of L, who resided and carried on business at Muttra, within the jurisdiction of the Zillah Court at Agra, and the firm of Z, carrying on business at Rutlam, and elsewhere, for the establishment of a co-partnership, for the purchase and sale of opium. The co-partnership was carried on principally at Muttra, and the business was conducted there by means of the capital advanced in the concern, by the firm of L, in which place the partnership books were kept. At the close of the partnership, which was attended with loss, a balance was struck at Muttra which showed a debt due by the firm of Z. In a suit in the Zillah Court of Agra, for recovery of the amount of this balance, it was pleaded by Z that as the contract was made at Rutlam, where the firm resided, the Zillah Court at Agra had, by Beng. Reg. II of 1803, no jurisdiction to entertain the action, which objection the Zillah Court allowed and afterwards the Sudder Court at Agra, on appeal, sustained. On appeal, such decision was reversed by the Judicial Committee on the ground that the cause of action arose in Muttra and was by Beng. Reg. II of 1803, within the jurisdiction of the Zillah Court at Agra; because Muttra was the established place of business of the co-partnership, where the books were kept for the purpose of the partners ascertaining the state of the transaction between them, and as it was there that the balance was struck and payment of the balance due made. SETS LUCHMEE CHUND RADHAKISHEN v. liberty to borrow money on his individual credit and apply the same for the benefit of the business, the mere fact that such money is applied to the partnership business does not render it an item in the partnership business. So, where a partner paid the amounts borrowed on his individual credit for partnership business, a suit by him for contribution against other partners is maintainable, notwithstanding that there was no adjustment of the accounts relating to the firm. (26 C. 262, Note, Cons.; 12 B.H.C. 97, 6 B. 628, R.) [R., 4 M.L.J. 456=32 M. 76=19 M.L.J. 10.] Such a suit for contribution is governed by art. 99, the period running from the time when the plaintiff was compelled to make the payments. DURGA PROSSONNO BOSE v. (29)—Partnership—Payment by one partner of the share of another's decree-debt—Suit for contribution.—Advances made by one partner to the partnership concern can only result in matters of account, and cannot be made the subject of a separate suit. But where under a decree passed against two partners, each of them is bound to pay the whole debt and bound to indemnify the other against the payment of more than his sharer, the transaction is something dehors the partnership, and a suit for contribution for an over-payment would lie. SUBBARYUDU v. (30)—Money due by partnership—Payment by one partner—Suit for contribution.—If the amount paid up by one partner was a liability of the partnership, then the mere fact of his having been compelled to pay the whole of the partnership debt would not entitle him to sue his co-partners, or any of them, for contribution, in the absence of any special circumstances, though he would be entitled to charge the sum paid in the partnership account. Where some only of the members of the partnership executed bond, but not in the usual course of partnership business, and the liability is satisfied by one of them, he is entitled to sue the other executants for contribution. Such a suit is also maintainable, when the co-partners expressly promised to contribute, after a decree is obtained on the bond. GUDA KULITA v. JOYRAM DAS, 26 C. 262, Note. (12 B.H.C. 97, R.) (32)—*Partners—Common proprietors of land, suit between—Punjab Civ. Such persons must frequently have causes of action against one another, which must be dealt with, irrespective of a general adjustment of accounts. Cl. 9 applies to joint tenancy in land in the absence of express agreement. It nowhere lays down that a sharer may not sue his co-sharer unless there has been a division of crops or land. HEERA SINGH v. KANAH, 32 P.R. 1870.

(36)—Partnership—Death of one partner—Continuing partnership—Nature—Rights of surviving partners—Suit for accounts of continuing partnership—Whether original partnership accounts can be gone into—Limitation.—Where a partnership is a continuing one, there is, technically, a new partnership formed whenever any partner dies. On such death, each surviving partner is presumed to invest in the new partnership his share of the assets of the dissolved partnership and to take his share of the liabilities. As soon as the new partnership is formed, each partner is personally responsible to, and has personal rights, against all others. Although a suit for account in respect of a partnership would become barred three years after the death of one of the partners, yet, limitation offers no bar to a Court instituting an inquiry into the financial relations of the partners inter se at the commencement of the partnership which the Court is engaged in winding up, and, for this purpose, it may be

Further, the only logically consistent result of the application of s. 45 of the Contract Act to partnerships is, that "the right to performance of the contract, as far as the other contracting party is concerned, rests just as much with the representative of the deceased partner as with the surviving partner." The right of the deceased co-partner as that of the deceased co-contractor under s. 45 of the Contract Act survives to his representative, and, the right surviving, there is a remedy as well, so that the representative of a deceased partner has a separate and independent right of suit. *AGA GULAM HUSSAIN v. (49)—Written release—Oral agreement adding to terms of release—Admissibility—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92.—R and the defendants were members of a partnership and the business was carried on under the name and style of Nowroji Cursetji & Co. R died on 8-11-1884 appointing P and B his executors. The accounts of the partnership business had remained unadjusted for many years prior to the death of R. In adjustment of such accounts, the executors, after examining the books, etc., of the firm, received from the defendants a lump sum of Rs. 8,395-11-0 as the amount due to the estate of R, and executed a release deed on 9-11-1885 to the defendants in respect of the share and interest of R in the firm. By an assignment in writing dated 7-4-1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff 1/16 of the share in the said firm. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff (as assignee of the 1/16 share) to declare his right to the said share. He also prayed that an account might be taken and his share of the profits paid over to him. The plaintiff alleged that the amount due to the estate of R had not been ascertained accurately at the time the release deed was executed. He also set up an agreement among the partners, at the time of the release, to the effect that, exclusive of the amount due under the release, the executors should receive a 1/16 share in the partnership. The defendants who denied the plaintiff's right to any share in the partnership, contended that the share and interest of R and his estate in the partnership ceased on his death, and alleged that there was no agreement to give the executors a share in the partnership. They also relied on the release given by the executors and urged that, under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, no evidence can be given as to the alleged agreement made at the time of the release. Held, that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, evidence of the agreement that the executors should continue to have a one-anna share in the firm was inadmissible, because it was inconsistent with the written release. Under the release, in consideration of a lump sum paid to the executors, the latter gave up all claims arising out of the old partnership. The oral agreement added another term as the consideration of waiving all claims on the past accounts, to wit,—the continuance of a one-anna share in the partnership. Such an agreement is an addition to the terms of a contract which had been rendered into writing and was inconsistent with those terms. COWASJI RUTTONJI LIMBOOWALLA v. Code, s. 350.*—This suit was brought by A the agent and attorney of certain persons carrying on business under the style of H. & Co. to recover a debt. The power of attorney under which A sued was executed by B, one of the partners, but purported to be given by the three partners who constituted the Firm and not by B for himself alone, and under it, A brought the suit describing himself as the agent and attorney of H & Co. Held that the plaint was no doubt informally entitled, but that it was not such an error as would have entitled the defendant to have the action dismissed, for the plaint might have been amended by striking out B's name and substituting the names of the partners as plaintiffs. One partner may institute a suit in the names of his co-partners without their consent, at the risk of having to indemnify them against costs if they objected. The power of attorney given to A was no doubt informal as, though a partner in the ordinary course of his business had full power to sign the name of the Firm and bind his partners by his act as their authorised agent, yet such an agent, unless he was expressly authorised to do so by deed, could not execute a deed on behalf of his principals, and as B was not shown to have authority to enable him to execute the power of attorney on behalf of his absent co-partners. But this error, having reference to s. 350 of the Civ. Pro. Code, would not effect the merits of the case. HAMILTON AND CO. v. SHOWERS, 62 P.R. 1873. [R., 127 P.R. 1906=58 P.L.R. 1907.]

(1)—Sub-partnership—Documentary evidence.—On a question whether a sub-partnership had been entered into, the validity of which depended on an instrument produced in evidence in the Court below, and upon inspection, as well as the evidence in support of it, pronounced to be invalid, the Judicial Committee, in confirming the judgments of both Courts below, were of opinion that they were concluded under the circumstances of the case from entering upon the examination of the instrument itself, though they fully concurred in the opinion expressed by the Judge of the Zillah Court, and dismissed the appeal with costs. NUNDRAM DYARAM AND OTHERS v. DULA-BHAE KURPARAM, 1 M I A. 414.

(2)—Firm deriving benefit of contract with a partner—Liability of firm to be bound by contract.—A firm obtaining the benefit of a contract made with one of its partners is not necessarily bound by that contract. SETH RAMLAL v. SETH NARSINGDASS, 14 C.P.L.R. 22.

(3)—Suit for accounts—Procedure—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), sch. IV, forms 132 and 133—Partnership suit—Frame of suit—Sch. IV, form 113.—In a suit for an account of partnership transactions, the Judge should follow the course pointed out in forms 132 and 133 of sch. IV of the Civ. Pro. Code; and upon determining, at the first hearing, whether there had been a partnership, what its conditions, whether it was dissolved, &c., he should direct accounts to be taken and make a final decree after the accounts are taken. [R., 20 M. 313.] The plaint in a partnership suit must be framed on the lines of form 113 of the Civ. Pro. Code and the accounts taken as prayed therein. RAM CHUNDER SHAHA v. MANICK CHUNDER BANIKYA, 7 C. 428=9 C.L.R. 157. [R., A.W.N. 1883, 220.]

(4)—Adjusted account—Settlement of basis of account—Final adjustment not signed—Pleadings, want of precision in, if material—Limitation—Cross demands in partnership account—New cause of action from adjustment—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sch. I, arts. 64, 115 and 120.—When parties had agreed on the 2nd April, 1905, that a settlement of partnership accounts between them should be made upon a certain basis, and the final adjustment took place on the 20th August, 1906 and entries to that effect were made in the books on that date but not signed by the parties, in a suit brought on the 16th April to recover the amount due on such adjustment: Held—That it was an adjustment which gave rise to a fresh cause of action as from date, and whether it was article 115 or article 120 of the Limitation Act that applied, the suit was not barred. When the plaint did not specify the day on which the adjustment took place, but approximately indicated the time and proof was furnished of exact date at the hearing. Held—that there was nothing in the pleadings which should prevent the Judge from arriving at any conclusion on the evidence adduced as to the date. JALIM SINGH SRIMAL v. CHOONEE LALL JOHURRY, 15 C.W.N. 882.

(5)—Partnership accounts—Examination of original account books by Court.—The Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Bengal ought not to affirm a decree of a Provincial Court in a case respecting a balance of partnership accounts without examining the original account books of the firm, if they are tendered in evidence before it, although they were not produced before the Provincial Court. BABOO BENEE SUHAE v. BABOO HURKISHEN DOSS, 2 Knapp 255.

(6)—Suit to enforce article in partnership deed—Suit for dissolution not necessary.—At the instance of one partner, the Court can compel the other partner to enforce a particular term of a partnership or to restrain its breach the same being not substantially open to the same objections as enforcing the performance of a contract to carry on a partnership business. Even without bringing a suit for dissolution of partnership such a suit for enforcing of the partnership articles may be maintained. KARI VENKATAREDDI v. KOLLU NARASAYYA, 4 M.L.T. 456=19 M.L.J. 10=32 M. 76=1 Ind. Cas. 384. (15 M.L.J. 142, 18 M. 134, 26 C. 254, R.; 2 M.H.C. 28, Cons. & Diss.; 2 N.W.P. 90, 3 M.H.C. 341, 1 C.L.R. 545, R.)

(7)—Dissolution of—Decree—Money-decree—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), s. 273.—A decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership is, for the purposes of execution, to be regarded as a money decree. It can be attached but cannot be sold: and the only remedy respecting it, is the procedure under s. 273 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. SIDLINGAYA v. SHANKAR-APA, 5 Bom. L.R. 529=27 B. 556.

(8)—Partnership—Dissolution of partnership—Liability of retired partner for debts contracted after dissolution—Contract Act, 1872, ss. 245, 264.—A party was charged with liability as a partner long after the partnership was dissolved by a person who had had no dealings with the original firm before its dissolution, and was not even aware that the party charged with the liability was a partner of the firm. Notices of dissolution were given to all concerned. No attempt at concealment of the change in the constitution of the firm was proved. Held that the continuing partners being suffered to carry on business in the old firm's name, which did not disclose the identity of the retired partner or the maintenance of a joint responsibility in a specific contract, was no reason to make such person liable for debts contracted by the firm long after his retirement. S. 264, Contract Act, will not apply to the case of a person dealing with a firm for the first time after a change from its original constitution, so as to make a quondam partner liable. CHAND MAL v. GANGA RAM, 78 P.R. 1903. (8 C. 678, 7 C.W.N. 441, 25 A. 1, 9 M. 492, R.)

(9)—Mortgage of revenues of village executed by a firm—Suit by partner against co-partners for his share of assets—Attachment against estate in execution—Suit by mortgagee for removal of attachment.—The question in this case related merely to the construction of a mortgage deed by which the revenues of a village were mortgaged by a firm in which the respondent was a partner. By the mortgage-deed it was stipulated that the holders of the mortgage shall station a mehta or clerk of their own in the said village for the purpose of making the collections, so long as the property remained in mortgage, the mehta was to receive his salary from the mortgagors. The instrument was executed on account of the partnership of which the respondent was member, so that, though he had not himself executed it, he was cognizant afterwards of its execution, and was bound by its contents so as to be considered as being a mortgagor. This respondent, having obtained a decree against his co-partners for his share of the assets of the firm, got attachment to issue against the estate in execution of his decree. Thereon, the mortgagee instituted the present suit for the removal of such attachment. Their Lordships were of opinion that, on the facts in evidence, actual possession should be deemed to have been taken by virtue of the mortgage and that the transaction was valid up to the time of the notice of the respondent's claim, because until the attachment was executed there was no notice to the mortgagee of any adverse claim on the part of the respondent. But, when the attachment was placed on the village, the mortgagee had notice of the adverse claim so that if, after that time, he permitted the mortgagor to receive any portion of the profits of that estate, then he ought, with respect to the monies so received, to be postponed to the respondent who was to be regarded as a second incumbrancer, only from after his having proceeded to enforce his claim by attachment and not before. JUGJEEWUN DAS KEEKA SHAH v. RAM DAS BRIJBOOKUN DASS, 6 W.R. P.C. 10 = 2 M.I.A. 487. [Appl., 12 C. 389, 26 M. 652; R., 19 M. 471; D., 7 Ind. Cas. 808 = 8 M.L.T. 253.]

(10)—Creditor of the partnership executing a decree against one of the partners—Receiver.—One of several partners in a trade, who pays money on account of his co-partners, cannot maintain an action against them for contribution on the ground that he made such contribution not voluntarily but by compulsion of law. But when once the decree dissolving the partnership is passed and a receiver is appointed to take the account of the partnership and to pay its debts, the creditor of the partnership should not execute his decree against any of the partners but must go to the Court which has appointed the receiver and take its directions. SIDLINGAPPA v. SHANKARAPPA, 5 Bom. L.R. 912 = 28 B. 176.

(11)—Provision in partnership deed regarding succession of partner's nephew on partner's death—Partnership terminable at will, and not for a term.—Where a deed of partnership provides that, on the death of one of the partners, his nephew should act in his stead, held, that the provision did not constitute the partnership as one for a term intended to run during the lifetime of the partner, but only a partnership dissoluble at will. SAMI AYYANGAR v. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR, 4 M.L.T. 478 = 19 M.L.J. 77 = 4 Ind. Cas. 618.

(12)—Arbitration, submission to—Submission to arbitration by some members—Other members not bound by submission.—One of several partners in a partnership cannot bind the others by a submission to arbitration even of matters arising out of the business of the price. It is no part of the ordinary business of a trading firm to enter into a submission to arbitration. DATOOBHOY v. VALLU, 1 Bom. L.R. 828.

(13)—Advances by partner—Rights regarding the advances made by him to the partnership

—Account—Plaintiff's death—Defendant becoming plaintiff—Practice and Procedure.—It is not permissible to one partner to sue his co-partners for money lent by him to a partnership of which they all are members, because the advance made can only form an item in the partnership account. A firm, owned by a Joint Hindu family consisting of a father and son, plaintiff and defendant 2, made advances to a partnership of which defendant 2 was one of the partners. Plaintiff brought a suit to recover the advances made from all the partners and the surety including defendant 2. The lower Court passed a decree against the defendants. One of the partners and the surety preferred an appeal to the High Court; and while the appeal was pending plaintiff died. At this, defendant 2, who thereby became the sole owner of the firm, was substituted in plaintiff's place: Held, (1) that the fact that defendant 2 was partly interested both as creditor and debtor rendered the suit unmaintainable so far as his share was concerned, but it could not stand in the way of the Court's adjusting the rights of the parties in accordance with the rule of justice, equity and good conscience. (2) that as defendant 2 became the sole creditor and sole plaintiff owing to plaintiff's death pending the appeal, he was entitled only to such relief as would have been possible and he occupied that position at the institution of the suit; that, therefore, defendant 2 was only entitled to credit in the partnership account his share as well as the share which descended to him at plaintiff's death but not entitled to any decree in the present suit either against the partners or the surety. RUSTOMJI v. PURSHOTAMDAS, 3 Bom. L.R. 227 = 25 B. 600.

(14)—Solicitor's lien—Costs—Partnership suit—Assets of partnership in the hands of Receiver—Solicitors' costs entitled to preference over creditor's claim—Creditor should not issue execution against assets, but to ask for charging order—Practice and procedure.—Where there are assets of a partnership in the hands of a Receiver appointed in a partnership suit, the solicitors engaged in that suit are entitled to ask for a charge on those assets in priority to the creditors of the partnership. A creditor of a partnership, the assets of which are in the hands of a Receiver appointed by the Court, should not issue execution against the assets; but he should ask the Court for a charging order in his favour. *A. (2)—Hindu law—Joint family—Bond in favour of one member of an undivided family for himself and others—Practice—Procedure.—A member of a joint Hindu family can sue on a contract which he has taken in his own name especially when it does not purport to have been obtained by him on behalf of any other, but himself. The question whether payment to any member of the family will be binding on the member who takes the contract in his own name seems to depend upon the facts of each particular case. The promisee under the contract will be, as regards the promisor, the only person entitled to payment. It cannot be said that a part payment to any member of the family is by itself necessarily binding on the promisee. It lies on the promisor to show that his payment to a third party is binding on the promisee. GURUSHANTAPPA v. CHANMALLAPPA, 1 Bom. L.R. 556=24 B. 123.

Patent.

See ACT XV OF 1859.

(1)—Useful invention—Act XV of 1859, s. 25—Limitation and piracy of patented machine test of finding—Patented machine improvement of—Novel combination—Infringement of Patent—Injunction—Suit for account of profits and damages—Election between the two remedies.—The fact that a machine has been improved several times since the original patent was obtained is no argument against its being a useful invention within s. 25, Act XV of 1859, (Cannington v. Nuttal, L.R. 5 H.L. 205, F.) In deciding whether a machine patented as an entire invention, is an imitation and piracy of another machine previously patented as an entire invention, the question is, is the later patented machine substantially the same as the earlier one? The fact of considerable differences existing in the several parts of the two machines will not prevent the later machine from being as a whole a copy of the earlier one; even where an exclusive privilege might have been acquired had the alterations in the later machine been claimed as improvements on the earlier one (Clark v. Adie, 2 App. Cas. 315, F.) Where a patent has been obtained for a machine which the patentee subsequently somewhat improves, a subsequent specification claiming the improved machine as a novel combination is bad though the improvement might be claimed and protected as such. Where a new arrangement of the parts of a machine is claimed as an improvement, the arrangement must be clearly described in the specification. The mere substitution of one mechanical equivalent for another already in use will not be protected. Where a case of infringement of a patent has been made out, an injunction will follow as a matter of course. A plaintiff cannot pray for an account of profits and for damages. He must elect between the two remedies. If the plaintiff elects to take an account of the profit, such accounts will only be carried back to the period of one year before the filing of the plaint in accordance with Act IX of 1871, sch. II, cl. 11. KINMOND v. JACKSON, KINMOND v. LAWRIE, 1 C.L.R. 66.

(2)—Manufacture outside—Sale within the place of privilege—No infringement.—Where an exclusive privilege is acquired for the process or manner of producing bricks and not for the bricks so produced, a sale by a third party within the limits of exclusive privilege, of bricks manufactured by the said process outside those limits will not amount to an infringement of the patentee's rights. HIRANAND v. HARI RAM, 24 P.R. 1896.

(3)—Infringement of Patent—Amount of damages—Specification of places and breaches—Acts amounting to infringement.—The fact that in the specification filed under Act XV of 1859 only some places are mentioned does not give a license to a person to infringe the right in other places not mentioned therein. Evidence of breaches in addition to those entered in the schedule prescribed by s. 34 may be taken into consideration in assessing damages. The buying of portions of machines from licensed persons and putting them together and the buying of rollers and whole machines from unlicensed persons are acts constituting infringement. LALA GANDA MAL v. MESSRS WALTER THOMSON AND JAMES MYLNE, 115 P. R. 1889.

(4)—Patent, infringement of—Injunction, to restrain infringement of patent.—The plaintiff, a patentee of a cane-crushing mill, brought a suit for an injunction to restrain infringement of his patent by the defendant. The defendant contested the suit, but the District Judge granted the injunction. Before the Appellate Court the defendant admitted the validity of the patent and that he had infringed it and undertook not to infringe it again. Held, that as there was a danger of future infringement an undertaking was not sufficient and the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction granted by the Court. *BISHUN DATT v. (1)—Reg. VIII of 1819—Purchaser of under-tenure—Decision against defaulting putnidar—Res judicata.—In the case of a person purchasing an under-tenure sold at the suit of the landlord, the purchaser is entitled to acquire rights higher than an ordinary purchaser by private contract only to the precise extent to which such privileges are conferred by express terms of law. The purchaser of a putnee talook is not entitled to set at naught all decisions arrived at against the defaulting putnidar. TARAPRASAD MITTRA v. RAM NARSING MITTRA, 6 B.L.R. App. 5 = 14 W.R. 283. See SALE—SALE FOR ARREARS OF BENT.

(1)—Putni lease, construction of—Covenant in contravention of the rule against perpetuities—Contingent covenant in a lease, when operative.—Where a lessor by a putni patta, after leasing a mouzah, exempted from its operation certain lands, and covenanted that, on certain contingencies happening, the lessee should acquire a right thereto as putnidar, but no time was specified within which the contingency was to happen in order to vest the right in the putnidar: Held, that such a covenant was void as offending against the rule against perpetuities, even as between the parties to the covenant. ANATH NATH MAITRA v. KUMAR KESHAB CHANDRA ROY, 14 C.W.N. 601 = 5 Ind. Cas. 487. (16 C. 71, P.C., 24 M. 449, 5 C.W.N. 343, R.)

(2)—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 11, cl. 1—Putni lease—Construction—Sale of portion of putni tenure—Right of auction-purchase.—Where a putni lease contained certain words to the effect that the putnidar could give no dur-putnee or mokurruri at jumma less than the jumma of the putni, held that it did not confer any such power as that described in cl. 1, s. 11 of Reg. VIII of 1819, by which the right to make incumbrances has been expressly vested in the putnidar. A portion of a putni-tenure cannot be sold under the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819, and therefore the auction-purchaser of such portion under the provisions of that law would acquire nothing. If by the sale he has acquired any of the rights of the putnidar, he is bound by the acts of the putnidar who gave the lease. MOHADEB MUNDUL v. H. COWELL, 15 W.R. 443. [Expl., 20 W.R. 275; Appr., 22 W.R. 50.]

(3)—Suit for registration of name—by se-putnidar against dur-putnidar.—A suit by a se-putnidar to compel a dur-putnidar to register his name in his sherista as transferee of a se-putni tenure is not maintainable (24 C. 642, F.). It is open to a se-putnidar to sue for a declaration of his rights as the tenant of the dur-putnidar. MOTI LAL SINGH v. SHEIK OMAR ALI, 3 C.W.N. 19. [R., 13 C.W.N. 1110.]

(4)—Transfer without Zemindar's consent—Effect of partial transfer.—A putnee talook remains whole and entire unless divided by an act of the Zemindar or by an act recognised by him. A putneedar may generally transfer his tenure without the consent of the Zemindar, but he can only do so in solido; and though the transfer of a portion of the putnee may perhaps be not altogether void, it can have no other operation than to create some kind of under-tenure between the transferor and the transferee, and can in no way affect the existence of the putnee in its entirety or the rights of the Zemindar. JUDOONATH SHAHANA v. JADUB CHURN THAKOOR, 11 W.R. 294. [D., 8 C.L.J. 554.]

(5)—Putnee-patta—Suit as ijaradar for rent—Regular suit.—A putnee tenure as regards a share therein cannot be got rid of by one of the several grantors of the putnee patta by a suit for rent as ijaradar of that share against the ryots. The putnee should be upheld until it is set aside by a regular suit. RAJ CHUNDER ROY CHOWDHRY v. UNNODA PERSHAD MOOKERJEE, 17 W.R. 221.

(6)—Putnee—Conduct of putneedar—Cancellation of original lease.—Where a putneedar made separate payments of rents to the sharers, registered his name with each of them and was prepared to enter into a fresh engagement with the plaintiff, who was one of them, all these facts did not amount to a cancellation of the original lease and substitution of a new lease. SHAM CHAND MITTER v. JUGGUT CHUNDER SIRCAR, 22 W.R. 50. [Appl., 22 W.R. 541.]

(7)—Landlord and tenant—Suit by Zemindar against both for setting aside putnee—Decree—Satisfaction by tenant—Effect.—Where a putneedar and his tenant were defendants in a suit brought by the Zemindar for setting aside the putnee and a decree was passed under which both were made liable for mesne profits which the tenants paid out of his own pocket, held, that the effect of the payment was to cancel all relation of landlord and tenant between them, and to give the tenant the right to receive back what he had paid to the zemindar. RAKHAL MONEE DOSSEE v. BROJENDRO GOPAL ROY, 23 W.R. 303.

(8)—Setting aside of putnee.—A putnee fraudulently created may be set aside as invalid notwithstanding the acquiescence of the subsequent mortgagees. JOTENDRU MOHUN TAGORE v. BROJO SOONDUREE DABEE, 1 W.R. 362.

(9)—Suit to set aside sale of putnee by widow—Subsequent collusive sale for arrears of rent—

Defendant in possession under title from widow, rights of.—Plaintiff alleged that a putnee belonged in equal shares to his maternal grandfather and his maternal grand-uncle, that on the death of the former, his widow succeeded to his moiety and afterwards sold it to the defendants. Plaintiff sued to set aside the above sale by the widow and a subsequent collusive sale under Reg. VIII of 1819, the defendant having fraudulently allowed the tenure to fall into arrear and then purchased it himself at a sale under the Regulation. The main issue to be tried was whether the defendant held possession under a title from the maternal grand-mother or not previous to the putnee sale, or did acquire his original title only from that sale; because, if the defendant was in possession under a title from the widow, his subsequent purchase at the auction sale, six years before the death of the widow, on account of non-payment of rent, would not create a new title as against those claiming through the widow, especially when, according to the plaintiff, the defendant at first allowed the putnee to fall into arrear and then fraudulently purchased it himself. WOMESH CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. BISSESSUREE DABEE, 6 W.R. 8.

(10)—Patni taluk—Splitting up of tenure—Suit by putneedar—Registrations of share—Act X of 1859, s. 27.—A putneedar is not bound to split up the tenure and to record separately the jumma payable by the holder of a share. Before the holder of a share can sue a putneedar to register his share, he should make an application to the putneedar for registration of his share under s. 27, Act X of 1859. BHOOPUTTEE ROY v. UMBICA CHURN BANERJEE, 17 W. R. 169. [R., 13 C.L.J. 613 = 9 Ind. Cas. 1001 = 16 C. W. N. 64.]

(11)—Shebait of endowed property—Powers of alienation.—The creation of a putni by the shebait of an endowed property is not absolutely null and void. Such an alienation under special circumstances of necessity will be valid. TAYUBUNISSA BIBI v. KUWAR SHAM KISHORE ROY, 7 B.L.R. 621 = 15 W.R. 228. [R., 5 B. 393, 19 B. 271, 25 A. 296.]

(12)—Putneedar—Payment of rent in equal shares to two owners of Zamindari—Division.—Where the putneedar is one individual who holds his putnee by paying rent in equal shares to the two owners of the Zamindari, the division of the putnee is the joint act of the putneedar and the Zamindars, and is as if each of the Zamindars had granted to the same person his share in the putnee. MONOMOTHONATH DEY v. GLASCOTT, 20 W.R. 275. [D., 8 C.L.J. 554.]

(13)—Putnee lease by zemindar—Interest of zemindar—Lakheraj.—A zemindar giving his estate in putni lease is entitled to challenge the right of another who asserts a lakheraj title adverse to him. OKHOY RAM JANAH v. SYUD MAHOMED HOSSEIN, W. R. 1864, 212.

(14)—Putnee tenure—Arrangement between a former proprietor and the putneedar—Validity as against the present proprietor—Held that the proprietor for the time being is not bound by a former proprietor's arrangement to allow the putneedar to pay his rent direct to the Collector. MUDDUN MOHUN SHAHA v. (15)—Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869, s. 46—Putnee talookdars—Under-tenant—The term 'under-tenant' is wide enough to include a talookar and s. 46 of Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869 applies to putnee talookdars. THAKOOR DOSS GOSSAIN v. PEAREE MOHUN MOOKERJEE, 22 W. R. 431.

(16)—Putnee lease—Intermediate taluks—Merger.—Where a putnee was obtained at a time when there were some taluks in existence under a mortgage, and the zemindar subsequently bought in the rights of the talukdars; held, that the putneedar could not claim to collect rents directly from the tenants in respect of such taluks, in the absence of a stipulation that the zemindar should put an end to the taluks in order that the plaintiff may have the benefit of collecting rents directly from the tenants. The putnee having been created prior to the cessation of the mortgage interest, the latter could not have passed under the putnee. JOORA GAZEE v. ABOO KHALIFA, 21 W.R. 427.

(17)—Plea of purchase and putnee settlement, onus of proof on defendant.—When a defendant admits that the disputed property belongs to the plaintiffs but pleads purchase and putnee settlement, inasmuch as he resists the plaintiffs' right to enter on their own estate, the burden of proving his case lies upon the defendant. When the defendant, however, sets up, and proves by evidence, which is in itself credible, the creation by the plaintiffs of an inferior tenure which entitles him to hold the estate, he has discharged himself of that burthen, and it then lies on the plaintiffs to displace or explain away that evidence. OPENDRO NARAIN GHOSE v. BAJPAYEE RAJAH-KESHUP CHUNDER DEB, 6 W.R. 25.

(18)—Partition—Putnee.—In this case the Privy Council agreed with the Lower Courts in declaring the respondents' absolute title (under a final decree in a partition suit) to an estate unencumbered by any putnee rights in the appellants. PROSONNO GOPAL PAL CHOWDRY v. BROJONATH ROY CHOWDRY, 26 W.R. 93.

(19)—Patni tenure—Alienation.—The term "patni talook" prima facie imports a hereditary tenure [S.D.A. (1806), 139, 3 W.R. Act X, Rul. 127, R.] A tenure in the nature of a patni talook is, by its very nature, alienable; the zemindar parting with all control and interest except as regards an annual rent, and his interest only requiring that the talook should be kept whole and entire. Where a potehtah granting a patni talook contained clauses prohibiting the transfer of its lands by sale or gift, the clauses were construed as intended to prevent alienation, not of the entire talook, but only of portions of the land. TARINI CHARAN GANGULI v. JOHN WATSON, 3 B.L.R. A.C. 437 = 12 W.R. 413.

(20)—Act X of 1859, s. 23 (6)—Dispossession of tenant—Buying in by Government at revenue sale of putnee taluq—Sale of taluq—bought in—Rights of purchaser—Revenue Sale laws—Sale Law before 1822 and after Reg. XI of 1822—Where tenants are dispossessed of their lands by a zemindar who disputes their title, the proper remedy is to sue under Act X of 1859. [R., 23 W.R. 460; D., 20 W.R. 455.] An hereditary, transferable putnee taluq, created subsequent to the perpetual settlement, and held at a fixed rent, was sold by Government in the year 1835, for arrears of revenue, and the Government itself became the purchaser at such sale. No steps were taken by the Government under Beng. Reg. XI of 1822, to cancel or destroy the talookdary tenure, but, on the contrary, the Government, after reducing the tenure from a taluq at a fixed to a variable rent, made various settlements with the talookdars as late as 1862, agreeing to preserve their rights. The Government afterwards sold the taluk subject to the rights of the talookdars. Held that, as the Government had not effectually annulled the tenure before the year 1842, it had lost its statutory right to do so, as Ben. Reg. XI of 1822, under which that right depended, was repealed by Act XII of 1841. Held further, that the purchaser from the Government had no higher rights than were possessed by his vendor, at the date of the sale, and the purchaser's title was subject to the vendor's agreement to preserve the talookdar's rights. [R., 24 W.R. 247, 18 W.R. 469, 25 W.R. 536, 2 C.L.R. 13, 9 C. 683 = 12 C.L.R. 304; D., 23 W.R. 345, 2 C.L.R. 216.] The general policy of the Revenue Sale Laws that have been passed since the Perpetual Settlement has been to protect the public revenue by placing the purchaser of an estate sold for arrears of revenue in the position of the person who, at the time of the Decennial Settlement, engaged to pay the revenue then fixed. They, therefore, gave or sought to give the purchaser, the power of abrogating all engagements made by the defaulting zemindar or his predecessors since the settlement, whereby the zamindaree rents and profits, which were the security of Government for the payment of revenue, were diminished. A talookdar could not be dispossessed of his land at the will of the purchaser at the sale; he was at the most liable to pay the district rate for them, and could only be ejected from them if he finally declined to hold it at the enhanced rent. Under Reg. XI of 1822, the law respecting dependent talooks created subsequently to the Settlement was that "such talooks were liable to be wholly avoided and annulled at the option of the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue, unless they fell within the class contemplated by

s. 32 of the Regulation." KHAJAH ASSANOOLLAH v. OBHOY CHURN RAY, 13 W.R.P. C 24 = 13 M.I.A. 317 = 2 Suther. 306 = 2 Sar. 535.

(21)—Payment by durputneedar to zemindar, putneedar not liable to make good.—The plaintiff, a durpatneedar, sued to recover from the Zemindar and putneedar a sum of money which he, the plaintiff, had paid to the Zemindar on account of the putneedar. The Judge on appeal decreed the suit against the putneedar who, on his present special appeal, alleged first, that his putnee had been sold, before the money was paid in, and secondly, that the money was not paid in, according to s. 13, Reg. XVIII of 1819, direct into Court but to the Zemindar. The High Court accepted the above contentions and held that the putneedar was not liable to make good the durputneedar's payments to the zemindar, insufficient as they were to stop the sale of the putnee and also because such payments, under the law, must be made in Court. MIRZA MAHOMED HOSSEIN ALI v. SHAIKH BUKAOOLAH, 6 W.R. 84. [R., 15 W.R. 560.]

(22)—Unregistered purchaser of dur-putnee payments made by, to save putnee from sale—Liability of registered dur-putneedar to pay rent to putneedar.—Plaintiff, a putneedar, sued his registered dur-putneedar for rent. The dur-putneedar was held to be liable for rent though he asserted that he had sold his tenure to one S not acknowledged by the putneedar. One a sale of the putnee for arrears, S paid money to save the putnee from sale, and the dur-putneedar was held to be not entitled to deduct, as he claimed to do, from the rent due by him, the payments made by S, which were those of a mere volunteer, till S established her interest in the estate and obtained registration. LUCKEE NARAIN MITTER v. SITANATH GHOSE, 6 W.R. Act X Ruls. 8.

(23)—Sale of putnee tenure—S. 14, Act X, 1859, applicability of.—S. 14, Act X, 1859, applies to the case of a purchaser of a putnee Taluq at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819, only when the jumma is shown to be a mesne incumbrance which came into existence subsequently to the creation of the putnee. HURRO MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. BROJOKISHOR ROY, W.R., 1864, Act X, 103.

(24)—Putni—Alienation by putneedars and dur-putneedars—Non-registration by zemindar—Status of alienees.—All putneedars and dur-putneedars have the right to alienate or otherwise transfer their property without the consent of the zemindar. Consequently, the status of the alienees does not depend upon the registration or the consent of the zemindar. OKHOY COOMAR CHATERJEE v. MAHARAJAH DHIRAJ MAHTAB CHAND BAHADOOR, 22 W.R. 299.

(25)—Dur-patneedar taking putnee lease of same property—Abandonment of possession—Right to recover damages—Benami putnee—Lapse of darpatni.—A took a durputnee lease of a certain village under one K knowing that the latter held a benami putnee of the whole estate from the zamindar. The rights and interests of the said zamindar being afterwards sold in execution of a decree against him, they were purchased by a member of the family of the zamindar and were afterwards purchased by M from the first purchaser. M brought an action to prove that the putnee in the name of K was only a benami for the zamindar and obtained a decree and in execution of it took khas possession of the property. A then losing possession of the village he had held in dur-putnee for about 8 years. The zamindari and putnee rights acquired by M by purchase and by decree came back to the zamindar by some subsequent arrangement and A, previous to this transfer, obtained from M a putnee of the village he held as durputnee on the same jumma that he paid before as his dur-putnee rent. A now sued the zamindar to recover as damages the consideration he had paid for the dur-putnee. Held that A having virtually abandoned his possession without trying to dispute in a Court the purchaser's right to oust him, was not entitled to recover any damages for such loss of possession. Where a higher tenure (e. g., a putnee) is found to be a benami, an under-tenure (e. g., dur-putnee, acquired bona fide does not necessarily lapse. DWARKANATH MISSER v. SREE GOPAL PAUL CHOWDHRY, 5 W.R. 240.

(26)—Patni—Subsequent qabuliat giving up certain mouzahs—Fresh patni—Regulations V of 1816, XII of 1817 and I of 1819—Kanungo and Patwari—Jamawasil baki Papers, admissibility of—Documents not objected to at trial—Subsequent objection not allowable.—A patni of thirty mouzhas was created bearing a certain rent. Subsequently the patnidar executed another qabuliat, by which he gave up seventeen mouzahs and kept thirteen as his patni, with a proportionate reduction of rent: Held, that by the second qabuliat he became a patnidar of a fresh patni. Regulations V of 1816 and XII of 1817 and I of 1819 should be read together. By s. 16 of Regulation XII of 1817, there is no condition that the patwaris should confine themselves only to such lands as are khas lands or under attachment. Therefore, the jama-wasilbaki prepared prior to the fresh patni, though subsequently to the original patni, would be admissible against the patnidar. (7 W. R. 533, D.) The erroneous omission to object to the admission of a document, which is out and out irrelevant, does not make it relevant, and a party may object to it even before the appellate stage of the case, though he did not object to it at the trial; but when once a document which is relevant has been received without any objection at the trial in evidence, it is too late afterwards to object to it on the ground of inadmissibility. (1)—Patwari's rates and cesses—Plaintiffs suing as assignees of Government revenue—whether they can recover.—In a suit to recover the patwari's rates and cesses paid by the plaintiffs on behalf of the defendant, a zemindar, it was held, that they could recover the said rates and cesses in the same manner as in a suit for arrears of revenue, and a suit for their recovery lies as a suit to recover arrears of revenue. As for those rates the persons with whom the mahal was settled incurred a joint liability, and so, the plaintiffs must be deemed to have paid them as co-sharers. NARAIN SINGH v. (8)—Execution of decree—Attachment—Disallowance of claim—Appeal in forma pauperis—Right of suit.—In execution of a decree obtained by him against A's husband's brother, B attached certain property. The objections of A's husband under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, having been disallowed, A sued the decree-holder B and the auction-purchaser for a declaration of her right and title to the property, on the allegation that it belonged to her husband and obtained a decree. Held that, in the appeal in forma pauperis preferred by B and the auction purchaser, the former had a good ground of appeal if he could make out that the property really belonged to the judgment-debtor. In the matter of MOSHAOOLLAH KHAN, 14 W.R. 445.

Court of first instance which dismissed it and ordered the plaintiff to pay Court fees due to Government. Thereupon the plaintiff preferred an appeal in forma pauperis to the High Court and the parties compromised the claim by an agreement that the plaintiff should withdraw the appeal and that the defendant should pay the costs due to Government both in the Court of first instance and in the appellate Court. On the day of the hearing of the appeal, the plaintiff withdrew the appeal. Thereupon, the Government pleader, on behalf of the Collector, intervened and applied for an order directing the defendant (in pursuance of the terms of the compromise) to pay to Government all costs due to them in the Court of first instance and the appellate Court. Both parties opposed the application, and the Government pleader prayed for an order dispaupering the plaintiff under s. 414, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. Held (1) that the Court cannot order the defendant to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties, and (2) that, the appeal having been withdrawn by the plaintiff, the decree of the Court of first instance stands, and thus the right of the Government to the Court-fees due by the institution of the suit is secured, and that, s. 414 not being applicable to the present case, no order could be passed under s. 412. BAI CHANDABA v. KUPER SAHEB BAPU SAHEB, 18 B. 464. [Overruled, 31 B. 10=8 Bom. L. R. 689; D., 6 Bom. L. R. 1122=29 B. 102.]

Code—Application for leave to appeal as a pauper*.—Held, that an order admitting an appeal passed by a Judge in Chambers is a provisional order and is subject to the decision of the Bench which tries the appeal. The Chief Court rejected the application for leave to appeal as a pauper after perusal of the application and the judgments of the lower Courts holding that the decree was contrary not to law or usage or otherwise erroneous or unjust. MUSSAMMAT HUSAINI BEGAM v. So, where a party desirous of appealing as a pauper prefers an application to so appeal accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, unless the Court has forthwith rejected the application under s. 592 of the Code, it has power to order execution of the decree to be stayed notwithstanding that the appeal may not have been admitted as a pauper appeal. R. LANCASTER v. LAHORE ICE AND AERATED WATER COMPANY, 70 P.R. 1879.

(17)—Order allowing suit in forma pauperis, High Court not competent to set aside—Application for stay of all proceedings in appeal—Question to be decided in regular proceedings in suit or appeal.—One of the two applications in this case was made praying that the plaintiff should be dispauperized, on the ground that facts had been discovered since the permission to sue in forma pauperis was granted, which showed that he was not, and never was, entitled to carry on any proceedings as a pauper. The High Court held that the only order made in the case was that made in the Court below that he should be allowed to carry on the suit there as a pauper. That order was one not subject to appeal and, if that had been obtained improperly, the proper course would be to apply to the Courts which made it, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the final order of the lower Court on any such ground. The other application sought for stay of all proceedings in the appeal on the ground that the plaintiff had no interest in the suit. It was held that even if there be anything to show that the plaintiff had no interest whatever in the suit there were proper recognized modes for bringing the matter forward in the course of regular proceedings in the suit or the appeal, and the High Court could not, by a mere collateral proceeding, try a question which can only properly be raised in the suit or the appeal itself. In re petitioner, KHODEJOONISSA, 7 W. The petition contained a statement of the claim and such particulars as are required in a plaint, and a prayer that as part of the immoveable property was situate within the jurisdiction of the Punjab Chief Court, the Subordinate Judge would seek the necessary sanction to give him jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application, not on any of the grounds mentioned in the Code, but because the suit could also be instituted in the Delhi Court, and he considered it should be instituted there, that Court being in a better position to ascertain whether or not the plaintiff was a pauper. The plaintiff on the 3rd March presented his petition to the Court at Delhi, and on the 14th April was admitted to sue as a pauper. Sanction having been sought by the Court at Delhi for trial of the suit by that Court, the High Court, North-Western Provinces, and the Chief Court of the Punjab considered it better that the suit should be tried at Meerut, and on the 10th June, the Deputy Commissioner returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation in the Meerut Court. On the 19th July, the plaint was again presented to the Subordinate Judge at Meerut, and was registered by him. On the 10th November, several defendants to the suit filed their written statements and some of them urged that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis till his pauperism had been proved in the Court which was competent to hear the claim. Upon this the Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to admit the suit and threw it out. Held, that, if the Subordinate Judge regarded as ineffectual the order of the Delhi Court admitting the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, he should himself have entered on the enquiry as to the plaintiff's pauperism, and passed orders in the manner prescribed by law, and that the provisions of s. 310 of the Code were not applicable to the order of the Subordinate Judge who did not refuse to allow the plaintiff to sue as a pauper but did not pronounce any opinion on the point. The plaintiff was entitled to deduct any portion of the time during which his suit was pending in the Delhi Court, as he prosecuted it bona fide and with due diligence in that Court which, because it could not obtain the sanction necessary for the trial of the suit, was compelled to reject the plaint. STEWART SKINNER v. able to raise money upon security of equity of redemption.—The applicant who wished to institute a suit for redemption applied to be declared a pauper. The Court below holding that he was possessed of the equity of redemption of the property in dispute, and was therefore not a pauper, dismissed the application. Held, that the plaintiff could have raised money on the equity of redemption, and that, in trying to raise money on the equity of redemption, he would not in effect be mortgaging his claim. KAPIL DEO SINGH v. [Not F., 12 Bom.L.R. 102.] The "subject-matter of the suit" mentioned in

s. 401 of the Code is not determined until after the inquiry under ss. 408 and 409 of the Code into the petitioners' pauperism is completed, and during that stage there is no plaint and consequently no suit. It is only after the application is granted under s. 410 that the application is deemed the plaint in the suit. And any facts brought out in the previous inquiry under ss. 408 and 409, must be taken into account, and any property proved not to be in litigation cannot reasonably be held to be part of the claim. [R., 33 C. 1163=4 C.L.J. 234.] The real ground of excluding the subject-matter of the suit from calculation is because it is presumably out of the petitioner's reach, and cannot be made use of by him to carry on his litigation. But where a portion of the property is freely at his disposal, as in the present case, there is no reason for excluding it from the reckoning. The general intention of the chapter relating to pauper suits apparently is that no person should be declared a pauper, who has at his disposal sufficient means to proceed. The conditions of pauperism are different (1) when the plaint requires a Court-fee, and (2) when none is required; but in both the cases the intention of the chapter is the same, viz., to fix a certain sum as the measure of the pauperism—in the one case the institution fee and in the other case Rs. 100, and to provide that, if the petitioner has not this sum at his disposal, he will be exempt from Court-fees; if he has it, he is held to have the means of proceeding, and is not allowed the privilege of pauperism. Because it is a privilege to sue as a pauper, the rule of construction is that the provisions of the sections under which the privilege is claimed must be strictly construed. DWARKA NATH NARAYAN v. MADHAVRAU VISHVANATH, 10 B. 207.

(24)—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Rejection of application—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 407 (c), 622—"Right to sue"—Limitation Case.—The words of s. 407, Civ. Pro. Code, should not be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether the "right to sue" arose within its jurisdiction, but they have a more extended meaning, namely, that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action, capable of enforcement in Court and calling for an answer, and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law. Therefore, when an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis was rejected under s. 407 (c) on the ground, that the claim was barred by limitation and that the applicant had thus no right to sue—held, by the Full Bench, that the Court had acted within its powers, and that its jurisdiction not having been exercised illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court could not interfere in revision under s. 622. (11 C. 6, R.) Per Mahmood, J.—The provisions of s. 407 must be interpreted strictly, because they operate in derogation of the right, which every litigant has, to seek the aid of the Courts of justice. And the High Court has power, under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to revise an order passed under s. 407, rejecting an application to sue in forma pauperis, in cases whether such rejection has been made by exercising jurisdiction "illegally or with material irregularity" within the meaning of s. 622. (7 A. 345, 4 M. 323, R.) [F., 13 B. 126, 130 P.R. 1894, 5 M.L.J. 193 = 19 M. 197, 20 A. 299; R., 20 B. 86, U.B.R. 1892—1896, Vol. II, 272, 13 M.L.J. 292, F.B.; D., 10 A. 467, A.W.N. 1888, 150, A.W.N. 1893, 218.] The word "case" as used in s. 622, Civ. Pro. Code, should be understood in its broadest and most ordinary sense, and includes all adjudications which might form the subject of appeal or revision, and applies to an order under s. 407, just as it applies to an order under s. 53 or s. 54, Civ. Pro. Code. CHAT-TARPAL SINGH v. RAJA RAM, 7 A. 661, F.B. = A.W.N. 1885, 156. (A.W.N. 1882, 39, 69, 92, R.) [R., 10 A. 467, 2 L.B.R. 333.]

(25)—Rejection of application to sue—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 457, 622.—An application to be allowed to sue as a pauper was, though plaintiff was found to be a pauper, rejected on the ground that he had not made out a prima facie case entitling him to permission to sue, apparently under s. 407, cl. (c) of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held in revision, that orders under s. 407 do fall under the purview of s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and that the application ought not to have been rejected without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of producing his evidence upon the merits of the title alleged by him in the plaint. ALI HAMZA v. AHASAM ALI, A.W.N. 1888, 150. [Appr., 10 A. 467.]

(26)—Application for leave to sue as pauper, when good prima facie title to property in suit not established—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 407 and 409.—In the matter of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, it was pleaded that the applicant had grossly over-stated his claim, and documents were filed which bore out this contention. Several adjournments were allowed in order that the applicant might establish a prima facie claim to the share in the villages in dispute but he was unable to do so. Held, that a person, who applies for leave to sue as a pauper, must make out that he has a good subsisting prima facie cause of action, capable of enforcement in Court and calling for an answer. SHEOPAL v. SINGH SUKH KARAN SINGH, 11 O.C. 57.

Code, ss. 407 (c), 409.*—Where a person obtained a conviction against another, which was set aside on appeal, on the ground that the Magistrate was not competent to try the case, and the latter thereupon applied for permission to sue in forma pauperis for damages for malicious prosecution, the Court should not dismiss the application, on the ground that the suit is not maintainable, because of the applicant not having been acquitted on appeal by reason of the original conviction having proceeded on evidence which the complainant knew to be false or on the wilful suppression of material information by him. The question whether the suit was not maintainable on such a ground is one, which was outside the scope of question, which the Court had authority to decide under s. 409, and pertained to the merits of the case. The Court should proceed with the enquiry into the pauperism of the applicant and pass the necessary orders under that section. PEROBASHAW SEROBASHAW v. (29)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 407 (d)—Application to sue in forma pauperis—Agreement with vakil to pay remuneration out of subject-matter of suit.—The application in this case, to sue in forma pauperis, was contested on the ground that the applicants had entered into an agreement to give a lump sum of money as remuneration for the services of their vakil and permitted him in default to recover the same from the revenues of the Jaghir sought to be redeemed by them. Held that the application should be rejected as the language of cl. (d) of s. 407 of the Civ. Pro. Code was sufficiently wide to cover such an agreement and it could not be contended that the word 'interest' in the clause could not be restricted to such a vested and complete interest as that the person who obtained it should be made a party to the suit from commencement. MANOHAR RAMCHANDRA v. Cas. 829.] The mere statements in the plaint which accompanies an application for leave to sue as a pauper cannot be accepted as the sole materials on which a decision as to whether the applicant's allegations do or do not show a right to sue, can depend. If the allegations in the plaint were the sole matters to be looked to and the applicant were admittedly a pauper, the granting of this application to sue as a pauper would depend, not on whether he had any merits to go upon, but on the skill of gentleman who drafted his petition and his plaint, and the examination as to the merits under s. 406, Civ. Pro. Code, would be superfluous. KAM RAKH NATH v. SUNDAR NATH, 20 A. 299=A.W.N. 1898, 36. (12 B. 617, D.) [R., 91 P.L.R. 1909, 2 L.B.R. 333.]

(34)—Costs of successful defendant in pauper suit, not covered by s. 412, Civ. Pro. Code.—Application of s. 220.—S. 412 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and the chapter of which it forms a part do not deal with the costs of a successful defendant in a pauper suit. The institution fee and other fees which a pauper plaintiff is excused from pre-paying are fees payable to Government. Ss. 411 and 412 prescribe how those fees payable to Government are to be eventually recovered 'in any case, whether the pauper succeeds or whether he fails. There is nothing, however, in either of these sections, or in any other part of chapter XXVI of the Code which can be held to apply to the costs incurred by the successful defendant when the pauper fails. Such costs fall under s. 220, which deals with costs in suits in general and leaves them to be disposed of by the Court in any manner it thinks fit. JETHA MULCHAND v. (35)—Decree in pauper suit—Sale of decree—Consent of Government—Claim of Government for stamp—Lien—Costs.—Where Government, after obtaining an attachment against a pauper plaintiff's decree for satisfaction of the amount awarded to them in respect of stamps, consent to the sale of that decree in execution of another decree against the pauper and obtain an order by which they secure to themselves the chance of any surplus arising from that sale, they cannot, when there is no surplus, be heard to say, as against the purchaser at that sale, that the decree sold was subject to any claim of Government under the decree made in their favour for the value of stamps. The amount of stamps in a pauper-case is recoverable by Government from any person ordered to pay the same, in the same manner as costs of suit are recoverable. The Government has not a lien or charge in their favour upon the decree for the amount of such stamps. PRAN KRISTO ROY v. THE COLLECTOR OF MOORSHEDABAD, 15 W.R. 205.

(36)—S. 411, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Scope of—Old Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 309—Suit in forma pauperis—Successful petitioner—Charge of Government for Court-fees—Crown-debt, priority of.—S. 411 of the Code is an enabling section. Though it indicates the manner in which the Crown may proceed to realise Court-fees of a successful pauper plaintiff, which form a Crown-debt, it does not preclude the Crown or its representative from urging its prerogative and insisting on its right to precedence over all other creditors. A successful pauper plaintiff attached and sold for her costs certain property, other than the property in suit, belonging to the judgment-creditor. The sale-proceeds were paid into Court. The plaintiff's solicitor applied to have his costs paid out of the sale-proceeds. The Government Solicitor also applied to have his certified Court-fees paid to him out of the fund in Court. Held, that the Government Solicitor was entitled to precedence and that it was not necessary for him to attach the fund before getting payment. SRIMATY GAYANODA BALA DASEE v. [R., 18 A. 419, 33 C. 1040=10 C.W.N. 857.] The claim of the Crown on the proceeds of a pauper suit, to the extent of the Court-fee leviable thereon if the plaintiff was not a pauper, has precedence over that of other creditors. GANPAT PUTAYA v. (39)—Sale proceeds realized in execution against pauper plaintiff—Preferential right of Collector to amount of Court-fee.—In an application for execution by the defendant against an unsuccessful pauper plaintiff, his property was attached, and subsequently, on the application of the Collector, the Court executing the decree ordered that the property should be sold in satisfaction of the Collector's claim for Court-fees and of the demand of the defendant for costs, and that the Collector should be first paid out of the sale proceeds. The sale proceeds being insufficient to meet both these demands, the Court passed another order, under which the Collector and the defendant were to be paid out of the sale proceeds rateably. Held, in a suit by the Collector to contest the order and to recover from the defendant, in the pauper suit, the amount paid to him out of the sale proceeds, that he was entitled to recover, as the Crown was entitled to be paid first, out of the proceeds of such sale, the amount of the Court-fee the plaintiff in the pauper suit would have had to pay if he had not been allowed to sue as a pauper. GULZARI LAL v. (40)—Plaint in suit in forma pauperis, return of, for presentation to proper Court—Returning Court not competent to order payment of Court-fees by plaintiff—Order of such Court refusing to execute its order for costs, no appeal lies from.—A Court, to which an application to sue as a pauper was presented, held the plaintiff-applicant's pauperism to be proved, but, finding that it had no jurisdiction, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court with an order that each party was to pay his own costs. From the order passed by such Court rejecting an application of the Collector for recovering the Court-fees from the plaintiff, no appeal and, therefore, no second appeal was held to lie. But, inasmuch as the original order of the first Court for payment of Court-fees by the plaintiff was not one which that Court had jurisdiction to make under s. 412 of Act X of 1877, the High Court, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, annulled that order and with it all the proceedings consequent upon it, including the orders passed by the lower Courts on the said application of the Collector. THE COLLECTOR OF RATHNAGIRI v. In cases in which the application of a pauper to be permitted to sue in forma pauperis is admitted, such plaintiff is not liable to any further stamp-duty in respect of any petition, appointment of a pleader or other proceeding connected with the suit, or with the execution of any decree passed on it. Under these sections, the pauper cannot claim exemption from liability to pay any further stamp-duty or penalty in respect of a document on which he relies, and which, owing to a defect in the stamp, is inadmissible as evidence in the suit. It is not for a Civil Court to receive and submit to the Revenue Board any application on the part of a pauper for the purpose of obtaining the authority of the Board to remit or mitigate the penalty under the Stamp Law. It is the duty of the plaintiff to make timely application to the Board for the above purpose under cl. 6, s. 15 of Act X of 1862. GOLAM GUFOOR v. EKRAM HOSSEIN CHOWDHRY, 10 W.R. 357.

Code, 1882, ss. 244, 246, 247, 411—Execution by Government for Court-fees—Appeal—Cross-claims and cross-decrees—Court-fees payable to Government—Mode of recovery—An appeal lies from an order granting an application by the Collector, for the recovery of Court-fees due by a plaintiff suing in forma pauperis, inasmuch as the Collector must be deemed to have been a party to the suit in which the decree was passed. [F., 13 A. 326; Cons., 23 M. 73; R., 18 M. 439.]* The provisions of these sections apply, only when execution proceedings are taken, and in the absence of such proceedings, no questions of set-off and consequent reduction or other modification of the "subject-matter" of the suit decreed against a defendant can arise. The Government has in respect of the Court-fees due to it in a pauper suit, a first charge on that portion of the subject-matter of the suit decreed in favour of the plaintiff, recoverable in the same way as costs are ordinarily recovered under the Code. JANKI v. Subsequently, the matter was amicably settled, and the plaintiff's application that the suit may be dismissed was granted by the Subordinate Judge. Pro. Code, 1882, praying that the lower Court should be directed to make an order for the payment of Court-fees under s. 412 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and (2) that the Subordinate Judge was not competent to make the order desired by the Collector, because s. 412 of the Code had no application to the present case, there having been no adjudication of the rights of the parties. (44)—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 412, 622, words "fails in the suit" in, meaning of—Pauper suit dismissed without contest, plaintiff liable to pay up Court-fees.—Even where a suit in forma pauperis happens to be dismissed without contest and trial, the plaintiff will be liable under s. 412 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The words "succeeds" and "fails in the suit" in the section refer to the ultimate decision or the result of the suit, and not to the mode in which the decision is arrived at. It would be doing violence to the language of the section, to construe it as if the words "after contest" had occurred therein. Where in such a case, the lower Court's proceedings have been based on a misconstruction of the section, it is competent to the High Court to interfere under s. 622 of the Code and order payment of Court-fees by the plaintiff. THE COLLECTOR OF VIZAGAPATAM v. At the time when the suit was decreed, an order was made in favour of the Collector for the realisation of the Court-fees due to Government. In execution of this order, the Collector attached the said decree under s. 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure and subsequently sold the same under s. 284. An application was made by the decree-holder for execution of his decree: held, that the provisions of s. 273 did not contemplate the sale of a decree for money, and that section was introduced into the Indian Code for the purpose of showing in what manner the attachment of decrees under the Code should be made available on behalf of the attaching person. *JOTINDRO NATH CHOWDHRY v. She pleaded that all was mere self-acquisition by prostitution. The Judge found that only a very small sum was ancestral, and gave the plaintiff a decree for a moiety, but directed the sister to pay the Government stamp duty for the entire claim, as her defence was a disreputable one. Held that no penalty can lawfully be imposed upon her for pleading what was found to be substantially true and that the decision of the ancestral property was founded on the custom of their caste. *CHANDRASEKA v. (49)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 411—Court-fee payable to Government by successful pauper plaintiff—Execution against subject-matter of suit.—By s. 411 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the Court-fees which would have been payable had not the plaintiff been allowed to sue as a pauper are to be calculated by the Court should the plaintiff succeed. When so calculated, the amount is declared by operation of law to be a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit, and such amount is also, according to law, recoverable by Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, in the same manner as costs of a suit are recoverable. It cannot be successfully contended that the first charge thus created can only be enforced by a separate suit brought by the Government. The Legislature must be taken to have given the Secretary of State a right to recover the Court-fees in the same way as if they had been costs in the suit, either generally from the person or property of any one ordered by the decree to pay the same, or from the property, the subject-matter of the suit. It cannot have been the intention of the Legislature to compel the Government to bring a separate suit, in such a

An order rejecting an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis is not a decree, and being unappealable may form the subject of an application for revision. AZMAT ALI v. The petition was admitted, and the usual order made under s. 305, and the case came on for hearing under s. 306. The defendant proposed to show by examination of the plaintiff that, on the facts stated in the petition there was no cause of action. The plaintiff objected that in suits in forma pauperis no question except the pauperism of the petitioner could, under s. 306, be gone into. The Judge allowed the examination of the plaintiff with a view to show that, on her own evidence, she had no cause of action. But her evidence not showing that she had no cause of action, the defendant proposed to show it by calling other witnesses which the Court refused to allow. TARRAMONEY DABEE v. (62)—Mad. Reg. VII of 1818, s. 18, cl. 5—Suit in forma pauperis—Presentation and filing of petition for leave to sue—Irregular proceedings.—By Mad. Reg. VII of 1818, s. 18, cl. 5, the practice is to serve a petition for liberty to sue in forma pauperis and the plaint, on the party proceeded against, to show cause within a certain time why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis. In 1847, A presented a petition to the Civil Court of Chittoor for liberty to sue in forma pauperis for recovery of a polliam. The Court was of opinion that, under Mad. Reg. IV of 1831, A could not be permitted to sue without obtaining the authority of the Government. In May, 1848, A obtained the sanction of the Government, and in October of that year, he presented a petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis and at the same time, lodged his plaint. On the 13th of November, 1848, the plaint and petition were ordered by the Court to be filed. The order for service of the petition and plaint, requiring the defendant to show cause why A should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis was not served until August, 1849. No cause was shown, and the proceedings stood in that position on the 16th of September, 1849, when twelve years (the time limited by Mad. Reg. II of 1802, s. 18, cl. 4), from the 16th of September, 1837, when the cause of action accrued, had expired. The plaint was, by a subsequent order of the Court, filed on the 1st of March, 1850. Held:—First, that the proceedings of the Civil Court of Chittoor, on the 13th of November, 1848, were, by Mad. Reg. VII of 1818, s. 5, irregular, as the course there directed was to serve the petition and plaint on the party proceeded against, to show cause within a certain time why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis: Secondly, that the suit was not barred by Mad. Reg. II of 1802, s. 18, cl. 4, as A had preferred his claim within the prescribed period to a Court of competent jurisdiction, and had been prevented from commencing his suit in proper time by the irregular proceedings of the Court. NARAGUNTY LUCH-MEDAVAMA v. (63)—Suit in forma pauperis—Senior anand-ravan of a Malabar Tarwad—Right to bring such a suit—Trust properties.—A senior anand-ravan of a Malabar Tarwad is entitled to bring a suit in forma pauperis to set aside alienations made by the karnavan, where the properties alienated are temple properties; it is not necessary for him to consult other uralers of the temple to bring such a suit. A Court should not refuse an application to sue in forma pauperis, merely because there is no cause of action in regard to a portion of the claim made in the suit. Such a question is one for elimination of such properties from the suit when tried, and not for a refusal of the application to sue in forma pauperis. MANGALASHERI ILLATH KRISHNAN NUMBUDRI v. (1)—Payment—Payment of debt to representative of deceased person—Discharge—Right of executors of the deceased to ignore such payment—Notice of claim—Duty of executors—Negligence, effect of.—Held, that as no one is under legal obligation to pay debts due to the estate of a deceased person to any one claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased, except on the production of a probate, letters of administration, certificate or some authority to collect the debts due to the estate of the deceased, therefore a payment by a debtor to the widow of his deceased creditor, who had not obtained any authority to recover the debts due to her deceased husband's estate was not a valid discharge to the debtor, and that the executors of the deceased creditor were fully entitled to ignore such a payment, and to sue for the same. Mere neglect on the part of the executors to give notice of their claim to the debtor did not debar them from claiming the debt, although it might be a good reason for declining to give interest, damages or even costs as regards such a claim. *GOLAK NATH v. Therefore, when the balance of the purchase money was brought to the Court, on the fourteenth day after sale, and a chalan was obtained, and both were taken to the treasury, but the treasury officer had closed for the day and, the next two days being holidays for the treasury, the money had to be paid on the seventeenth day, the Courts ought to consider such payment as made in time. OMANATH ROY CHOWDHRY v. SUROOP CHUNDER BOSE, 10 W.R. 485.

(4)—Auction-purchaser—Mortgage —Lien—Payment.—Auction-purchasers with notice of a mortgagee's lien are liable to pay off the mortgage, and to satisfy any decree which the mortgagee may obtain in regard to the property in a suit pending at the time of the purchase. Such decree cannot be satisfied by payment into Court unless the mortgagee has the means of immediately taking the money out of Court, or has acquiesced in such payment. THE LAND MORTGAGE BANK v. RAM RUTTUN NEOGY, 21 W.R. 270. [D., 22 W.R. 461.]

(5)—Specially registered mortgage bond—Decree—Cause of action—Payment.—P lends money to S under a specially registered-bond pledging immovable property, and afterwards obtains a decree for principal and interest; more than four years later, he brings a further suit to recover the interest due under the same bond: meanwhile plaintiffs lend money to S under a bond by which the same property is pledged, and recover a decree in execution of which the property is sold. P proceeds to attach the property in execution of his second decree when plaintiffs object but ineffectually, and after that, to protect the property they have purchased, they pay a sum of money into Court, which is subsequently taken out by P. Held that after execution of P's first decree, he was not entitled to a second decree for interest, so as to reserve a lien upon the property pledged, and had no right to take out the money deposited by plaintiffs. Held too that, under the circumstances, the payment of the money into Court was not a voluntary payment, and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. MUTHOORA MOHUN ROY CHOWDHRY v. PEAREE MOHUN SHAHA, 23 W.R. 344.

(6)—Execution of decree—Order for payment into Court—Appeal by both parties—Payment by defendant into Court—Plaintiff's refusal to take—Attachment by another decree-holder of defendant and receipt of money by him—Confirmation of lower Court's order—Application by plaintiff for payment of amount—Effect of previous refusal.—In execution of a decree by the plaintiff against the defendant, the latter was ordered to pay into Court a sum of Rs. 140. Both parties appealed against the order which was eventually confirmed. Meanwhile, the amount was paid into Court as directed by the lower Court, but the plaintiff refused to take it. And another decree-holder of the defendant attached this sum in execution of his own decree and was paid this sum. After the order of the appellate Court confirming that of the lower Court, plaintiff applied to the lower Court to recover the said sum. The defendant contended that he had already paid the amount into Court. Held that it was clear that, after the defendant paid the Rs. 140 into Court in execution of the decree, the Court held the money on account of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, who had not obtained stay of execution, could not refuse to take it because an appeal was pending; that the plaintiff's refusal, therefore, to take the money could not justify the lower Court in treating the money as the defendant's and in ordering it to be paid to another judgment-creditor of the defendant without his having in any way expressed his assent to the money being so treated; and that the money should have remained in Court, i.e., paid into the treasury as a civil deposit; and that consequently, the plaintiff could not recover this amount from the defendant. LAKSHMAN DADAJI v. DAMODAR AMBADAS, 15 B. 681.

(7)—Landlord and tenant—Deposit of rent.—Tenants who have been in the habit of depositing in Court the rent due to a landlord, in his sole name are not justified, without receiving notice or order to that effect, in making the deposit in the joint names of that landlord and another. JOHN RUDD RAINEY v. NUBO COOMAR MOOKERJEE, 24 W.R. 128.

(8)—Decree for rent—Payment by judgment-debtor under protest—Ejectment from tenure—Act VIII of 1862 (B.C.), s. 52.—Where a judgment-debtor pays into Court, within 15 days from the date on which a decree for rent has been passed against him, the amount in arrear together with costs and interest with a protest in respect of the sum improperly charged against him as interest, held that the judgment-debtor, having fulfilled the spirit of s. 52 of Act VIII of 1869 (B.C.) was not liable to be ejected from his tenure. SREESHTEDAR DEY v. DOORGA NARAIN NAG, 17 W.R. 462.

(9)—Decree amount paid to decree-holder, but not in Court—Effect.—If the money payable under a decree is not paid into Court and the debtor prefers to pay direct to the creditor, he does so at his own risk. GUNGA GOBIND GOOPTOO v. MAKHUN LALL HATTEE, 9 W.R. 362.

(10)—Act VI (B.C.) of 1862—Deposit—Payment without tender.—A defendant is not entitled to any benefit from a deposit of money paid in under Act VI (B.C.) of 1862 without a tender to, and refusal by, the plaintiff. KRISTO PROTIBAR v. ALLADINEE DOSSEE, 15 W.R. 4.

(11)—Mortgage—Attachment of equity of redemption—Purchase by mortgagee—Payment to raise attachment—Right of suit—Decree—Non-registration—Effect.—A mortgaged certain property to B who subsequently purchased the same from A. After the mortgage and before the said sale, C, who obtained a money decree against A attached the property and brought it to sale. The sale was afterwards set aside on the ground of irregularity. As the setting aside of the sale did not displace the attachment, C resumed proceedings in execution, got an order for sale, and the property was about to be sold pursuant to this order, when B released it from liability to be sold by paying into Court the money due which he now sought to recover back from C. Held that C had a right to sell the rights and interests of his judgment-debtor in the property attached, that, at the time of the attachment, those rights and interests amounted to an equity of redemption, and that consequently he was entitled to keep the money which saved the sale. The non-registration of a decree cannot, by any possibility, be a reason why the decree should not be executed. GOSSAIN MUNRAJ POOREE v. DEEN DYAL LALL, 20 W.R. 19.

(12)—Execution—Attachment of allowance—Prohibitory order—Order directing payment into Court.—In 1871, the Judge made an order upon M, which was in the nature of an order of attachment, in a case of execution of decree against one B, requiring M to pay into Court a sum of Rs. 700 out of the monthly allowance of Rs. 1,000 due from the estate of M to B, in the first instance for the months of August to November 1871, and then month by month. M objected by a petition that the allowance due from his estate to B had been paid up in advance from October 1870 to November 1871. But the Judge upheld his former order and directed M to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 1,400, the allowance for August and September, and thereafter Rs. 700 month by month. Held that the Judge should merely have said, "I dismiss the application; I decline to set aside the prohibitory order" and that his order directing M to pay the money into Court was one which was not justified by any of the provisions in the Civ. Pro. Code—an order which was illegal and could not be allowed to stand. MAHARAJ COOMAR KISHEN PERTAUB SAHEE v. CHOW-TARINEE SREE BHOWYA DEBYA, 18 W.R. 40.

(13)—Decree—Payment—Judge—Duty.—On money being paid into Court by a judgment-debtor in satisfaction of a decree, the Court is bound to pay it out immediately on the application of the judgment-creditor, and to inform the judgment-creditor, when asked to do so, what is the amount remaining due. LUCHMAN PERSHAD v. (15)—Execution—Payment into Court to prevent arrest—Voluntary payment—Payment to decree-holder—Objection.—Payment of money into Court by a judgment-debtor, under pressure of an application to arrest his person, is not a voluntary payment. [R., 65 P.R. 1870.] Where a judgment-debtor paid into Court, under pressure of an application to arrest his person, a sum of money for the recovery of which the application was made, making at the same time but one objection, namely, that the decree-holder was not entitled to interest, and he did not pay the money to the use of the decree-holder: Held that the judgment-debtor did not thereby debar himself from making any other objection, that might arise and that he was entitled to be heard, and to take whatever objections of law or fact he could before the Court, previous to that money being paid away to the decree-holder. PREONATH MOOKERJEE v. BINADIRAM SEN, 4 B.L.R. App. 25=13 W.R. 29. [R., 65 P.R. 1870.]

(16)—Decree providing for payment of money in 15 days—Party bringing sum into Court within time—Party ordered to pay on adjourned date—No default made by party.—Where a decree provided that a sum of money should be paid within 15 days, and the defendant produced the money in Court within 15 days, but the Court, however, without receiving the money and without rejecting it as improperly tendered, i.e., as not being deposited in the Treasury as required by the Rules of Practice, handed it back to the party with order to produce it again on an adjourned date in Court, held that the Court must in the circumstances, be held responsible for the money not having been paid into the Treasury within the time allowed, and that the party obeyed the instructions of the Court in regard to the money, and must be held to conform to the terms of the decree, so far as the production of the money in Court on first and second occasion went. PUTTA HEGADE v. KUSAMMA HEGADATHI, 8 M.L.J. 168.

(17)—Voluntary payment—Payment under legal necessity.—Where money is voluntarily paid with full knowledge of all the circumstances, the party intending to give up his right cannot, afterwards, bring an action for money had and received; but it is otherwise where, at the time of paying the money, the party gives notice that he intends to resist the claim, and that he yields to it merely for the purpose of relieving himself from the inconvenience of having his goods sold (Valfy v. Manley, 1 Common Bench, 594 quoted by Norman J.). The plaintiff, in order to save his indigo factory from sale in execution of a decree obtained against a third party, paid the money due from the latter and sued for its recovery. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue, as the payment should be held to have been made under a legal necessity and not voluntarily. KAZEE RUM-ZAN ALI v. MAHARAJA SOORUJBHAN, 7 W.R. 403. [R., 12 W.R. 128.]

(18)—Foreclosure—Extension of time for payment by mortgagor—Court closed on due date—Option of mortgagor to deposit in Court or tender mortgage money—Deposit by mortgagor on next open Court-day, sufficiency of, to save estate from foreclosure.—The mortgagee in this case allowed by petition a further term of payment to the mortgagor extending to the 25th November, 1863; if the mortgagor had tendered the mortgage money and interest, to the mortgagee on the 25th November he would have been in time; so he would have been clearly in time if he had taken his money into the Judge's Court on the 25th November. The Judge, however, had closed his Court on that day and extended the holiday until the Monday following. On that Monday, the plaintiff took his money into the Court, and deposited it there for the purpose of preventing a foreclosure of his estate. The question was whether the absence of the Judge from his Court was a sufficient answer to the mortgagor for not having deposited the money in the Judge's Court to prevent foreclosure. The High Court held that, although the mortgagee had extended the time for the payment to the 25th November, the mortgagor was prevented by the closing of the Court—a circumstance to which he was no party, and which was not caused by any default or misconduct on his part—from depositing the money in the Judge's Court on that day. He, therefore, had a reasonable excuse for not doing so, and consequently it would be contrary to any principle of justice, equity and good conscience to allow the mortgagee to take advantage of the mortgagor's inability to deposit the money in Court, and to treat the mortgage as foreclosed. It was further contended in this case that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was unable to deposit the money in Court on that particular day, he was bound to then make a tender to the mortgagee. But the High Court was of opinion that, when the Judge's Court was not open, the mortgagor was not bound to make tender to the mortgagee. The plaintiff had the option, either of depositing the money in the Judge's Court, or of tendering it; and if there was a sufficient excuse for not depositing it in the Judge's Court, he was not bound to tender the money and prove that tender. DABEE RAWOOT v. HEERAMUN MUHATOON, 8 W.R. 223. [F., 7 C. 690; Appl., 5 C. 906=6 C.L.R. 239; R., 1 N.W.P. 81, 14 C. 451, 21 M. 385, 10 C.W.N. 535=3 C.L.J. 339, 6 C.L.J. 176, 7 N.L.R. 176.]

Such evidence should not be treated with more than ordinary caution with which testimony is sifted, when sympathy with one side is to be taken for granted. Proof of pedigree, if it came from strangers, would be of very little value. DEBI PERSHAD CHOWDHRY v. RANI RADHA CHOWDHRAIN, 9 C.W.N. 161, P.C. = 32 C. 84 = 31 I.A. 160 = 8 Sar. 708.

(4)—Probative value of pedigrees.—The plaintiffs gave in evidence at the trial three pedigrees, namely: (1) a pedigree purported to have been signed in 1872 by one Maharaj Bahadur, a son of Sheo Narain, a deceased member of the plaintiff's family, who was however not examined as a witness. According to the evidence of Kalka Parshad, one of the plaintiffs, it was in the handwriting of the former and was obtained by him from Sheo Narain in the years 1894-1896 (the precise date was not fixed) as a statement of family descent, for, the purpose of being given in evidence in certain criminal proceedings; (2) a pedigree purporting to have been filed by Sheo Sahai in 1892 or 1894 in a civil suit concerning lands other than and different from lands sued for in the present action, in which Sheo Sahai was plaintiff and Kesho and others defendants. It was endorsed: "(Signed) Sheo Sahai, plaintiff by the pen of Sunder Lal, Special Agent." At the trial Sunder Lal gave evidence. It was held by the appellate Court in India not to be admissible on the ground that it was made post litem motam because, in a statement made by Massamat Parbati in the absence of Sunder Lal, in a suit instituted by him against her in the year 1891 for cutting down trees in a certain grove in a certain village, which he alleged was a halting-place, she had said that she had no kinship with him, nor was she on visiting and dining terms with him; (3) a pedigree filed in a suit brought for the recovery of the possession of certain lands in which Shanker Sahai (the son of the second defendant) was plaintiff, and Fazal

Husain and others were defendants. On a contention that the three pedigrees were inadmissible: Held (approving the finding of the Subordinate Judge) that the controversy out of which the appeal had arisen was but a stage in the dispute which arose on the death of Mussammat Parbati in 1896; (2) that the pedigrees were not ancient family records handed down from generation to generation and added to, as a member of the family dies or is born, but documents drawn up on a particular occasion for a specific purpose by members of the family, and must accordingly be treated as mere declarations made by the persons who respectively drew up or adopted them; (3) that the first pedigree was adopted by Sheo Narain, was not shown to have been made post litem motam, and was, therefore, admissible; (4) that the second pedigree was on the evidence of Sunder Lal clearly admissible as a declaration made by a deceased member of a family touching the family reputation or tradition on the subject of its descent and it was clear that the controversy to which the statement of Mussammat Parbati referred was not a controversy as to the heirship of Gur Sabai, but referred to an entirely different matter, and in order to make the statement inadmissible on the ground that it was made post litem motam, the same thing must be in controversy before and after the statement was made; (5) that the third pedigree was inadmissible, having been made post litem motam. KALKA PARSHAD v. (4)—Ss. 153, 296—Wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot—Disturbing religious assembly—Vadagalais forming separate Adhyapaka goshti from Tengalais—User of public highway for religious purposes—A decree in a Civil Court declared the exclusive right of Tengalais to the Adhyapakam miras in a certain temple, one of the rights of that miras being declared to be the exclusive right of reciting the usual Tamil Prabandham in a certain temple and the shrines attached thereto. It also declared that the Tengalais were entitled to discharge the duties on all occasions on which the ceremony was performed, as well as at the time of the processions, and at services in the temple and its shrines. The Vadagalais were restrained from interfering with the Tengalais in the recital of the Mantrams and Prabandham, otherwise than as ordinary worshippers. Subsequently, a religious procession was being conducted along a public way. The Tengali goshti was reciting Prabandham in front of the God. Behind the idol, the Vadagalais, at the suggestion of the District Magistrate, formed a separate goshti and recited a different Prabandham. The Vadagalais were asked to refrain from doing so, but refused. They were charged under s. 153 for wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot, and under s. 296 for disturbing a religious assembly. It was found that the Tengalais could not hear what the Vadagalais recited. Held by the Full Bench (Sir Arnold White, C. J., dissenting) that the Vadagalais had not committed any offence either under s. 153 or under s. 296, as the acts of the Vadagalais, were not in contravention of the decree, as they were not acting wantonly, or maliciously or illegally, and as they did not disturb the worship of the Tengalais. [R., 32 M. 478; D., 19 M.L.J. 467, 19 M.L.J. 617.] Per Bhashyam Ayyangar, J.—Within the meaning of s. 296, no assembly can be lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship or religious ceremonies on a highway, unless it is established, or can be reasonably presumed, that the dedication of the highway was subject to such restriction and user. Using the highway as a place of worship is not the legitimate user of it as a highway, i.e., "for the purpose of using it in order to pass and re-pass or for any reasonable or usual mode of using the highway as a highway. Per Subramania Ayyar, J.—Presumably, the object of s. 296 is to secure freedom from molestation when people meet for the performance of acts which ordinarily take place in some quiet spot vested for the time being in the assembly exclusively; and one cannot but feel serious doubts as to whether the section was intended to secure to persons, who choose to engage in worship in an unquiet place open to all the public as a thoroughfare, the immunity from disturbance due to those who meet to worship in a church, a mosque, a temple or other place appropriate for such purpose. There is no peculiar right known to the law as a right of procession; though the law accords to members of a procession no recognition in their collective capacity, yet, the fact that a number of persons use a highway together for some common purpose does not detract in any way from such use being lawful; but the circumstances attending a procession may, in consequence of their being inconsistent with the paramount idea of passage already referred to, be of such a character as to render the user by the processionists otherwise than lawful. Per Benson, J.—No doubt a highway is primarily intended for the use of individuals passing and re-passing along it in pursuit of their ordinary avocation; but in every country, and especially in India, highways have, from time immemorial, been used for the passing and re-passing of processions as well as individuals, and there is nothing illegal in a procession or assembly being engaged in worship while passing along a highway, any more than an individual doing so. No doubt, if a religious or any other procession, interferes with the ordinary use of the highway by persons not members of the procession, it may be prohibited or controlled by the proper authorities, and no Court could convict a person under s. 296 on an allegation that he voluntarily disturbed a religious procession, if he could show that he was only using the road in the ordinary way and with due regard to the right of others equally entitled to use it. But, subject to such control and the rights of others entitled to use the highway, there is nothing illegal in a procession engaging in worship on a highway. VIJAYA-RAGAVACHARIAR v. EMPEROR, 26 M. 554=13 M.L.J. 171, F.B. [R., 32 M. 478; D., 19 M.L.J. 467, 19 M.L.J. 617.]

Where, therefore, a petition is not required by law to be verified and the accused puts the signature of a dead man below the verification in such a petition, he cannot be guilty of making false evidence in respect of that petition. *GANESHI v. and in the application he stated that nothing whatever had been paid in satisfaction of the decree. The Court issued notices to both the judgment-debtors, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. Notice was not served on the judgment-debtor with whom the aforesaid agreement was entered into, it being reported that he was dead. On the application of the other judgment-debtor the ex-parte decree was set aside, and the case was re-tried. The decree-holder was prosecuted and convicted under s. 210 of the Indian Penal Code. Held, that the conviction could not be maintained, as the execution of the decree could not begin until the judgment-debtor had appeared, and had either made no objection or had made an objection which had been formally overruled. The decree-holder did not cause the decree to be executed. The only result of his application was the issue of a notice calling upon the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed. NAURANG v. THE EMPEROR, 88 P.L.R. 1902. Tenancy Act, 1901. One of the witnesses was arrested but rescued by the accused in the present case. The accused also assaulted the officers who had been entrusted with the warrants. It was found that three summonses were originally sent out to the witnesses but none of which was personally served. The serving officer affixed the summonses to the outer doors of the houses of the witnesses. It was found that the Court issuing the warrants did not comply with provisions of s. 82 of the Civ. Pro. Code. But the Court's order for the issue of the warrant shewed that the Court was of opinion that there was due service of the summonses and that the witnesses were keeping out of the way intentionally. The accused were convicted of offences, under ss. 255-B and 353, I.P. Code. Held, under the circumstances, that (1) the warrants were not absolutely illegal and (2) in any case the accused were guilty of the offence under s. 353, since the officers entrusted with the warrants were acting in execution of their duty. The accused, however, claimed a right to the bamboos for a long time past. He said that his grandfather planted them as a hedge and that he had long been enjoying them. The Revenue authorities did not admit the claim, but, being of opinion that the bamboos were within the limits of the Government poramboke, took possession of the land and informed the accused that they had done so. The accused, however, after this, cut and removed some of the bamboos alleging that they belonged to him. Held, that the Head Assistant Magistrate was wrong in saying that "ownership has little to do with cases of theft, where possession is only the point at issue." The Revenue authorities had no right to oust the accused from possession. Their position in regard to these matters is the same as that of any private person. It is the province of the Civil Courts to decide questions of ownership of land between Government and private persons just as much as between two private persons. If Government Officers take summary possession of a man's land otherwise than under the Land Acquisition Act or other legal authority, his rights are no more affected by such illegal action than they would be by the illegal seizure of his land by a private person. In such a case, the Revenue Officers are mere trespassers and there is nothing dishonest in the owner re-taking possession of his property. The questions to be determined in this case were (1) whether the bamboos did, in fact, belong to accused or Government; (2) whether, if they did not belong to the accused, he bona fide believed that they did. Order of Head Assistant Magistrate, confirming conviction, set aside and appeal ordered to be disposed of in the light of the above observations, after allowing the accused to adduce further evidence, if necessary. In execution of a decree obtained by the managers in a suit brought by them in the name of the petitioners, a certain under-tenure was sold for Rs. 3,000. The judgment-debtor arranged with the petitioners that on payment of Rs. 1,000, the sale should be set aside, and accordingly paid that sum into Court, and an application was made by the petitioners to draw out the money upon which no order was made. They were thereupon convicted, at the instance of the managers, of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 422, I.P.C. Held that the application to obtain the money paid into Court might have been a breach of their contract with the mortgagors, but such conduct cannot necessarily be regarded as dishonest or fraudulent so as to render the petitioners liable to punishment, their attempt to get the money being more to put an end to the management than to prevent the money from being available to the payment of their debt under the mortgage. *HARA KUMARI CHAUDHURANI v. (53)—S. 447—Actual possession given to auction-purchaser in execution under s. 318, Civ. Pro. Code—Forcible entry and assault by sub-tenants of judgment-debtors.—The right, title and interest of certain judgment-debtors in an agricultural holding were sold in execution of a money-decree against them and the auction-purchaser was put in actual possession of the lands sold, under s. 318, Civ. Pro. Code, without any opposition. The auction-purchaser also exercised acts of possession over the land by tilling and manuring the same. Thereafter, the accused, alleging themselves to be sub-tenants of the judgment-debtors under a lease-deed prior in date to the purchaser obtaining possession, forcibly entered upon the land, assaulted the purchaser's men, who were engaged on the lands and turned them out of possession. Held, the accused were guilty of an offence under s. 447 of the Penal Code; the accused must establish their rights, whatever they might be, against the auction-purchaser in a Civil Court; they ought not to take the law into their own hands. *KAILASH GHOSE v. See INTEREST—STIPULATION IN THE NATURE OF PENALTY.

(1)—Doctrine of penalty—Inapplicable to consent decrees.—The doctrine of penalties is inapplicable to any stipulation contained in a decree giving effect to the compromise of a suit. (1 B. 73, R.) In the present case, a decree was made by consent of the parties. It created a perpetual tenancy, but contained a stipulation for the plaintiff's re-entry if the property was alienated or if the defendant failed to pay rent. The plaintiff sought to eject on failure by defendants to pay rent. It was contended by the defendants that the stipulation in the decree being penal was not enforceable. Held that the contention of the defendant was not maintainable, because the doctrine of penalty had no application to decree of Court. SHIRAKULI TINNAPPA HEGDA v. MAHABLYA, 10 B. 435. [Overruled, 31 B. 15 = 8 Bom. L.R. 813 = 1 M.L.T. 370, F.B.; Not F., 24 M. 265.]

(2)—Doctrine of penalty—Applicability to decrees of Court.—“The principles which govern the enforcement of contracts and their modification, when justice requires it, do not apply to decrees which, as they are framed, embody and express such justice as the Court is capable of conceiving and administering. The admission of a power to vary the requirements of a decree once passed would introduce uncertainty and confusion. No one's rights would, at any stage, be so established that they could be depended on, and the Courts would be overwhelmed with applications for the modification, on equitable principles, of orders made on a full consideration of the cases which they were meant to terminate. It is obvious that such a state of things would not be far removed from a judicial chaos." (Per West, J.) "And as ordinary decrees are thus unchangeable, so are those in which, through a special provision for the convenience of parties, their own disposals of their disputes are embodied. The doctrine of penalties is not applicable to such a class of cases; and those who, with their eyes open, have made alternative engagements and invited alternative orders of the Court must, if they fail to perform the one, perform the other, however greatly severe its terms may be." BALPRASAD v. DHARNIDHAR SAKHARAM, 10 B. 437, Note. [F., 10 B. 435; Expl., 31 B. 15=8 Bom. L. R. 813=1 M.L.T. 370; R., 15 A. 232.]

(3)—Undertaking by third person on behalf of obligor to perform engagement—Technicalities of English law of penalties if applicable.—Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down in this case that where a person, being himself under no liability on account of another person, binds himself in a penalty for the due performance of the engagement, the nice technicalities of the English law of penalties should not be applied, but the agreement between the parties must be looked to with a view to see what the real intention was. In the result, their Lordships were satisfied that there was a bona fide endeavour on the part of the respondent fairly to perform his engagement, and that there was much reason to believe, with some of the Judges in the Court below, that there was desire on the part of the appellant to throw obstacles in the way of the performance, in order to obtain payment of the penalty which he expected would be the consequence of non-performance, and consequently recommended the dismissal of the appeal with costs. RAM GOPAL MOOKERJEE v. MASSEYK, 2 W.R. 43, P.C.=8 M.I.A. 239. [R., 2 Agra 1.]

(4)—Contract—Penalty—Liquidated damages—Distinction pointed out.—The question in this case was whether plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant Rs. 500 which he had agreed to pay the plaintiff in the event of the non-performance of his agreement to sell a plot of land to plaintiff. The plaintiff had stipulated to receive and the defendant intended to give the plaintiff Rs. 500 in the event of a breach of the recorded agreement. Plaintiff was therefore held entitled to Rs. 500, as it must be considered to be liquidated damages. If the damages accruing from a breach of contract are of uncertain nature and the parties chose to assess and fix them beforehand by agreement amongst themselves, and the amount agreed upon is no more than what may be a fair and reasonable measure of damages, it is not a penalty and no relief will be granted from payment of it. JOTI MULL v. MEHTAB SINGH, 26 P.R. 1871.

plaintiff agreed to register the sale-deed when he should receive the balance of purchase money, and if he refused to write and attest the deed of sale or to make dakhil kharij, he should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 500 by way of damages. Plaintiff duly paid the balance of the purchase-money. Defendant refused, without sufficient reason, to make dakhil kharij as agreed upon. Hence this suit by plaintiff to recover Rs. 500 as damages. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the full amount of Rs. 500 as the amount was liquidated damages and not mentioned by way of penalty only, inasmuch as the parties fixed the sum as estimated damages which were to be paid in the event of the non-performance of either condition, and did not intend that the actual loss that might accrue should be ascertained after breach of contract, and also because the estimate could not be considered exorbitant. TELU MALL v. MOHKAMKHAN, 69 P.R. 1873.

(6)—Bond—Provision for enhanced rate of interest—Penalty—Indian Contract Act, s. 74.—A provision for payment of a heavy rate of interest in default of the fulfilment of the terms of a bond is not a penalty or naming a "fixed sum" within the meaning of s. 74 of the Contract Act, and the Court is bound, under Act XXVIII of 1855, to adjudge interest at the stipulated rate, provided there has been no deception or fraud and the parties contract on equal terms with each other. M borrowed a certain sum from plaintiff for 6 months at 3 per cent. per mensem, and executed a bond which provided that if the money were not repaid within 6 months, interest should be paid on the total amount of principal and interest at 10 per cent. per mensem. The loan was not repaid in time. Subsequently M paid interest for 2 months at 10 per cent. In a suit then brought on the bond for balance of principal and interest, held that the provision for payment of enhanced rate of interest was not a penalty, that the parties really agree that interest at 10 per cent. should be paid, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover interest at that rate according to the terms of the bond. TEK CHAND v. MORICE, 5 P.R. 1877. [R., 25 P.R. 1879, 150 P.R. 1883, F.B.; D., 51 P.R. 1879.]

(4)—Act VI of 1849, s. 2—Pension in lieu of Saranjam—Assignment—Compromise.—A pension was granted by Government to the defendant in lieu of a Saranjam held by his grandfather. Subsequently a compromise was made of the claim which the plaintiff had to a share of the pension, by which the defendant agreed to pay them a certain proportion thereof yearly. Held that, as this was not a pension granted in "consideration of past service and present infirmities or old age," it did not come within the terms of s. 2 of Act VI of 1849 and that the agreement was therefore valid. *MADHAVARAV T. Peon.

(1)—Act V of 1863 (B.C.) —Appointment of peons—Authority of Nazir.—By the Bengal Act V of 1863, the appointment of peons in the Civil Court is vested in the Nazir, subject to the approval of the Judge, by whatever title he be designated; and no superior authority whatever is competent to control such appointments, or to restrict the choice of the Nazir in anyway whatever, the intention of the framers of the Act being manifestly that the selection of proper agents should rest with the person under whose direction they are to act. GOOROO DYAL SINGH, PETITIONER, 9 W.R. 333.

(2)—Peons in Munsiff's Court, appointment of—Interference by Judge—Act V (B.C.) of 1863, s. 3.—Under s. 3 of Act V of 1863 (B.C.) peons in a Civil Court are appointed by the Nazir of the Court, subject to the approval of the Court, i.e., of the presiding officer. The Act is not superseded by the provisions of s. 9 of Act XVI of 1868, and a Judge is in error in interfering with the appointment of peons in a Munsiff's Court, made and approved of by the Munsiff under the provisions of s. 3 of Act V of 1863. IN THE MATTER OF SOMEROOD-DEEN, 11 W.R. 169.

They do not refer to settlements subsequently made. SHEOBURN LAL v. RAM PURTAB SINGH, 3 W.R. Act X Rul., 20. demand, and does not otherwise alter the incidents of the estates either in regard to their mode of descent or partibility as evidenced by family usage. NARAYANA v. CHENGALAMMA, 10 M. 1.

(3)—Permanent Settlement Regulations of Bengal, effect of.—By the Permanent Settlement Regulations, Government withdrew its sovereign right to vary the assessments as regards the estates that came within the scope of the permanent settlement. The Regulations do not go further, and do not certainly constitute a contractual relationship between the Government and the owners of permanently-settled estates, or any such relationship as would debar Government from claiming and exercising against those owners the rights of an ordinary proprietor. KRISTO MONI GUPTA v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, 3 C.W.N. 99.

(4)—Date of Permanent Settlement in Jessore.—The date of Permanent Settlement in Jessore was the 11th April 1870 BABOO HURONATH ROY v. AMEER BISWAS, 1 W.R. 230.

(5)—Permanent Settlement, meaning of—Act X of 1859.—The words “Permanent Settlement” referred to in Act X of 1859, refer to the Permanent Settlement which was sanctioned in the year 1793. SHEOBURN LAL v. RAM PURTAB SINGH, 3 W.R. Act X Rul., 20.

(6)—“Time of Permanent Settlement”—Act X of 1859.—“The time of the Permanent Settlement” mentioned in ss. 3 and 4, Act X of 1859, was held to be the date of the Permanent Settlement of the Provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa referred to in Regulation I, 1793, and not the date of the actual settlement of a particular zemindar, with the owner thereof. MUSSAMUT PARAN BEBEE v. LEDEE NAZIR ALLY KHAN, W.R. 1864, Act X Rul., 71.

(7)—Reg. XXV of 1802—Misdescription in Settlement papers—No forfeiture of rights—Grant made before permanent settlement—Objections.—It cannot be said that, as a matter of law and of right, the tenants have forfeited the interest which they would otherwise have in their lands by reason of the misdescription of the village in the Settlement papers. Reg. XXV of 1802 does not contain anything which says that if the parties, by carelessness or by accident, allow their village to be misdescribed, they are to forfeit their rights. Grants made by a zamindar before the estate was permanently settled, and became subject to the rules which may have been laid down in the Madras Regulations as to subsequent alienations, are binding on the successors of the grantor. *STRI RAJA VYRICHERALA RAJA BAHADOOR v. (9)—Claim as heir to invalid jagheerdar—Reg. I of 1804, Reg. I of 1793.—The plaintiff claimed as heir to an invalid jagheerdar whose case came within the provisions of Regulation I of 1804. It was held that she could not be allowed to plead the provisions of Reg. I of 1793 which provided for a right of a recusant to apply for a permanent settlement after the expiration of the period or the periods of one or more intervening temporary settlements. Her case was to be dealt with as under Reg. I of 1804 and not as subject to the provisions of Reg. I of 1793, which latter law applies only to the proprietor or heir of the proprietor of an estate or talook paying revenue to Government, in respect of which the proprietors may have refused to settle when the Permanent Settlement was offered before and not to these jagheerdars. MUSSAMUT SANOO v. THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, 6 W.R. 311.

(10)—Uniform rate of rent for 20 years, presumption arising from, of holding from Permanent Settlement—Rebuttal of presumption.—In this suit for enhancement, it was found that the defendant had paid an unvarying rent for 20 years, and that plaintiff, not having proved any earlier variation or shewn when the tenure was created, the presumption of holding from the time of Permanent Settlement arose. The plaintiff however pointed out an admission made by the defendant in his examination to the effect that the tenure was acquired by his father from the landlord 30 or 35 years previously; and the High Court held that such admission was sufficient to rebut the presumption of holding from the Permanent Settlement, and nothing to the contrary having been shown, the case was remanded for the purpose of passing a fresh decision with reference to the said admission of the defendant. MUGNO MOYEE DEBIA v. Personal Liability.

(1)—Contract by guardian on behalf of a minor—Personal liability of the minor, extent of.—Plaintiff's case in the Court of first instance was that the defendant U sent her servant, the defendant S, to plaintiff's shop and borrowed money on account of her minor son, the defendant R. The Munsiff decreed against the minor and his mother, but, on appeal, the District Judge exonerated the minor on the ground that the debts for the discharge of which the money was borrowed were not proved to be such as were binding on the minor. On the present petition put in by the plaintiff to revise the said order discharging the minor from the suit held, that the suit as against the minor must fail for the simple reason that a minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by a guardian which do not purport to bind the estate. It would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward and there is not in Indian Law any rule which gives a Guardian and Manager greater power to so bind the infant than exists in English Law. (14 I.A. 89, R.) So in claims for money borrowed on behalf of and expended on necessities for a minor he might be liable for the debt, but he would not be so liable by reason of the contract binding him personally. His liability would have to be based on the ground that there was a pre-existing liability on his part at the time when the guardian entered into the contract on his behalf. *TUKARAM MANAJI DHANGAR v. —1.—General.

(1)—Petition sent by post—Not a substitute for a plaint—Madras Act, VIII of 1865, s. 50.—A petition sent by post is not a substitute for the presentation of a plaint as required by s. 50 of Madras Act VIII of 1865. MOPARTI PITCHI NAIDU v. VUPPALA KONDAMMA, 6 M.H.C. 136. [Appr., 8 M. 411; R., 7 M.H.C. 387.]

(2)—Punjab Government Notification No. 2357—Written authority necessary—Presentation of plaint.—The authority given to a recognised agent under cl. (d), Punjab Government Notification, No. 2357 (dated 3rd October 1877) to present the plaint in a suit need not be in writing. SIRDAR HARCHARAN DAS v. LACHMI SAHAI, 191 P.R. 1883. (9 P.R. 1878, F.)

(3)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 54—Plaint containing alternative prayer—Duty of Court.—Plaintiff sued to redeem a kanom of 1858 and paid Court-fees on the kanom amount. The plaint further stated that the defendants were setting up a renewed kanom of 1874 for an enhanced amount which was not binding upon the plaintiff and that, if the Court were to find the renewed kanom valid, plaintiff might be allowed to redeem on the footing of that renewed kanom. The District Munsiff decreed the suit on the footing of the kanom of 1858. The District Judge on appeal held that the renewed kanom of 1874 was binding on the plaintiff and dismissed the suit as the plaintiff had not paid Court-fees on the alternative relief. Held that the District Judge was wrong in dismissing the suit, that he might have given the plaintiff time to pay the difference as required by s. 54, Civ. Pro. Code, and that, except for that section, there was no provision of law entitling the District Judge to dismiss the suit unconditionally on account of the defective Court-fee stamp. SUBRAHMANIA PATTAR v. VALIA NAYAR, 8 M.L.J. 187.

(4)—Relinquishment of portion of claim—Effect.—The statement in the plaint was "I claim Rs. 1,191 as due to me, but I shall be satisfied with a decree for Rs. 700." Held that, though his relinquishment of Rs. 491 was based on the supposition that Rs. 1,191 was due to him, he ought not to be tied down to such relinquishment, when, as a matter of fact, what is found due to him is less than Rs. 1,191, provided he does not get more than Rs. 700 for which he asked for a decree. SINNATHAMBI ROWTHER v. S. M. SELLAM CHETTI, 8 M.L.T. 436 = 8 Ind. Cas. 943.

(5)—Practice—Grounds not taken in plaint—Relief not to be granted on.—No relief can be granted on grounds not taken in the plaint. MUHAMMAD ALADAT KHAN v. NARPAT, A.W.N. 1887, 130.

(6)—Written statement—Set-off—Plaint—Stamp duty.—A written statement containing a claim of set-off must be regarded as a plaint in regard to such set-off, and should be stamped accordingly. CHENNAPPA v. RAGHUNATHA, 15 M. 29 = 1 M.L.J. 598.

(7)—Dismissal in default—Case heard—Absence of plaintiff to hear judgment—Effect of—Plaint not signed by plaintiff—Procedure.—Held, that, where a case is heard and a certain amount of discussion has taken place in presence of the parties and judgment is deferred, a Court is not justified in dismissing the suit in default, if the plaintiff is absent when the case is called on for delivery of judgment. Held, also that, where a plaintiff omits to sign the plaint, but signs only the verification, the plaint ought to be returned for amendment, or it should be amended in open Court, but cannot be rejected. NAND LAL v. SHANKRU, 165 P.W.R. 1911. (22 A. 55, F.)

(8)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 435—Unincorporated society, suit not maintainable by, in the name of officer or agent.—Plaintiffs, described in the plaint as the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of New York in America through the Rev. W.F. Johnson, Principal Officer, sued to eject the defendant from certain land. The claim as brought was decreed by the lower Appellate Court, but the contention raised by the defendant on second appeal was upheld to the effect that the said Board of Foreign Missions was not a corporation authorised to sue and be sued in the name of an officer within the meaning of s. 435 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Moreover, there was nothing in the plaint to show that the person who signed it as such officer was a member of that Board or that he set up a possessory title on his own behalf, and the suit was therefore not maintainable in the shape in which it was brought by the plaintiff YUSUF BEG v. THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS, 16 A. 420 = A.W.N. 1894, 154. (A.W.N. 1882, 132, A.W.N. 1887, 57, D.) [F., 20 A. 167; R., 30 C. 103]

(9)—Plaint—Cause of action—Railway—Damage.—Where the plaintiff alleged that the Railway which was in plaintiff's possession has been seriously damaged by water escaping from the defendant's land in consequence of the bursting of a tank which was his property and at the time of bursting was under his control, but the plaintiff did not contain any direct allegation of negligence on the defendant's part, held, that the plaintiff disclosed a cause of action, and that the case stated in the plaintiff called for an answer on the part of the defendant. THE MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY v. —2.—Admission of Plaint.

(1)—Civil Procedure Code, s. 57—Plaint presented in wrong Court.—In all cases where no option as to the selection of the Court is allowed by law to the plaintiff, a plaint presented in a wrong Court must be returned for presentation in the proper Court. MUTTIRULANDI v. KOTTAYAN, 10 M. 211. [R., 23 B. 679.]

(2)—Presentation to Munsarim and not to Judge.—The presentation of the application to the munsarim of the District Court instead of to the Judge, was held to be improper. MUNRO v. THE CAWNPORE MUNICIPAL BOARD, 12 A. 57 = A.W.N. 1889, 197.

(3)—Subordinate Judge's Court, to which plaint, presentable, closed temporarily—Plaint presented to District Court—Plaint not presented to Court of first instance.—Owing to the temporary closing of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff presented his plaint to the District Court. Held, that the District Court was not a Court of the first instance competent to receive such plaint. RAMAYA v. MUHAMADBHAI, 10 B.H.C. 495. (5 B.H.C. A.C. 117, Overruled; 2 B.H.C. A.C. 42, F.)

any purpose whatever and not a proper presentation under explanation to s. 5 of the Limitation Act. PARTAB SINGH v. KISHEN DAYAL, 130 P. R. 1890. [R., 123 P. R. 1907 = 3 M. L. T. 63 = 82 P. W. R. 1907.]

(5)—Close holiday—Plaint, presentation of—Legality.—There is no reason why a plaint should not be received and admitted by a Moonsiff on a Sunday or other holiday. UNUNTO RAM CHATTERJEE v. PROTAB CHUNDER SHIROMONEE, 16 W. R. 230. (11 W. R. 538 and 3 W. R. S. C. 6.) [R., 29 A. 562 = A. W. N. 1907, 168, 22 M. L. J. 212 = M. W. N. 1912, 65.]

(6)—Filing of supplemental plaint.—A Judge has no authority to allow a plaintiff to file a supplemental plaint after the Ameen's report has been given in. CHUNDER SEKUR DEB ROY KUT v. WOOMA NATH SARMA, 1 W. R. 278.

(7)—Presentation of plaint or petition, duty of Court to note date of.—If the rule laid down in the Sudder Court's Circular Order of 29th July 1859, in respect of plaints, viz., that, upon a plaint being presented, the Judge should cause the date of presentation to be noted on the petition, be applied by the Courts to all applications made to them, much trouble and annoyance would be saved to parties having business to transact. SREENATH CHURN NUNDEE v. MOYNA KOOMAREE BEEBEE, 3 W. R. Mis. 29.

(8)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 32—No cause of action—Rejection of plaint—Appeal—Admission of plaint—Right of defendant.—In this case, a plaint which had been rejected was admitted on appeal, the defendant having been given the liberty, if so advised, to apply to have it taken off the file. DORAB ALLY KHAN v. KHAJAH MOHEEOODEEN, 19 W. R. 16.

—3.—Amendment of Plaint.

See CIV. PRO. CODE, 1908, O. VI, r. 17.

See LIMITATION ACT, 1908, S. 3.

(1)—Amendment of plaint.—The Legislature intended the Court to have power to make all such amendments first in the plaint, and afterwards in the issues—the two essential parts of what are commonly termed the pleadings—as might in any case be necessary under the prescribed practice in order to bring about a fair and proper trial of the matter which the plaintiff came into Court to have tried. The Court has power, after the plaint has been filed and the summons served, on the application of the plaintiff himself, to amend the plaint, if an amendment be needed in order to have it more correctly set out the plaintiff's case and the right of suit, but the Court will not allow this to be done to the detriment of defendant. GOBIND CHANDRA DUTT v. GANGA DHYE AND NALIT MOHAN DAS v. GANGA DHYE, 7 B. L. R. 333. [R., 7 B. L. R. App. 65].

(2)—Amendment of—When allowable.—Where, by the proposed amendment, no new claim is introduced, nor a claim founded on a new cause of action and the opposite party is in no way prejudiced, an amendment of the plaint may be allowed. RAJA PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE v. NARENDRA NATH MUKERJEE, 9 C. W. N. 421 = 32 C. 582.

(3)—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed.—As a general rule, the plaintiff may be permitted even on appeal to amend the plaint, when he had framed it bona fide under a mistake or erroneous advice, and the other party could be adequately compensated by an award of costs; but it must be observed that when such amendment might possibly create a necessity for fresh written statements and for fresh issues, and practically amount to a trial de novo from the commencement, it is much more convenient to leave the plaintiff to the liberty of maintaining a separate suit, so that the opposite party might in no way be prejudiced in his defence, or harassed with a second trial of the same suit. NARAYANA v. SHAN KUNNI, 15 M. 255. [R., 28 B. 332.]

(4)—Amendment of plaint, when allowable.—The plaintiff may be allowed to amend his case at any stage of suit before final decision provided it does not inflict any hardship on the defendant, and if a new suit of the plaintiff, the amendment being disallowed, should be open to the objection of limitation. RAMDYAL KHAN v. AJOODHIA RAM KHAN, 2 C. 1 = 25 W. R. 425. [F., 22 C. 692.]

(5)—Rejection of plaint for prolixity—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 29.—If a plaint not only asks for relief which a Court can afford, but seeks to open up matters already adjudicated upon in another suit, the Judge (instead of rejecting the plaint for prolixity under s. 29) should entertain the suit and adjudicate upon the matters not adjudicated upon in the former suit, amending the plaint by striking out the issues relating to the matters adjudicated upon. ROSUN JEHAN v. ENEYUT HOSSEIN, W. R. F. B. 41 = Marsh, 127 = 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 44 = 1 Hay 269.

(6)—Time for amending plaint—Extension—Court's power.—The Civ. Pro. Code does not prohibit the Court from extending the time originally granted for amending the plaint. CHANDA SINGH v. ISHAR SINGH, 113 P. R. 1894. [R., 78 P. R. 1909.]

(7)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 2.—The plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint, complying with the provision of s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, by stating when his cause of action accrued, and, if it accrued beyond the period ordinarily allowed for commencing such suit, by stating the ground on which he claimed exemption. HEERA MONEE DABEE v. granted under s. 21 of Act XI of 1865, the Judge of the Small Cause Court is competent to permit the plaint to be amended at the second trial under the same circumstances under which amendment of plaint would have been allowable at the original trial. MEHNDU KHAN v. CHUNNU KHAN, 110 P.R. 1882. (5 B. 609, R. & Appr.) [R., 43 P.R. 1885]

(9)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 53—Amendment of plaint.—Where the objection, that a suit for a mere declaration of title is not maintainable, is not taken in the Court of first instance, the plaintiff may be allowed on appeal to pay additional stamp duty and to amend the plaint so as to include a prayer for consequential relief. ABDUL KADAR v. MOHAMMAD, 15 M. 15. [R., 14 M.L.J. 290, 5 Bom. L.R. 329, 28 B. 332, 1 C.L.J. 73, 135 P.R. 1906=117 P.L.R. 1903; D., 15 M. 255.]

(10)—Plaint, amendment of—Practice—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 53.—The plaintiffs in this suit originally claimed a declaration of their right to a three-quarters share of a garden. Two or three days after the date fixed for the first hearing, the plaintiffs caused their plaints to be amended by the addition of a prayer for possession. Held, that the plaintiffs could do so. SHEONARAIN v. NAGO, A.W.N. 1884, 26.

(11)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53—Amendment of plaint—Practice.—Though, ordinarily speaking, when a plaintiff is permitted to amend his plaint such amendment should be made upon the face of the plaint already before the Court, yet an amendment, if not otherwise defective, will not be a bad amendment merely by reason of its being written on a separate sheet of paper. KHAYALI RAM v. BHUP SINGH, A.W.N. 1893, 225.

(12)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53 — Amendment of plaint.—A Court has no power under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure to amend or allow the would-be plaintiff to amend a plaint which, by reason of its having been signed by an unauthorized person, is ab initio invalid. KATE-SAR NATH v. AGGYAM, A.W.N. 1894, 95. [Cons., 22 A. 55.]

(13)—Cause of action—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 43, 53.—After the institution of a suit, the plaint can be allowed to be amended so as to enable the plaintiff to fulfil the provisions of s. 43 and include the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action. DENI PRASAD v. SHAMBHU NATH, A.W.N. 1885, 167.

(13-a)—Plaint not disclosing cause of action—Proper procedure—Return of plaint—S. 32, Civ. Pro. Code.—If a plaint did not sufficiently disclose the cause of action, the proper course for the Court was, not to dismiss the suit altogether, but to reject and return the plaint to the plaintiff, or, more properly still, to allow it to be amended under s. 32 of the Civ. Pro. Code; and where this was not allowed, the plaintiff was at liberty to prove any cause of action which was not inconsistent with the plaint. LUCKHEE PREA DEBIA v. BRINDABUN DEY, 12 W.R. 313.

(14)—S. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Plaint—Amendment.—Where an incorrect statement is made in the plaint without any fraudulent intention, and without any intention to overreach the other party, then, if the latter cannot suffer any hardship by an amendment, and if the proposed amendment is not likely to result in the inclusion of any new claim barred by limitation at the date of the proposed amendment, the plaint may be allowed to be amended. (Cropper v. Smith, 26 Ch. D. 700, 2 C. 1, F.; Weldon v. Neal, 19 Q.B.D. 394, Kurtz v. Spence, 36 Ch. D. 770, R.) DHANI RAM SAHA v. BHAGIRATH SHAHA, 22 C. 692. (15)—Ss. 42, 45, 53, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Plaint—Amendment.—Regarding amendment of plaint, s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, should be read particularly with ss. 42 and 45 of the Code. Reading ss. 42 and 45 of the Code, the intention of the Legislature is that, as far as possible, all matters in dispute between the parties, relating to the same transaction, should be disposed of in the same suit. The proviso to s. 53 is not intended to interfere with this. [Nelson v. Stocker (1859, De. Gex. and J. 458), per Turner, L.J., applied]. SARAL CHAND MITTER v. (16)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 53—Suitor not entitled as of right to amendment of plaint—Discretion of Court.—The power to get a plaint amended is subject under s. 53 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to the discretion of the Judge, and is not claimable as a right of the suitor in all circumstances. To be successful in an application for amendment of his plaint it is not enough for the plaintiff merely to show that the amendment sought by him cannot have the effect of changing the character of the suit. TAPIRAM v. SADU, 21 B. 570. [D., 57 P.R. 1904.]

(17)—Plaint—Court's powers of amendment.—The Court has ample power to amend the plaint so long as it does not substitute an entirely new cause of action. KAUR SEIN v. MUSSUMAT SAMIRO, 66 P.R. 1873.

(18)—Amendment of plaint—Change introduced by the new Code—Court's extended powers—Plaintiff's neglect to be remedied with sufficient compensation to defendant.—S. 53 of the old Civ. Pro. Code, expressly provided that a plaint should not be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. That limitation on the Court's power has been omitted from O. VI, r. 17, of the new Code. The cases with regard to amendment must be regarded as falling under two heads,—first, those in which the amendment is sought to be made at the hearing of the suit, and secondly, those in which it is sought to be made before such hearing, or in which, if the suit were called on for hearing it, were intended to grant an adjournment to enable the defendants to meet the new case set up. Plaintiff made an application for leave to amend the first paragraph of the plaint, which, as originally framed, alleged that, by a written agreement of the 21st December 1909, the plaintiff agreed to advance money to first defendant from time to time on the security of goods to be deposited by way of pledge for such advances and that promissory notes were to be executed. It was clear from the agreement relied on that its effect only related to the first of the advances, and the plaintiff now sought to set up a succession of advances made on oral agreements. The question was whether such an amendment should be allowed: Held, that the original framing of the plaint was a pure error due to neglect, and that "it was not fraudulent or intended to overreach," nor could it be said to be such an error that the other side could not be compensated in costs. Held, therefore, that the proper course to take, under the circumstances, was to allow the amendment and to compensate the defendants as far as possible for loss occasioned to them by all steps taken in the action up to the present date having become infructuous. KASTURCHAND v. MAUNG BATHAW, 11 Ind. Cas. 856.

(19)—Plaint, when defective to be amended.—After a plaint is admitted and registered, if it is found to be wanting in precision or defective in form, the Court should direct its amendment and not reject it. PITAMBUR MOOKERJEE v. HUREE NARAIN THAKOOR, W R. 1864, 50.

(20)—Irregular petition — Amendment.—A petition, which is an irregular or incomplete plaint, may be allowed to be amended, and when that is done, it relates back to the date on which the original petition was presented. An irregular joint plaint, by several tenants to contest a dicalaint by their landlord, may be allowed, to be amended into several plaints by a Revenue Court. MANAPPA v. DASINANI, 7 M. 138.

(21)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 26, 29, 31, 139, 141—Lower Courts, Power of.—The power of the Lower Courts to amend a plaint extends by a viva voce examination to the elucidation of what is ambiguous in the claims of the contending parties, to the amendment of what is erroneous and the supplying what is defective, but not to the conversion of a suit of one character into another inconsistent with, and opposed to it, e.g., of a suit for possession with mesne profits into a suit for resumption. GOBINDO MAHAPATRO v. Plaint—continued.—3.—Amendment of Plaint—continued.

Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17.—The Court's power to amend depends upon order VI, rule 17 of the Code, which, for the present purpose, is identical with O. XXVIII, r. 1 of the English Rules. The plaintiff originally sued for the price of goods sold and delivered, and for interest on such price. In January last, he applied for leave to amend his plaint. His claim as amended was for nearly Rs. 12 000, as price of goods sold and delivered, Rs. 450 as interest and Rs. 2,800 loss sustained by him on the re-sale of goods of which the defendant had failed to take delivery. But for a clerical error in calculation in the first plaint, the amount claimed for goods sold and delivered with interest would have been identical with the total amount claimed in the second plaint. The defendant objected to this plaint. Held, that the vast bulk of the claim remained unaltered and the part that was altered related to the same contract and was similar in amount to the part now given up; that the claim as originally framed was due purely to an oversight and was not fraudulent or intended to overreach, and consequently the amendment should be allowed. (19 C. 372, F.) The Courts in England do not refuse to grant an amendment simply because it introduces a new case, though they do so where this amendment would change the action into one of a substantially different character which would more conveniently be the subject of a fresh action. If the amendment altered the nature of the case, it should be refused, no matter at what stage it was sought to be made. STEEL BROTHERS AND CO., LD. v. CASSIMJI AHMED MADHA, 11 Ind. Cas. 827.

(23)—Plaint—Omission to ask for proper reliefs—Facts proved for grant of proper reliefs—Dismissal of suit not proper—Amendment allowed.—Where a plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that he misconceived the appropriate reliefs to which he was entitled, held, that he ought to be allowed to amend his plaint by inserting a prayer for proper reliefs, if such reliefs are those that could be granted on the facts proved. SHEIK ABDUL KADIR SAHIB v. BANGARUSWAMI NAICKEN, 9 M.L. T. 429.

(24)—Plaint, construction of.—If there is any doubt as to the precise meaning of a plaint in a declaratory suit, whether the suit was for a declaratory decree only, or also for consequential relief, the plaint ought not to be rejected, but should be returned for amendment. PIR MAHOMED v. GHULAM HYDER, 42 P.R. 1874.

(25)—Pleadings—Amendment of plaint or issues—Mistake.—It is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plaint or the issues, and to allow it to be tried. Where the omission of an alternative claim in the plaint appears to have been from inadvertence or by mistake, it would be proper to allow amendment. But where there is reason for thinking that the omission was deliberate, it would generally not be proper. LUKEE KENTO DASS CHOWDHRY v. SUMEERUDDI LUSKER, 13 B.L.R. 243, F.B = 21 W.R. 208. [R., 10 B. 451, 22 C. 752, 10 C.L.J. 538 = 6 M.L.T. 255 = 3 Ind. Cas. 346.]

(26)—Act VIII of 1869 (B.C.), s. 30—Suit brought under, by mistake—Amendment.—A suit erroneously brought under s. 30, Act VIII of 1869 (B.C.) must be allowed to be amended, on the application of the plaintiff, and not dismissed. In the matter of GOBIND CHUNDER BOSE v. BYKUNTATH GHOSE, 19 W.R. 61.

(27)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1908—O. VII, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Deliberately deferred till decision of another suit—Not bona fide mistake.—Although r. 17 of O. VII is in wider terms than s. 53 of the old Code, amendments are still to be made on such terms as may be just, and this cannot mean that they may be allowed, so as to defeat the object of limitation and of the rules as to the framing of suits. Thus generally an amendment should not be allowed, save when the plaintiff by some mistake or misapprehension has failed to put things properly before the Court. An amendment will not be allowed where the amendment was deliberately not sought to be made and was deferred till the failure of another suit made it clear to the plaintiff that without amendment he had no chance of obtaining the relief he desired. MAUNG THAN DAING v. U. THE, 8 Ind. Cas. 600.

(28)—Incorrect statement of claim—Amendment—Whether allowed—Ss. 18, 19, 49—Lease for one year—Option of renewal—Registration—Unregistered lease—Whether admissible to prove claim to moveables.—A party must be limited to the case he puts forward in his plaint and if he fails to prove his case as originally laid, he must not be allowed to succeed. But a plaintiff who has not put forward an alternative case may state his case correctly by amending the plaint, if he had based his claim on wrong grounds from misinformation, ignorance of law or fact, mistake or misconstruction of documents. A lease for one year certain with the option of renewal at the will of landlord is one for one year only and does not require registration. But if the term is extensible at the option of the tenant, it requires registration. A lease compulsorily registrable could not if unregistered, be received in evidence under s. 49. The said lease is not even admissible to prove a claim relating to compensation in respect of moveable property contained in the house leased if the document is indivisible and discloses one transaction only. POOL v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 68 P.R. 1886.

(29)—Plaint disclosing no cause of action—Defect in plaint how curable.—Where a plaint discloses, when strictly read, no cause of action it is not compulsory to dismiss the suit; the defect in the plaint may be cured by the facts elicited during the examination of the parties which do appear to show a cause of action, but the plaintiff should not be allowed to make a case absolutely inconsistent with the plaint. The Court has to frame issues, not only from the pleadings, but also from the examination of the parties. The pleadings are often defective owing to bad drafting, and the parties are not to be bound rigidly by their pleadings, but where there is absolute inconsistency between a statement in the plaint and a statement made by the plaintiff under examination on a material point, the proper course is to have the plaint amended, if such amendment is not barred by the proviso to s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code. The fact that the plaint discloses no cause of action has been held not to be fatal to the suit. MA NGWE U. v. SIT PYAW, L.B.R. 1893—1900, 337. (16 W.R. 218, 7 C. 343, F.)

(30)—Debt wrongly described as due under an agreement of one date instead of another.—In a suit for recovery of a debt attached, the debt was wrongly described as due under an agreement of one date instead of another. An amendment correcting the date could not be made. The intention of the parties is immaterial. [Way v. Hearn, (1862).] BENODE BEHARY MOOKERJEE v. RAJ NARAIN MITTER, 30 C. 699 = 7 C.W.N. 651. (31)—Suit for possession—Misstatement of cause of action—Amendment of plaint.—The plaintiff whose charge of criminal trespass against the defendant under s. 441, I.P.C., had been thrown out, brought the present suit for possession of the lands which formed the subject of the charge and for the demolition of a wall or fence put up by the defendant, and dated the cause of action from the date of the failure of the criminal charge. The suit was decreed by the first Court but dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that it had no power to set aside a Magistrate's order under s. 441, I.P.C. Held that the case was an ordinary one of a party who had been dispossessed by the alleged wrongful act of another, and that, if the lower appellate Court was of opinion that the plaintiff had mis-stated his cause of action, it ought to have directed him to amend the plaint instead of refusing to try the suit, and that this was all the more necessary as the parties went to trial upon the whole case in the Court of first instance, well understanding the plaintiff's cause of action to be that he had been dispossessed by the defendant's encroachment upon his lands. DABOO JHA v. LUWA JHA, 11 W.R. 223.

(32)—Amendment of—Decree—Error in description of plot.—A plot of land, part of the subject matter of the suit, was wrongly described in the plaint and in the decree of the Court of first instance as No. 182, instead of 184. On discovery of the mistake in the appellate Court, an application was made for the amendment of the decree and if necessary, of the plaint. The lower appellate Court declined to alter the decree and passed no definite order on the prayer for the amendment of the plaint, held, that the decree could not be amended, but the mere fact that an issue as to the particular number of the plot would have to be tried de novo was no reason for refusing the prayer for the amendment of the plaint. The Court should exercise its discretion in deciding whether or not the amendment of the plaint should be allowed and the plaintiff was entitled to a distinct order on the point. JIVAN SAHAI v. (33)—Jurisdiction—Pro-note for money due under contract—Suit on original cause of action.—Where a promissory note was taken in Calcutta from a person resident in Mymensingh for payment of money due on a contract for the sale of land made in Dacca, under which the money was due in Dacca, the Court of the Munsif in Dacca had jurisdiction to try a suit on the original cause of action, viz., the contract made in Dacca. PROBY v. BELL, 20 W.R. 6.

(34)—Misdescription of parties—Amendment of plaint—Limitation.—Where a Court, under the mistaken impression that a co-plaintiff (already on record), who had not signed and verified the plaint, could not be considered a plaintiff at all, order the plaint to be amended, held, that the date of the original presentation of the plaint, and not the date of the amendment, determined the question of limitation, there being no addition of any new party by the amendment. MOHINI MOHUN DAS v. BURRYSI BUDDAN SAHA DAS, 17 C. 580, P.C.

(35)—Non-joinder—Objection not taken in first Court—Remand of suit on appeal—Right of plaintiff to amend plaint thereafter.—Where no objection was raised to a suit in the first Court on the ground of non-joinder of parties and the suit was remanded on appeal, there was nothing to prevent the plaintiff from amending the plaint thereafter. INNASI PILLAI v. obtained his personal discharge. As to this, there was a mis-statement in the plaint, permission to amend which was also asked in the present application. No written statement had been filed by either party to the suit. The Court allowed the amendment directing that the costs of the amendment thereby incurred should be paid by the plaintiff. THE DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. MILLER, 7 B.L.R. App. 65.

(38)—Plaint—Amendment—Plaint barred by time on the face of it—Amendment to bring the claim within time cannot be allowed.—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 50.—A suit was brought to recover a sum of money from defendants. The claim as made out in the plaint was on the face of it barred by time. At the hearing, the plaintiff sought leave to amend the plaint by relying on a document which brought the claim within time, but which was not mentioned in the list of documents annexed to the plaint:—Held, that the plaint which was bad on the face of it could not be allowed to be amended in the way suggested. All amendments in a plaint which do not cause an injustice to the other side are allowed; but if the amendments put the other side into such a position that they must be injured they ought not to be made. GUNNAJI v. MAKANJI, 10 Bom. L.R. 969.

(39)—Law of limitation—Duty of Court receiving plaint—Special appeal—Act VIII of 1859.—The Civ. Pro. Code has imposed on the Civil Courts the duty of examining whether the whole or any portion of the claim is barred, under any existing law, by lapse of time, and of deciding in accordance with such law; and that, consequently, if it be manifest, from the declaration in the plaint, that the recovery of a portion of the claim is barred by a particular statute, the omission to notice this circumstance, even if it should not have been specifically urged in defence, is an error in law, for the correction of which a special appeal will lie. SALUJI KESRAJI v. (42)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 53, 578—Amendment of plaint permitted subsequent to first hearing, how far legal—Alteration not inconsistent with original allegation—Amendment after hearing—Irregularity not affecting merits—Specific Relief Act, ss. 39, 40—Suit for cancellation on ground of failure of consideration—Voidable contract—Evidence Act, s. 92, proviso 3—Oral evidence if admissible to add to written contract.—This suit was originally brought in the form of one for accounts with respect to two bond transactions which the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant, but with respect to which the plaintiff contended that he had not received full consideration. Finding that no consideration beyond the actual advance of Rs. 200 and a book-debt for Rs. 100 reached the plaintiff, the Court gave a decree declaring that the balance of consideration had not been proved and that defendant would not be entitled to recover from the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,000 included in the bond. On appeal the Commissioner considered that the lower Court had acted improperly in permitting the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to completely alter the character of the suit from one for accounts to one for the cancellation of an instrument on the ground of want of consideration. On the evidence, the plaintiff, on whom the burden of proof lay, failed to prove the oral agreement alleged to have been made by the defendant to employ Rs. 1,000 of the amount for which the bond was given in settling with the plaintiff's creditors. The Commissioner accordingly reversed the decision of the lower Court and dismissed the plaintiff's claim. On further appeal to the Chief Court the plaintiff contended that the suit was rightly treated by the first Court as one to cancel the bond, qua the item of Rs. 1,000 on the ground of failure of consideration and that, on the merits, the Commissioner was not justified in reversing the decision of the first Court. As regards the amendment changing the nature of the suit, it was on the defendant's own objection that the plaintiff was made to do so; and it cannot be held, on a purely technical objection that the amendment was not made at the first hearing and was not duly carried out by a formal alteration of the plaint, that the suit failed altogether. According to the decisions, the language of s. 53 is merely directory and not mandatory, and therefore an amendment may be permitted at a stage later than the first hearing, provided that the character of the suit be not so altered as to become inconsistent with the suit as originally brought. Further, there is nothing in the Code which expressly forbids an amendment after the first hearing, and thus, at most, where it is allowed, it can only be regarded as an irregularity which, when it neither affected the jurisdiction of the Court nor the merits of the case could not justify the disturbance by the lower Appellate Court of the decree of the first Court, with reference to the provisions of s. 578, Act X of 1877. The alteration in this case was not inconsistent with what the plaintiff first prayed for the amendment really only affected the form of relief to which the plaintiff was entitled, and was actually necessary in order that the controversy between the parties might be settled once for all. The Chief Court was of opinion that the suit, should, under the circumstances, be treated, as it was treated by the parties in the first Court, as one brought under the provisions of s. 40 of the Specific Relief Act; admittedly there would be a reasonable apprehension that if the bond for Rs. 1,300 were left outstanding, it might cause him serious injury, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled under ss. 39 and 40 of the Specific Relief Act to have that portion of the bond adjudged voidable which had become unenforceable by the defendant. KHUDA BAKSH v. (49)—Amendment of—Appeal—New case.—The plaintiff sued the defendants on the allegation that he and his brother R at the time of R's death constituted a joint Hindu family; that, on R's death, he was entitled by right of survivorship to the whole property which had been jointly owned by R and himself; and that the defendants, who were the sons of two pre-deceased brothers, had no right therein. The defence was that the plaintiff and his brothers remained joint until the death of their father after which they separated. It was further alleged that, under the custom of the family, the defendants were entitled to inherit the property in suit. Issues upon the question of separation and the alleged family custom were framed. The Court of first instance decided the question of separation in favour of the plaintiff. The Court of first appeal set aside this finding, whereupon the plaintiff applied to be allowed to amend his plaint so as to base his claim in the alternative, namely, that, if the joint family, as alleged by him, was not proved, still under the ordinary Hindu Law he, as the only surviving brother of R, had a preferential right to succeed to this property over the defendants who were his nephews; but the application was disallowed. Held, that the application to amend the plaint should have been allowed. Held, further, that if a Court sees that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he claims, although on grounds other than those put forward in his claim, the Court should grant that relief if the defendants are not thereby taken by surprise. RAM AWADH v. (54)—Amendment of plaint in second appeal—New case—Practice—Second appeal.—Where the suit was brought on an oral agreement, which was found against, and amendment of the plaint was asked for so as to enable the plaintiff to claim on his title under a written contract, held, the amendment ought not to be allowed in second appeal, especially as the effect would be to deprive the defendant of defences which would be open to him if a separate suit were brought on the alleged cause of action. ERESEAN NAIR v. peal—Amendment in Privy Council—Permissibility.—Where a plaintiff failed to amend the plaint in the original Court and the two appellate Courts, notwithstanding that the defendant drew his attention to the defect in the plaint, the Privy Council would not permit such amendment and thereby allow the plaintiff to shift his ground and make a new case, as such a course is wrong in principle and is calculated to work practical injustice. MALLKARJUN BIN SHIDRAMAPPA PASARI v. Where the plaintiff's object was to secure the whole of a certain property for himself, and it was only at the eleventh hour when he found that he was likely to have his suit dismissed that he changed his front and sought amendment of the plaint by claiming only a share of the property, held that, under such circumstances, the lower Court was right in having refused to allow the amendment. GOPALASAMI v. (62)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 53, 149—Amendment of plaint, when can be made—Court's power to frame additional issues before decree.—The only part of s. 53 which contains an express negative enactment is the proviso near its end, "that a plaint cannot be altered so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character;" but this is restrictive as to the nature only of the amendment, and not as to the time within which it may be made. There being in s. 53 no positive prohibition of the amendment of the plaint at any time before decree, and the result of holding that the words "at or before the hearing" constitute an implied prohibition of an amendment after the hearing, being to create a conflict between cl. (f) of s. 53 and the second passage in s. 32, which it is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended, and the Legislature having used negative words where it resolved to prevent amendments wholly inconsistent with the case originally made in the plaint, the words "at or before the hearing" must be taken to be merely directory and not mandatory. Where, therefore, a mortgagor in his suit against the mortgagees sought only for the production of the mortgage deeds and for an account of what, if anything, was due to the defendants on the mortgage, although the averments contained in the plaint, warranted a prayer for redemption; and where, after the first hearing of the suit, the plaintiff applied to be allowed to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for redemption, held that the Court could permit the amendment to be made, and that there was nothing in s. 53 of the Code to prevent the Court from doing so. [Diss., 7 A. 79; R., 110 P.R. 1882, 7 B. 155, 159 P.R. 1889, 14 B. 31, A.W.N. 1902, 35.] Held that, in the above circumstances, even if the plaintiff be not entitled to amend his plaint by praying that he may be at liberty to redeem the mortgage, it is still competent to the Court under s. 149 of the Code "at any time before passing a decree," to frame an additional issue. The additional issue framed may embrace matter not included in the plaint (provided it be not inconsistent with it) or in the written statement, but which may appear upon the allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties or persons. R & N. (66)—S. 53, Act XIV of 1882, Civ. Pro. Code, —Alteration in relief does not alter character of suit.—S. 53, cl. (c), Civ. Pro. Code, distinctly provides that an amendment, so long as it does not alter the character of the suit, may be allowed of any kind before judgment. The restriction is only as to the nature of a suit; the law prohibits any such amendment as would change the fundamental character of the suit; for example, a plaint cannot be so amended as to convert a claim based on contract into an action on tort. But an alteration in the relief does not alter the character of a suit. KASHI-NATH DAS v. SADASIV PATNAIK, 20 C. 805. [F., 2 L.B.R. 4, 135 P.R. 1906; Appr., 28 B. 153=5 Bom. (67)—Suit for declaration—Amendment by adding relief for possession—S. 53 of Civ. Pro. Code.—S. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, does not apply to a case where a suit for a mere declaration of title was brought by plaintiff against defendant, (the plaintiff having already been put in possession, by virtue of a decree in a former suit, which was ultimately dismissed by the High Court as not having been properly framed), and an amendment of the plaint was allowed by adding a prayer for possession, owing to plaintiff's dispossession effected subsequently to the institution of the new suit. BISHOP MELLUE v. (68)—Amendment of plaint—Material alteration—Ss. 53, 562, Civ. Pro. [R., U.B.R. 1897—1901, Vol. II, 231.] An appellate Court cannot order or allow a plaint to be amended, and cannot remand a case under s. 562 of the Civ. Pro. obtained possession of it. The Court ordered the amendment, but subsequently refused to entertain the suit on the ground that, by the amendment the nature of the suit had been altered. Held that the nature of the suit had not been changed and that the lower Court should dispose of the case on the merits. SUNDER LAL v. (70)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 50, 53—Amendment of plaint—Change in form of suit, cause of action being the same.—An Appellate Court is not precluded from decreeing a relief less than that claimed by the plaintiff in his plaint, provided that the specific right and its infraction alleged are not altered in appeal. Where restrictions imposed in regard to the specific crops which the defendants are to raise, and the time when they are to raise them, are not necessary for the protection of the interests of the plaintiff, they are an unwarranted interference with freedom of enjoyment, and as such should be set aside. PULAMADA v. RAVUTHU, 11 M. 94. [R., U.B.R. 1897—1901, 231.]

(71)—S. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Plaint—Amendment—Changing the character of suit—Declaration—Possession.—S. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, directs that a plaint shall not be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. The amendment of a suit for a mere declaration into one for possession does not change the suit into one of an inconsistent character. The relief for declaration is in most cases for recovery of possession claimed as ancillary to the latter, and there can be no inconsistency between the two. But, notwithstanding this, a Court should not allow a suit for mere declaration to be amended into one for possession, unless a good case is made out for such amendment. The Court has to exercise a judicial discretion where it is asked for, and that discretion may well be exercised where the plaintiff has either mis-conceived his case and there has been a bona fide mistake on his part and the amendment may be made without injustice to the defendant, or any contradistinction between the injury averred by the plaintiff and that assumed by the Court, or where the objection, that the suit for a mere declaration of title was not maintainable, was not taken in the first Court. RAGHU v. VISHNU, 5 Bom. L.R. 329.

(72)—Suit for confirmation of possession—Change in form of suit—Suit for recovery of possession—Bona fides.—When a plaintiff has a bona fide case, which he has proved in substance, but not in form, there are circumstances, under which the Courts assist him. But, where a plaintiff put forward a distinct allegation of possession founded on a deed of sale, which is found by the Court to be false, this is not a case in which the general rule ought to be relaxed and the plaintiff assisted to establish a (74)—Amendment of plaint with additional prayer—Issue framed—Appeal—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 588.—Where, on second appeal, the High Court returned a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, and the plaintiff returned the plaint to the proper Court but after amending it by asking for an additional prayer, i.e., for a permanent injunction, and also put in a petition to admit the amendment, and the defendant objected to the amendment in his written statement on the ground that the amendment materially altered the suit, and the Court framed an issue on the point and decided it in plaintiff's favour, and made an order admitting the amended plaint, held that no appeal lay from the order under s. 588, Civ. Pro. Code. SIMHADRI v. GAJAHAPADHI, 3 M.L.J. 253.

(75)—Mortgage by unregistered deed—Suit for money decree for mortgage debt—Absence of acknowledgment or promise in the deed—Proof of debt by acknowledgment in another deed—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Admission of debt by defendants, effect of—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53—Amendment of plaint asking for remedy originally omitted.—The plaintiffs asked for a money decree for Rs. 699 being the amount of a mortgage debt, alleged to be due to them under two unregistered mortgage deeds, one for Rs. 600, and the other for Rs. 99. It being found that the deed for Rs. 600, contained no acknowledgment of any previously existing debt, nor any promise to pay the money so that there was nothing in it which could be admitted as evidence, the plaintiffs contended that the debt for Rs. 600 may be proved by an acknowledgment contained in the bond for Rs. 99. Held that, as the terms of the mortgage were reduced to writing, they could not be proved apart from the mortgage deed itself, and as it was not alleged that there was any debt apart from the mortgage transaction, if the defendants denied the debt of Rs. 600, it would be out of the power of the plaintiffs to prove it, the mortgage being unregistered, but that if all the defendants admitted that the Rs. 600 had been borrowed, then, there would be no issue as to whether this debt had been incurred, and it would not be necessary for the plaintiff to produce any evidence of this fact. Where a person entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action, sues only for some of the remedies, an amendment of the plaint for the purpose of asking for another remedy originally omitted is not a conversion of the suit into one of an inconsistent character, and is therefore not barred by s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code. Thus where a plaintiff who sued for possession of a house alleged to have been mortgaged to him by an unregistered mortgage-deed, put in an amended plaint stating that, as possession could not be given to him, he asked for a decree for the money, held this amendment of the plaint was not barred by s. 53, Civ. VI, r. 17.—Where, in a suit as originally framed, the plaintiff prayed only for the recovery of certain account books from the defendants who were his servants, but subsequently put in a petition to amend his plaint by the addition of a prayer for the recovery of the moneys due from the defendants, on the same facts already alleged in his plaint. Held, that the application was proper and that the amendment should be allowed. (33 B. 644, 21 M.L.J. 475, R.) The mere fact that the further relief then asked had become barred in the interval does not by itself render the amendment improper. A suit lies for the recovery of account books kept by the defendants for the plaintiff. A.R.R.M.S.V. SEVUGAN CHETTY v. KRISHNA AIYENGAR, 10 M.L.T. 557.

(77)—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaratory suit—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 54, amendment of plaint by adding prayer for consequential relief.—The plaint, in this case, (as one praying for a mere declaration) was held by the lower Court to be inadmissible by reason of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff could have prayed for an account against the defendant, in whose favour a certificate of heirship had been granted in respect of all moneys received by him under such certificate, and for payment to plaintiff of all moneys so received but not properly accounted for. The High Court, however, held that in such a case the plaintiff could be allowed to amend the plaint within a given time by adding a prayer for an account. BAI ANOPE v. MULCHAND GIRDHAR, 9 B. 355. property and asked for an account of what property came under the alleged intestacy. The latter claim not having been from the first in controversy between the parties, the proposed amendment was refused on the ground that the parties should not be allowed to raise, by means of the amendment, a case inconsistent with the action as it originally stood. DAMODAR MADHOWJEE v. Pro. Code*, s. 13.—S. H. died leaving him surviving his second wife and two daughters by her (defendants) and a son and a daughter (plaintiff) by his first wife. The plaintiff sued the defendants for her share under the Mahomedan Law of inheritance in the property of S. H. The plaint in the suit was presented to the Munsarim of the Subordinate Judge's Court, who was the officer to whom it should have been presented, on the 21st October 1879, i.e., 13 days before the expiration of twelve years from the death of S. H. On certain objections, taken by the defendants in their written statements, to the plaintiff's suit, the Court on the 16th July 1898 ordered the plaint to be returned for amendment within two weeks from its actual return. On the 26th July 1898 the Court directed the plaintiff within three weeks to pay an additional Court-fee. On the 11th August 1898 the plaintiff asked that the time granted by the order of 26th July 1898 might be extended, and on the 15th August the Court granted an extension of one month. On the 13th September 1898 the plaintiff again presented the plaint paying the additional Court-fee. The Court dismissed the suit on several grounds, one of which was that inasmuch as the plaint was not sufficiently stamped until twelve years from the death of S. H. had expired, the suit could not be deemed to have been instituted within time and was barred by the law of limitation. Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation. Where a plaint has been filed in time, the fact, that it was not duly stamped when the period of limitation expired, does not render it time-barred, since it must be regarded as having been presented on the day upon which it was filed. In the Explanation to s. 4, Indian Limitation Act, 1877, that "a suit is instituted, in ordinary cases, when the plaint is presented to the proper officer," the Legislature used the expression "plaint" without reference to the law as to court-fee. Held also, that where a plaint has, under s. 54 (d), Civ. Pro. Code, been returned for amendment within a time fixed by the Court, the Court can extend the time both before and after it has expired. Another ground upon which the Court dismissed the suit was that, inasmuch as in a previous suit brought by the plaintiff's brother against the plaintiff and the defendants for the whole property of S. H. or, in the alternative, for his share under Mahomedan Law in the same, the plaintiff's brother was decreed his share in the property, and certain other questions raised in the present suit were decided in that suit, the present suit was barred by s. 13, Code of Civil Procedure. Held, that the matters decided in the former suit and raised in this suit were not in issue between the plaintiff and the defendants, that there was no active controversy between them as to such matters, that those matters were not decided as between the plaintiff and the defendants inter se, and that the plaintiff's suit therefore was not barred by s. 13, Civ. Pro. Code. A decision may be res judicata between the parties on the same side, the mere circumstance of persons having been formally arrayed on the same side in a suit being immaterial. If a matter has been actively in issue between them, and if as to that matter they had an active controversy against each other, they will be estopped by the decision in that matter. AZIZ-UNNISSA v. MUKIMUNNISSA, 4 O.C. 108. [R., 8 O.C. 241.]

(80)—Case made in plaint—Relief on a different title—Duty of appellate Court.—After the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit by the first Court, an appellate Court will not be justified in giving the plaintiff a decree on a title different from that put forward in the plaint. Any amendment allowed must be such as is either raised in the pleadings or is consistent with the case as originally laid, and the state of facts and the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff must not be departed from. MUKHODA SOONDURY DASI v. RAM CHURN KARMOKAR, 8 C. 871. (11 M.L.A. 7, Cited.) [R., L.B.R. 1893—1900, 518; Expl., 12 C.W.N. 172, Note.]

(81)—Prayer for relief on footing of defendant's story.—When the parties to a suit have come to trial to determine which of two stories is true, the Court cannot allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint, by abandoning his own story and adopting that of the defendant and asking relief on that footing, the question whether on that footing the plaintiff is entitled to relief being one to which the defendant's attention has not been called, and as to which he has had no opportunity of answering. SHIBKRISTO SIRCAR v. plaint and pleaded limitation. A debtor to whom money has not been lent for a fixed term is not in mora, if he does not pay until demand. A creditor who sues before demand would justly be deprived of costs, and if the suit was not resisted, perhaps properly be made to pay the defendant's. To say, however, that a right of demand is not clothed with an action because, in consequence of special provisions, the action will not be subject to destruction by prescription until something more happens, is to make this legal anomaly the means of creating a perfectly existent legal right uninvested with legal protection—a monster. R. (87)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53—Suit for pre-emption—Error in plaint in extent of property claimed—Power of Court as to amendment.—Where, from the tenor of the plaint in a suit for pre-emption, the Court is satisfied that the intention of the plaintiff was to institute a claim in respect of the entire property sold, but that from inadvertence or by mistake he had omitted to claim in his plaint a small fraction of the property, it is competent to the Court to return the plaint for the necessary amendment being made, even though, at the time of such return, the period of limitation for the suit may have expired. Nor could the defendant, under such circumstances, take objection to the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was seeking pre-emption only in respect of a portion of the property sold, since the case was not one in which the pre-emptor was seeking to break up the bargain or to pick and choose out of the property sold. BARKAT-UN-NISSA v. MUHAMMAD ASAD ALI, 17 A. 288 = A.W.N. 1895, 80.

(88)—Pre-emption, Suit for—Limitation—Dispute as to share sold—Share claimed less than what vendor had sold—Amendment of plaint beyond limitation—Relates back to date of institution of suit.—The Courts are allowed by the Code of Civil Procedure ample power to amend, and the High Court is slow to interfere with their exercise of discretion, but no Court has power to allow a new cause of action to be introduced into a plaint after that cause of action has become barred by limitation. Where the amendment amounts to a mere correction of the description of the property, the amendment is within the power of the Court to make, and when so made, limitation must be reckoned as from the date of presentation of the plaint. MUHAMMAD SADIQ v. ABDUL MAJID, 8 A. L. J. 636.

(89)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 53—Pre-emption suit.—In a suit for pre-emption, where the plaintiff based his claim broadly on the legal status he enjoyed under the wajib-ul-arz with reference to pre-emption, he applied at the first hearing for permission to amend his plaint by explaining that the condition of the wajib-ul-arz was also the condition of the Mahomedan Law of pre-emption. Held that the proposed amendment would not have the effect of converting the suit into one of a different character, that the suit would continue to be a suit for pre-emption, and the right of action would continue to be based, as it originally was, on the wajib-ul-arz, the wajib-ul-arz being itself a declaration that the Mahomedan Law applied to a case of pre-emption of the kind in suit, and that therefore the amendment should be allowed. HABIBULLAH v. under Civ. Pro. Code, 1908—Extent.—Where, by allowing a plaint to be amended, a suit which was originally one for partition was altered into a suit partly for partition and partly for the recovery of certain property as plaintiff's own or in the alternative for partition: Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to grant the amendment. Under the Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, the Court's power to allow amendments is very comprehensive. JOTHY MAHALINGA IYER, 10 M L T. 188.

(91)—Mortgage—Partition—Costs.—Where the mortgagee brought a suit for possession at first, he was permitted at the hearing to amend his plaint so as to make it a suit for partition, on condition of his paying the costs of the defendants. (92)—Amendment of plaint—Mortgage—Redemption—Limitation—Practice—Variance—Costs of repairs and improvements—Accounts—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 53.—Plaintiff sued to redeem a house mortgaged in 1841. Defendant 3, a purchaser from assignees of original mortgagee, denied the mortgage and claimed costs of repairs and improvements if the claim for redemption were granted. After evidence had been heard and before judgment the plaintiff applied for amendment of the plaint basing the claim for redemption on a previous mortgage of 1837, in case the alleged mortgage of 1841 were not proved. The mortgage of 1837 was admitted in a suit for possession in 1841, while the present suit was instituted within 60 years from the date of the admission, but the period of limitation had run out on the date the application for amendment of the plaint was made. The Court of first instance allowed the amendment to be made and decreed redemption, but allowed defendant 3 the benefit of the repairs and improvements. The lower appellate Court reversed the original Court's decision on these points. On second appeal—Held, (1) that the mortgage of 1837 was still outstanding and that the suit based on that mortgage was not barred by time: (2) that defendant 3 was not entitled to the benefit of the improvements; but that it was within the discretion of the lower appellate Court to consider his claim to the benefit of repairs as distinguished from improvements. parties. There are two modes in either of which the accounts may be made up. They may be permitted to run on, from the date of loan to the date of settlement, interest being allowed to the one party on the whole sum lent, and to the other on the sums realized, over and above the interest to which the mortgagee is entitled, from the date of realization: or the amount collected by the mortgagee in possession may be carried first to interest, and after paying that, to the liquidation of the principal, the account being closed at the end of each year, and there being allowed from year to year only reduced interest on the reduced principal. GANDA MAL v. THAKAR HARKISHEN, 4 P. L.R. 1900.

(94)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 53—Amendment of plaint—Accounts, suit for.—In a suit for accounts the Court returned a plaint on the ground that there were transactions between the parties not disclosed by the plaintiff forming part and parcel of those which formed the subject matter of the suit, held, that the order returning the plaint for amendment was wrong. LADHA MAL v. SAYAD GANG BAKHSI, 117 P L.R. 1904.

(95)—Fraud as originally specified in pleadings, party bound to prove—Amendment of pleadings, when permissible.—The main charge against the defendants as originally laid down in the plaint was the fraud said to consist in their concealment from the Official Assignee of the payment under a compromise. In the plaint, after its amendment, the fraud was alleged to consist in that the payment of money to Z was itself a fraud upon the Court which the Official Assignee had no power to consent to. With reference to the amendment of the plaint by introducing a new and distinct charge of fraud after all the evidence had been given and the case closed, their Lordships remarked that the allowance of it was contrary to every principle of justice; it was wholly unprecedented and did not exhibit a sound exercise of judicial discretion as it contravened the well known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that, when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it. ABDUL HOSSEIN ZENAIL ABADI v. CHARLES AGNEW TURNER, 11 B. 620, P.C. = 14 I.A. 111 = 5 Sar. 25. [R., 1 O. C. 63, 16 C.P.L.R. 133.]

(96)—Allegations of fraud in plaint—No specific instances—Plaint to be returned for amendment—Practice.—With regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice. So, a plaint containing general allegations of fraud against the defendant but mentioning no specific instances, must, on presentation, be either rejected or returned for amendment, as it discloses no cause of action. KRISHNAJI v. WAMNAJI, 18 B. 144. [R., 19 B. 593, 5 Ind. Cas. 179.]

(97)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53—Plaint in suit for money against executrix of debtor, description of defendant in—Verification, requirements of the Civ. Pro. Code, in respect of.—The plaintiff in this suit brought by the plaintiff Bank, on a bond executed in its favour, against the executrix of the deceased obligor, had been returned for amendment by the lower Court. The order was set aside by the High Court, on appeal, as there were no sufficient grounds for the return of the plaint. The defendant was stated in the plaint to be the executrix of the deceased obligor and the suit had been brought against her in that capacity. Nor was the plaint bad, merely because the claim was therein set out, not as made on the part of the Bank directly, but only as made by the manager of the Bank. The signature and verification of the plaint as follows:—"For the Mussoorie Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, Manager" was also held to be sufficient for the purposes of s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaint sufficiently fulfilled the requirements of the Procedure Code and the rule therein that the verification of the plaint should be made by some one acquainted with the facts set out in it. THE MUSSOORIE BANK, LIMITED v. BARLOW, 9 A. 188 = A.W. N. 1887, 17.

(99)—*Civ. Pro. (101)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53—Plaint in a suit for injunction, whether could be amended into one for possession—Alteration in the relief prayed for, whether alters character of suit.—Plaintiffs sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with their dealings, in respect of certain property of theirs, of which the defendant had taken wrongful possession. On the defendants pleading title to the property, plaintiffs prayed for amendment of their claim by claiming possession and damages. Held, that a suit for a declaration cannot be regarded as inconsistent with one for possession (11 M. 295, 15 M. 15, F.) and that an alteration in the relief prayed for, would not alter the character of the suit, so as to prevent an amendment of a plaint in that respect. HARJI MAL v. POKHAR DAS, 135 P. R. 1906 = 117 P.L.R. 1908. (20 C. 805, 26 C. 845, F.; 1 P. R. 1900, 61 P. R. 1888, R.)

(102)—Estoppel—Acceptance of order of Court and action under it on protest—Right of appeal from order, if barred—Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 97—Plaint—Amendment—Prayer for injunction to restrain defendant from executing fraudulent decree—Subsequent amendment of plaint by alleging that plaintiff's claim is preferential to defendant's decree—Amendment, whether changes character of suit—Amendment, order of—Discretion of Court.—A party, who has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it, cannot, after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order, contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another. But where the party accepts the order under protest, he is not debarred from appealing against it. The plaintiff claimed to have acquired title to the disputed property by purchase at an execution sale, and alleged that the defendant was about to bring it to sale in execution of a fraudulent mortgage decree, and, therefore, he prayed that the defendant might be perpetually restrained from proceeding with execution of his decree. Subsequently the plaintiff asked leave to amend his plaint, and the object of the amendment was to show that, apart from the fraud, the mortgage decree of the defendant was not enforceable against the property, because the transaction under which the plaintiff derived his title gave him in law a preferential title to that of the defendant. Held, that the amendment was rightly allowed; that it merely enabled the plaintiff to urge an alternative ground in support of his claim for injunction; that the plaintiff would have been seriously prejudiced if the amendment had not been allowed, for he could not have asserted this ground in another litigation; and that the effect of the amendment was not to alter the fundamental character of a suit and to convert it into another of a different and inconsistent character. Amendments must not be allowed to prejudice the substantial rights of the party in favour of whose opponent they are allowed; but observing due caution in that regard, the time and extent of each amendment are in the judicial discretion of the Court. MANI LAL v. HARENDRA LAL ROY, 8 Ind. Cas. 79 = 12 C. L. J. 556.

(103)—Suit by co-sharer for possession—Amending it into a declaratory suit—Legality.—A suit by a co-sharer for possession of joint holding on the ground of forcible eviction therefrom was allowed to be amended into one of a declaratory nature. MULA MAL v. BASANT MAL, 106 P.R. 1893.

(104-105)—Practice—Plaint—Amendment of—Suit brought against the idol of a temple—Dismissal of suit—Limitation.—An idol is a juristic person who can hold property. Therefore, when a suit is brought in respect of property held by an idol, it is the idol who is the person bringing the suit or against whom the suit is brought, the idol being the person beneficially interested in the suit. But as in every suit the party bringing it or against whom it is brought must, when he is suffering from an incapacity, be represented by some other person, so when a suit is brought on behalf of or against an idol, there must be on the record a person who represents the idol, such as the manager of the temple in which the idol is installed, every pleading must be signed by a sentient being, and this can be done by the manager, as in the case of a minor. The amendment of the plaint by correcting the description of the plaintiff would not have the effect of introducing a third party on the record, and no question of limitation would arise. JODHI RAI v. BASDEO PRASAD, 8 A. L. J. 817, F.B. (19 A. 330, Overruled.)

(106)—Suit relating to temple property—Plaint in name of idol—Amendment on second appeal—Substitution of manager of temple as plaintiff.—The Civ. Pro. Code, which requires that there must be a plaintiff to a suit, cannot be taken to contemplate an idol of a temple being made a plaintiff. Difficulties might arise in enforcing the process of the Court if an idol or a God of a temple were accepted as a plaintiff in a suit. So in a suit which related to property alleged to belong to a temple and which had been brought in the name of the idol of the temple, the Court on second appeal allowed an amendment of the plaint to be made by substituting the name of the manager of the temple as plaintiff in the place of that of the idol, on certain conditions as to the payment of the defendant's costs, and stating that the amendment should have effect without prejudice to any rights which may have been acquired by limitation, or as to any question which may arise as to the right to sue of the person to be substituted as plaintiff by way of amendment.

(107)—Plaint, amendment of—Amendment of plaint in suit in which plaintiff, is held not a minor at the time of its institution—Minor, suit on behalf of, procedure in, when discovered that plaintiff was not a minor at the time of its institution.—In a suit instituted on behalf of a minor by his next friend it was pleaded in the plaintiff's replication that, if the Court was of opinion that the plaintiff was not a minor, the suit ought not to be dismissed, and that the Court "could take his signature on the plaint only." The second and third issues were whether the plaintiff was a minor, and whether, if he were not, the suit should be dismissed. The Court decided these two issues against the plaintiff, and at the time it did so it was asked by the plaintiff for permission to amend the plaint. Held that, as the suit was instituted with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff, the plaint could properly be amended when the Court decided that the plaintiff was a minor. BHULAI v. (109)—Joint family—Suit by manager—All co-parceners, whether necessary parties—Objection as to parties to be taken at early stage—Amendment of plaint by adding parties allowable in second appeal.—Plaintiff sued alone as manager of a family to recover land from the defendant, who took the objection of non-joinder, stating that the other members of the family should be made parties to the suit, and it was held that in such a case, the defendant is always entitled when he has taken the objection of non-joinder at an early stage, to have all the members of the family placed on the record to ensure him against the possibility of the plaintiff's acting without authority. Under the circumstances the High Court directed that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his claim by making the other members of the family mentioned by the defendant parties to the suit. HARI GOPAL v. (112)—Contract with Municipal Overseer for doing Municipal work—Personal liability—Quasi contract—Amendment of plaintiff.—The plaintiff sued one M, overseer of the Municipal Office, for the recovery of a sum of money due on a contract under which plaintiff had done a quantity of earth work for the Municipality. There was no evidence to show that the defendant had pledged his personal credit. The defendant clearly contracted for the Municipality, and for the performance of work well known by the plaintiff to be a Municipal work. The Municipality ignored the contract. Held that the contract in the present case was a quasi contract and that the defendant could not be made personally liable in the present action of contract. Held, further, that the plaintiff could not be amended so as to make the defendant liable in tort for a misrepresentation of his authority. MOHENDRONATH MOOKERJEE, 9 W. Plaintiffs subsequently put in this application to amend the proceedings by adding the defendants' ship also as an additional defendant in the suit. Held, such amendment was permissible according to the practice and procedure of the High Court where it is often usual to make the ship and her owners defendants in cases of damage arising out of collision. There was no room for the contention of the defendants that in a proper case the initial proceedings cannot be so amended as to bring them into the form which they would have assumed in the first instance had it not been for the supposition that the ship was not amenable to the process of the Court. The word "defendant" used in s. 28 of the Code was held to include a vessel which, for the purpose, should be deemed as invested with a personal and the amendment sought for by way of adding the ship as a defendant along with its owners who had alone been impleaded as defendants on the record at the time the plaintiff was filed, was therefore allowable. *THE BOMBAY AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LTD. v. (114)—Election—Damages.—Plaintiff opened a shop for the sale of "tari" after the purchase at a Government auction of a license to vend liquors, but before the receipt by him of the license. The sale having been stopped by the Extra Assistant Commissioner, the plaintiffs sued the Government, represented by the Deputy Commissioner for damages for wrongful acts of the Extra Assistant Commissioner who was made second defendant; the Judge left the plaintiff to elect against which of the two he would proceed, and plaintiff elected to proceed against Government and obtained a decree for a part of his claim. Held, that the plaintiff ought not to have been put to the option of abandoning his suit against one or other defendant, but the suit should have been tried out, the allegations against the two defendants being distinct but not inconsistent. VYTHEELINGUM v. THE GOVERNMENT, 21 W.R. 199.

(115)—*Alternative claim for the full rent—Amendment of plaintiff—Civ. Pro. Code (1882), s. 53 (=O. VI, r. 17, Civ. Pro. Pro. Code. LALA RAM SARAN LAL v. NEM NARAIN SINGH, 6 C.W.N. 326.

(116)—Suit for kubooleut relating to rent of specific portion of land—Plaintiff to be permitted to amend or explain plaintiff.—This suit for a kubooleut at an enhanced rate of rent was dismissed by both the Courts below, on the ground that the suit was not for the enhancement of the plaintiff's share of the rent, but for a kubooleut at an enhanced rate for the rent for a specific portion of land. Taking the plaintiff and the deposition of the plaintiff's agent on his examination together, it was clear that it was not the intention of the agent to ask for a kubooleut for specific lands but that he alluded to the quantity of land as in explanation of his employer's share over the total area in the estate. The High Court was also of opinion that there was nothing to prevent the Courts below, if the plaintiff had asked too much, from giving him what he was actually entitled to, under the law, or to have permitted him to amend or explain his plaint if necessary, and that, therefore, the lower Courts were wrong in having wholly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Where a plaintiff asks for a kubooleut for a term of one year or any such specific term, it is not necessary that he should have mentioned the date of the commencement of such term, for, it is, in such a case, in the discretion of the Court to itself fix the proper term. POORNA CHUNDER ROY v. (121)—Land declared by Magistrate to be public thoroughfare—Suit against Magistrate as defendant—Amendment of plaint allowing substitution of Secretary of State as defendant.—The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit brought against a Magistrate, as defendant, in respect of certain plots of land which the defendant had wrongly declared to be part of a public thoroughfare; but, on appeal, the High Court was of opinion that the lower Court might properly have permitted the plaintiff to amend his suit by striking out the name of the Magistrate as defendant, and substituting, in that capacity, the Secretary of State for India in Council, and reversed the lower Court's decree and remanded the suit for retrial on the merits. NILKANTHAPA MALKAPA v. THE MAGISTRATE IN CHARGE OF SHOLAPORE, 6 B. 670. [F., 6 B. 672; R., 15 C. 460, F.B., 4 O.C. 133.]

(122)—Plaint filed as against Magistrate, amendment of, substituting Secretary of State as defendant.—This suit brought against a Magistrate, as defendant, for cancellation of an order by the latter directing the plaintiff to remove his "ota" as having been built upon a public thoroughfare, was dismissed by the lower Court on the ground that it could not be maintained as against the defendant. The High Court following the decision in 6 B. 670, reversed the decree of the lower Court and remanded the case for re-trial after allowing the plaintiff to amend his suit by striking out the name of the Magistrate, and substituting that of the Secretary of State as defendant. BALARAM CHATRAKALAL v. THE MAGISTRATE IN CHARGE OF IGATPURI, 6 B. 672. [R., 15 C. 460, 4 O.C. 133.]

(123)—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), s. 53—Suit against defendants who were dead before its institution—Amendment of plaint by substitution of the representatives, when allowable—Limitation.—The tenants impleaded as defendants in these suits for rent had died before the suits were filed. On appeal, the plaintiff sought to be permitted to amend his plaint by substituting, for the names of the dead persons recorded as defendants, the names of their sons, notwithstanding that fresh suits as against the sons would then be barred by time. The leave to amend not having been asked for in the Court of first instance before decree, the Appellate Court refused to allow the amendment, since the representatives sought to be substituted would be precluded from pleading the point of limitation otherwise available to them. MALLIKARJUNA v. PULLAYYA, 16 M. 319. [R., 18 M. 33, 103 P.L.R. 1902, 1 N.L.R. 117, 2 N.L.R. 79, 31 M. 86=17 M.L.J. 551, 3 M.L.T. 12.]

liable to be sold in execution of a decree, the amount of which exceeds Rs. 2,500, the plaintiff cannot be properly amended under s. 373, Civ. Pro. Code, so as to bring it within the pecuniary limits of Munsiff's jurisdiction, as the claim is not for a sum of money, but for a declaration of the liability of the whole of the land to sale. ANNAJI v. RAMAKURUP, 10 M. 152.

(125)—Amendment of plaintiff—Appeal—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 53, 588 (6).—It is only orders "returning plaintiff for amendment" that are made appealable by s. 588 (6) of the Civ. Pro. Code. An order amending a plaintiff then and there without returning it, is therefore not appealable. RAJINDRA KISHORE SINGH v. RADHA PRASAD SINGH, 3 A. 854.

(126)—Frame of suit improper—Remand—Amendment of plaintiff.—In this case, the suit as originally brought against nine persons was held by the Privy Council to have been wholly misconceived; but they nevertheless thought that there was in all probability a good cause of action against one of those defendants upon a bond and remanded the case to the High Court with directions to allow the plaintiff to amend his plaintiff so as to make it a plaintiff against that defendant alone for the recovery of money due on a bond. MAHOMED LAHOOR ALI KHAN v. THAKOORANEE RUTTA KOORER, 9 W.R. P.C. 9=11 M.I.A. 468. (127)—Amendment of plaintiff—Declaration, suit for—Securing of possession by defendant after suit—Adding of prayer for possession—Power of Appellate Court to order amendment.—Courts have power to allow an amendment of plaintiff with reference to events that transpire after the institution of the suit. If, pending a suit for declaration, the defendant takes possession, the plaintiff may be allowed to amend his plaintiff by asking for possession, and he need not be put to the necessity of filing a separate suit for ejectment. Such amendment may be allowed by the Appellate Court. SUBBA NAICKEN v. RAMI NAICKEN, 16 Ind. Cas. 734.

(128)—Amendment of plaintiff—When allowing amendment, opportunity to be given to defendant to amend written statement and to adduce new evidence—Opportunity not given to defendant as case was pending for long time—Reason deprecated.—When an application to amend a plaintiff is made, the only matter for consideration is, whether the amendment can be allowed without injustice to the defendant, an injustice which cannot be remedied by an appropriate order for costs. Where the plaintiff is allowed to amend his plaintiff by including certain property in his claim, which has been omitted by mistake, the defendant should be allowed an opportunity to amend his written statement and produce evidence to rebut the new claim of the plaintiff. Where the defendant was not given this opportunity because the case had been pending for a long time; Held, that it was undesirable that the interest of justice should be subordinated to the fact that the suit had been pending for some time and had become "explanatory." MANJI DUTT MISSER v. (1)—Pleadings in Indian Courts, construction of.—Pleadings in Indian Courts must not be construed with the same strictness as those in English Courts. A defendant should not be held to have admitted every allegation in the plaint which he has failed to traverse. NATHA SINGH v. JODHA SINGH, 6 A. 406 = A.W.N. 1884, 140. (21 W.R. 60, R.)

(2)—Construction of Indian pleadings.—Issues—Act XVII of 1873—Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad.—Pleadings in Indian Courts should not be construed with the same strictness as they are in the English Courts. [R., 6 A. 406 = 4 A.W.N. 140.] Parties are not bound by an opinion of the Court on a matter not in issue, in the same manner as if the Judge had decided an issue formally and properly raised before him. Act XVII of 1873 was not intended to deprive the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad of any right of appeal to the High Court which he had before it was passed. HIS HIGHNESS THE NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL v. (2)—Plaint not showing when cause of action arose—Limitation.—The fact of A's plaint not showing when the cause of action arose is ground for rejecting the plaint, but no ground for finding on the trial that the suit is barred upon an issue raised as to limitation. KALLYNAUTH SHAW v. Plaint—continued.—5.—Form and Contents of Plaint—contd.

When fraud is charged against the defendant, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. With regard to fraud, general allegations however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice. [F., 18 B. 144, 19 B. 593, 36 C. 134 = 13 C.W.N. 87; R., 91 P.R. 1893, 8 C.L.J. 135, 1 O.C. 262, 5 C.W.N. 91, 3 L.B.R. 100, F.B., 13 C. W.N. 167, 2 N.L.R. 49.] In disposing of a case upon the defects of the plaint as not setting forth a good cause of action, the Court ought not to dismiss the suit, but it ought, in the terms of s. 53, to reject the plaint, if it did not allow an amendment as authorised by that section. That, according to s. 56 of the Code, would enable the plaintiff to present a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action, if he found himself in a position at any future time, to make averments which would give relevancy to his action. GUNGA NARAIN GUPTA v. TILUCKRAM CHOWDHRY, 15 C. 533 = 15 I A. 119, P.C. [F., 2 L.B.R. 4.]

(6)—Paper referred to in plaint.—A paper referred to in a plaint is not a part of the plaint. TOULTON v. GWYTHYR, Bourke O. C. 273.

(8)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 26—Error in plaint in date of cause of action—Plaint to be allowed to be amended—Procedure.—In this case, the suit had been dismissed after the plaint had been admitted and registered and the issues had been fixed, on the sole ground that the plaintiff failed in his plaint to state the date of dispossession of the land in suit. The High Court set aside the proceedings and remanded the case to the first Court for trial on the merits. If the lower Court meant to proceed on the ground that the plaintiff had stated a wrong cause of action, not stating the date of accrual of what they consider as the right cause of action, namely, the dispossession from the land, still, the suit ought not to have been dismissed summarily without trial. The proper course, in cases where there is incompleteness or error in the plaint capable of remedy, is to allow the plaint to be amended. But it is quite irregular, on such ground, to dismiss a suit after the parties have been arrayed before the Court and the trial proceeded with. RAJAH SHEORAJ SINGH v. NUR KHAN, 7 N. W.P. 354.

(9)—Procedure in case of irregularity in form of plaint—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 26, cl. 5—Amendment of plaint.—If a plaint be drawn not in accordance with the provisions of cl. 5

s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, the plaintiff ought to be allowed to amend the plaint without the suit being at once dismissed. BISSUNDEN NARAIN SHAHEE v. GUNGERKISEN SHAHEE, 2 Hay 351.

(10)—Contents of plaint—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, ss. 26, 27.—Under s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, the plaint is intended to be a statement of facts, and not merely a prayer for relief. The words "cause of action" in that section, as distinguished from the "relief sought for" and the "subject of the claim" mean the grounds entitling the plaintiff to the remedy he seeks. HURCHURN DOSS v. HAZAREEMULL, 1 Ind. Jar. O.S. 12.

(11)—Defective plaint—Suit not liable to dismissal—Trial of real issues on merits.—The words of the plaint in this case, taken strictly, charged the defendants with having put the plaintiff's title in jeopardy merely by reason of having procured a decree in the Collector's Court, and the lower appellate Court found that the decree of the Collector in no way damaged the plaintiffs' rights. Under the circumstances of the case it was held that the Judge ought not to have dismissed the suit without entering upon the merits of the real issue between the parties, namely, whether or not the plaintiffs had the title set up by them, which issue was tried in the first Court upon the evidence adduced by both parties. Also, as appeared on the face of the judgment of the lower appellate Court, even if the decree of the Collector did not do anything to affect the plaintiffs' title, still the conduct of the defendants in the course of the suit put an obstacle in the way of the plaintiffs who were consequently fully justified in bringing the present suit. GOLAM ALI CHOWDHRY v. FUTTICK CHUNDER BUNDOPADHYA, 10 W.R. 460. [D, 12 W.R. 24.]

(12)—Pleadings—Plaint intentionally obscure.—If a plaint is intentionally indistinct and obscure, the Court is justified in refusing to give the plaintiff a decree upon it. MAHOMED HOSSEIN v. PATUN, 20 W.R. 147.

(13)—Plaint, return of—Act X of 1859, s. 42—Technical defects—Amendment.—A suit under Act X of 1859 should not be dismissed after the plaint has been admitted and the parties have appeared, on such a technical ground as that the plaint does not specify the quantity of land in the defendant's possession, for the plaint may be returned under s. 42 or allowed to be amended. SYED REZA ALI v. (14)—Plaint—Cause of action.—When a plaint discloses different causes of action against different parties, it is bad in law, and the suit is not maintainable. RANI SARAT SUNDARI DEBI v. SURJA KANT ACHARJI CHOWDHRY, 2 B.L.R. App. 53 C = 11 W.R. 397.

(15)—No cause of action disclosed in plaint—Plaintiff not entitled to decree in the suit.—Objection was taken on the score of misjoinder or rather on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action so far as regards one of the plaintiffs. The High Court was of opinion that it ought to be allowed to prevail, that a decree could not, under the circumstances, be passed in favour of that plaintiff and that the suit therefore was, on that ground, liable to dismissal. SREEKANT ROY CHOWDHRY v. KITABOODDEEN SIRDAR, 10 W.R. 49.

(16)—Plaint—Erasure—Dismissal.—A suit should not be dismissed solely on the ground of there being an erasure in the plaint. BABOO HURRYHUR MOOKERJEE v. THE GOVERNMENT, 1 W.R. 87.

(17)—Ambiguous plaint—Claim under several rights.—A plaint that is ambiguous is bad in form. Where a party claims under two several rights, he should state the fact distinctly that the adversary may have due notice, and the Court be enabled to raise the proper issue. LALLA PURIAG DUTT v. SHAIKH BUNDEH HOSSEIN, 15 W.R. 225.

(18)—Suit—Plaint not sufficiently distinct—Dismissal of suit in appeal.—A suit should not be dismissed at the stage of the proceedings in regular appeal for want of sufficient distinctness in the plaint, but such defect may be cured by examining the plaintiff or his pleader on that point. JUGMOHUN TEWAREE v. BULDEO NAICK, 3 Agra 162.

(19)—Mortgage of very early date—Mortgage-deed not forthcoming—Mis-statement of date of mortgage in suit for redemption—Effect of.—Where a mortgage was effected many years ago and the mortgage-deed was not forthcoming, and the parties to it were dead, a suit for redemption should not be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff in his plaint had mis-stated the date of the mortgage-deed. LALLA DAIBEE PERSHAD v. BEHAREE LALL, 3 Agra 33.

(20)—Construction of plaint.—A plaint should not to be construed literally, but according to the meaning of the plaintiff. MRS. SOPHIA INGLIS v. RAM SINGH RAJAH, W.R. F.B. 159.

(21)—Malicious prosecution—Pleadings—Malice—Reasonable cause—Rejection of plaint—Amendment—Practice—Cause of action—Reference to facts not in plaint—Power of Court—Damages Measure of—Amount to be fixed in plaint.—Plaintiff brought a suit for malicious prosecution against the first defendant who had prosecuted him unsuccessfully, and against the second defendant, the Subordinate Judge at Broach, who had granted sanction to prosecute the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not himself aver, anywhere in the plaint, that the charge was made against him by the first defendant maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, or that the sanction for the prosecution was given by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held, that it was proper to reject the plaint. No amendment of a plaint can be allowed when there has been long delay and when there are no sufficient grounds for it. In order to determine merely whether or not the plaintiff made out such a prima facie cause of action as rendered his plaint admissible on the file, the Judge ought not to refer to documents and facts neither mentioned in, nor annexed to, the plaint, nor ascertained by interrogation of the plaintiff by the Judge. In every suit for damages for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff should name the amount of damages which he ought to recover as compensation for the injury of which he complained. GIRDHARLAL DAYALDAS v. JAGANNATH GIRDHARBHAI, 10 B.H.C. 182.

(22)—Suit for damages—Pleadings—Slander—Offensive language.—In this country, plaints must state the relief sought for, the subject of the claim, the cause of action and when it accrued. In suits for damages for injury done, the nature of the injury ought to be set out. But the strict rules of English law do not apply to plaints in this country. Where a pleader was told by the defendant that his father had taken a bribe when he was acting as a village punchayat, and the pleader thereupon resented the remark and warned the defendant that, if he repeated the insult he would be obliged to take legal steps against him, and the defendant thereupon used grossly offensive language against the plaintiff, held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. MOHESH CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. RAMDHUN PAL, 13 W.R. 248.

(23)—Pleadings—Suit for contribution.—In a suit for contribution, the plaint must distinctly set forth the amounts due by each of the parties sued. If the plaint is defective in respect of these particulars, it must be rejected. BHOLANATH CHATTERJEE v. INDUR CHAND DOORGAR, 14 W.R. 373.

(24)—Partnership suit—Frame of suit—Sch. IV, form 113.—The plaint in a partnership suit must be framed on the lines of form 113 of the Civ. Pro. Code and the accounts taken as prayed therein. RAM CHUNDER SHAHA v. MANICK CHUNDER BANIKYA, 7 C. 428=9 C. L.R. 157. [R., 3 A.W.N. 220.]

(25)—Suit for amount found due on taking unsettled accounts—Valuation for jurisdictional purposes—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7.—Under s. 50 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, if a plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint must state the precise amount, so far as the case admits, while, in a suit for the amount which will be found due on taking unsettled accounts, the plaint need only state approximately the amount sued for. As in the former instance, the precise amount, so in the latter the approximate amount stated in the plaint, must be taken to be the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction. KHUSHALCHAND MULCHAND v. NAG-INDAS MOTICHAND, 12 B 675. [R., 18 B. 40, 18 B. 100; D., 20 B. 265.]

(26)—Plaint, form of—Frame of suit—Trespass.—Where the owner of a tank wishes to bring a suit against a person for fishing in the tank without his permission, the plaint should be framed for the recovery of damages for trespass, and should not be based on an alleged dispossession by reason of the defendants fishing in the tank. LUCKIMONI DASI v. KORUNA KANT MOITRO, 3 C L.R. 509.

(27)—Civil Procedure Code, s. 50—Inconsistent cause of action.—Where the gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant is that he has never executed a sale-deed in the defendant's favour, and that the document set up by him is a forgery; it is not competent to the plaintiff to combine with this charge, as an alternative, the wholly inconsistent charge that, if he did execute the document, no consideration was received by him, or that fraud was practised on him. LYAPPA v. RAMALAKSHANNA, 13 M. 549. [Diss., 18 A. 125; R., 8 Bom. L.R. 921, 1 O.C. 175.]

(28)—Inconsistent reliefs prayed for in plaint, no ground for dismissal of suit.—A Court has no power to throw out a suit merely on the ground that, in its opinion, the plaint sets up two inconsistent causes in the alternative. The fact of the plaintiff's having come in with inconsistent allegations might militate against his succeeding in the suit. But a Court should not on this ground alone dismiss the suit, there being nothing in the Civ. Pro. Code, empowering the Court to reject such a plaint. JINO v. MANON, 18 A. 125=A.W.N. 1896, 1. (29)—Goods supplied to the member of a non-proprietary club—Suit in the name of the Secretary alone.—An action to recover the price of goods supplied to a member of a non-proprietary club or on his responsibility, cannot be brought in the name of the Secretary, as the goods belonged to the club, and not to the Secretary. MICHAEL v. BRIGGS, 14 M. 362.

(30)—Club—Rights and liabilities of Secretary.—The Secretary of a social club cannot be sued personally, unless he accepts a personal liability for the goods delivered to the former Secretary for the use of the club; nor can the club be sued through its Secretary. THE N. Company, and there were several allusions in the body of the plaint to the "plaintiff-Company," was, in the absence of proof of the registration of the Company under s. 41 of the Indian Companies Act, and in the absence of any suggestion that the Company was authorized to sue or to be sued in the name of an officer or trustee, held to be badly framed and liable to dismissal. S. CAMBELL v. J. A. JACKSON, 12 C. 41. [D., 30 C. 103; R., 103 P.L.R. 1902.]

(32)—Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 144—Suit by Bank in liquidation, Bank the proper plaintiff in—Amendment of plaint—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 53.—This suit, brought on behalf of a Bank in liquidation, was instituted, as set forth in the plaint, by the "Official Liquidator, Himalaya Bank, Limited, in liquidation, plaintiff," and the plaint was subscribed and verified in the same manner. Held that the Official Liquidator had no locus standi to institute the suit which should properly have been brought by the Bank itself, and that the suit was liable to be dismissed on the ground that the form of the suit was wrong. Where an Official Liquidator sues in the name and on behalf of a Company, it is not the Liquidator himself but the Company represented by him, that is really the plaintiff, and where such a suit had once been wrongly instituted in his name instead of that of the Company, the error cannot be cured by an amendment of the plaint under s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, since such a course would result in the substitution of a person, who had never figured as plaintiff in the suit, in place of the person by whom it had actually been brought. GULAM MUHAMMAD v. THE HIMALAYA BANK, LIMITED, 17 A. 292 = A.W.N. 1895, 81. [Overruled, 18 A. 193, F.B.; R., 3 O.C. 347.]

(33)—Civ. Pro. Code (1882), s. 435 (= O. XXIX, r. 1, new Code)—Corporation—Suit by unincorporated society, form of.—The corporation contemplated by the Civ. Pro. Code is a corporation as known in English Law, i. e., a corporation created with the express consent of the Sovereign or of such antiquity that the consent of the Sovereign may be presumed. In a suit by an unregistered company, the names of the members of the company must be disclosed. If this is not done, and if the Society is neither a corporation, nor a company authorized to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or of a trustee, so as to make the provisions of s. 435, Civ. Pro. Code, applicable, the plaint is a bad one and the suit is liable to be dismissed. PANCHAITI AKHARA, & C. v. GAURI KUAR, 20 A. 167 = A.W.N. 1898, 7. (8 W.R. 43, 16 A. 420, 6 A. 284, R.)

(34)—Unregistered Company, suit against—Form of suit—Addition of parties after expiry of limitation against them.—In the case of unregistered Companies, the proper course would be to sue the individual members thereof, in the same way as the individual members of any other firm, not being incorporated or registered, would have to be sued. A mere statement in the plaint that the plaintiff did not know of what persons the Company in question is composed, does not entitle him to sue the Company. (20 A. 497, F.; 8 W.R.C.R. 45, Cons.). Where a suit was brought against an unregistered Company, and the plaintiff applied at the time of hearing for an amendment of the plaint by adding the names of such of the persons as he could ascertain, and the suit was barred by limitation at that time as against such persons, the amendment was refused. GANESHA SINGH v. MUNDI FOREST COMPANY, 21 A. 346 = A.W.N. 1899, 123.

(35)—Unregistered Company, person not knowing names of members of, competent to sue Company by its name.—The plaintiff in an action against a Company not incorporated or registered, who is not aware of the individual members of whom the Company is composed, can use the Company by the name under which they carried on business and contracted with him. In such a case, he will have to state in his plaint his inability to give any better description. KOYLASH CHUNDER ROY v. MR. EDWARD ELLIS, 8 W.R. 45. [Not F., 21 A. 346 = 19 A.W.N. 123; R., 20 A. 167 = 18 A.W.N. 7.]

(36)—Summons, service of—Suit against firm.—In a suit against a partnership firm, the names of the members of the firm should be mentioned in the plaint, and the summons should be served personally on them or any of them if they or he resided within the jurisdiction. YEKNATH BABAJI v. GULABCHAND KAHANJI, 1 B.H.C. 85.

(37)—Frame of suit—Suit against corporate body—Suit against agent.—A suit against a corporate body, not brought in its corporate capacity, but through an agent, is bad in form. NUBEEN CHUNDER PAUL v. CECIL STEPHENSON, 15 W.R. 534.

(38)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 26, 63—Corporations.—A corporation must sue and be sued in its corporate name. S. 26, Act VIII of 1859, points out how a corporation is to be described in the plaint and s. 63 points out how process is to be served on a corporation. RAMDAS SEN v. THE COLLECTOR OF MOORSHEDEBAD, 2 B.L.R.S.N. 6 (a) = 10 W.R. 366.

(39)—Suit by minor—Improper form of plaint—Effect.—A suit brought by a widow for herself and as guardian for her minor daughter, and not as for herself and her minor daughter by herself as next friend, was held not badly framed, the objection not being fatal, as no one was misled or injured by the improper form of the plaint. ALIM BUKSH FAKIR v. JHALO BIBI, 12 C. 48. [R., 14 C. 754.]

(40)—Act IV (B.C.) of 1870, s. 59—Suit by manager—Form of plaint—Amendment—Minors—Court of Wards.—A suit brought by minors through the manager of their property as next friend must strictly follow the form prescribed by Act IV of 1870 (B.C.). Where the plaintiff, describing himself as the manager of the estate of certain minors under the Court of Wards, sues to set aside deeds constituting a mortgage-transaction upon the minors' property on the ground that the widow who made them had no power to create such an encumbrance, the plaint being on its face one in which the manager himself is the plaintiff, the Court cannot alter this plaint so as to turn the suit into a redemption suit on the part of the minors, and to give them a remedy which has not been asked for even alternatively by the terms of the plaint. JOYRAM LALL MAHTOON v. STEWART, 20 W.R. 453.

(41)—Suit to recover property as adopted sons of widow—Immediate cause of action.—Plaintiff sued to recover a share in certain property, of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants alleging that they were the adopted sons of a Hindu widow after whose death they had been in possession of the same. Held that all that the plaintiffs had to prove was that the widow held possession of the property in her own right and that, from the time of her death to the date of dispossession, they had held possession of the property as her adopted sons; and that there was no necessity for them to explain how the property came to the widow, as they were only bound to state their immediate cause of action. CHUTTURDHAREE LALL v. MUSSAMUT PARBUTY KOWAR, 12 W.R. 120.

(42)—Act XX of 1864, s. 19—Administrator—Misconduct—Waste of minor's estate—Plaint, contents of.—Every plaint, under s. 19 of Act XX of 1864, should specify either some one or more acts of misconduct on the part of the administrator in his office or should state some reasonable ground for supposing that he is about to waste the estate of the minor. DAMODAR DAS MANICKLAL v. UTAMARAM MANICKLAL, 10 B.H.C. 414.

(43)—Putnee right—Suit for declaration that putnee is invalid—Pleadings.—In a suit for a declaration that an alleged putnee tenure is invalid, the plaintiff must make the allegation unambiguously in the plaint. SHARADA PERSHAD MULLICK v. ROY DHUNPUT SINGH BAHADUR, 19 W.R. 219.

(44)—Act X of 1877, ss. 50, 51 and 52—Description of parties—Verification of pleading.—According to s. 50 of the Code of 1877, the description of the plaintiff as residing at Chitpore road in Calcutta is not sufficient; nor is it sufficient to describe the defendant as formerly of Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his place of residence more definitely. When the plaint itself does not state anything as being alleged upon information and belief, while it is quite clear that matters are stated in the plaint which are not and cannot be of personal knowledge, then the verification is bad under s. 52. BIBEE SOLOMAN v. ABDUL AZIZ, 4 C.L.R. 366. [R., 29 A. 418=4 A.L.J. 392=1907 A.W.N. 112; D., 25 A. 48.]

Plaint—continued.—5.—Form and Contents of Plaint—contd.

(45)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 26, intent of—The omission of Honourable, Maharaja, etc., no mis-naming.—The plain intent of s. 26, Civ. Pro. Code, is to secure the definite statement of the subject and object-matters of the litigation, and the words "so far as they can be ascertained" were not intended to compel a plaintiff to insert every name and title to which the defendant may conceive himself entitled. The omission of the titles "Honourable," "Maharaja", in a plaint does not constitute such a mis-naming as to justify the dismissal of the plaint. ZAMINDAR OF BOBBILY v. ZAMINDAR OF VIZIANAGRAM, 3 M.H.C. 31. [Overruled, 12 B.L.R. 443, P.C.]

(46)—Description of Property—Indistinctness of boundaries—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 26.—The indistinctness of boundaries is, under Act VIII of 1859, not a cause of non-suit. JANOKEE CHOWDHURANEE v. DWARKANAATH CHOWDHRY, 1 Hay 555.

(47)—Boundaries not mentioned in plaint.—Where the object of a suit is to prevent the infringement of plaintiff's rights over certain lands, the boundaries of the lands should be given in the plaint. AJOODHIYA LALL v. GUMANI LALL, 2 C.L.R. 134. [D., 26 C. 845=4 C.W.N. 162.]

(48)—Omission to give boundaries in plaint—Decree—Execution.—The mere omission to give the boundaries or other specifications in the schedule annexed to the plaint will not exclude from the operation of the decree matters which are by name strictly claimed in the plaint and referred to as such in the decree, and which do not need any further specification. SHIB NARAIN BANERJEE v. RAM NARAIN LUSHKUR, 20 W.R. 142.

(49)—Defective plaint—Boundaries not specified—Amendment of plaint.—Where a plaintiff does not specify the boundary of one of the several plots of land claimed, he should be required to amend his plaint. JONAB ALI MOLLAH v. GOLAM ASSAD CHOWDHRY, 21 W.R. 187.

(50)—Rent—Suit for enhancement—Misrepresentation of area and boundaries—Dismissal of suit.—If, in a suit for enhancement of rent, the plaintiff altogether misrepresents the area and boundaries of the holding, excluding land in the tenants' possession and specifying land not in their occupation, it vitiates the plaint and renders the whole suit liable to dismissal. TARINEE CHURN SANNYAL v. Previous to the sale, the other sharers had applied under s. 11 of Act XI of 1859 and made a separate account of their shares with the Collector. In a suit by the purchaser to recover possession of the lands in the occupation of the sharer whose rights and interests he had purchased, the other sharers contended that the plaintiff was in possession of the lands purchased by him. Held that, as the other sharers had already become separated from the defaulter, the suit was not one for partition and consequently the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Under s. 25, Act VIII of 1859, all that was necessary for the plaintiff to do was to describe the property in such a manner as might suffice for its identification. It was not absolutely necessary that the boundaries should be set forth, provided the land could otherwise be identified. MEER AFTABOODDEEN v. SHUM-SOODDEEN MULLICK, 18 W.R. 461.

(52)—Suit for rent—Misdescription of tenure—Claim how affected.—Where, in a suit for rent, the plaintiff described his jote as “dur-mourosi,” and the jumma-wassil-bakee papers showed him to be a “mourosi ijaradar” or “dur-mourosi taluqdar,” held that the misdescription, if any, was not sufficient to throw out plaintiff’s claim. BHOOBUM MOYE DOSSEE v. RUFFICK MUNDUL, 17 W.R. 17.

(53) Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 51 (= O. VI, rr. 14, 15), 578 (= s. 99, new Code)—Plaint not signed by plaintiff or authorized agent—Plaint not void—Waiver—Amendment.—A plaint not signed by the plaintiff or his authorised agent according to the provisions of s. 51, Civ. Pro. Code, is not necessarily void, and such a defect can be waived by the defendant if the suit had been filed with the knowledge of the plaintiff, or can be cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and under s. 578, Civ. Pro. Code, it is not a ground for interference in second appeal. The plaint in the case purported to be signed on behalf of the plaintiffs, by an advocate who himself filed the plaint, and also by another gentleman who purported to sign as “agent” for the plaintiffs, who were a firm of foreign merchants, residing out of, but trading within, British India. There was nothing to show that this gentleman was a recognised agent of the plaintiffs within the meaning of s. 37, Civ. Pro. Code (1882), nor was there any power-of-attorney in his favour. The defendants raised for the first time at the hearing of the second appeal an objection that the plaint was void ab initio on account of this defect. Held that the same advocate having conducted the case throughout, it must be presumed, in the absence of any finding or evidence to the contrary, that the suit was instituted and conducted throughout with the knowledge and authority of the plaintiffs; that as there was no suggestion as to this defect in the defendant’s written statement, in the issues, the judgment of the Court below, and the defendant’s memos. of appeal in the lower Court as well as in the High Court, the defendant should be considered to have waived the defect; and that the defect fell within s. 578, Civ. Pro. Code, which prohibits the interference of the High Court with the decrees below on the ground of any error, defect, or irregularity which affects neither the merits of the case nor the jurisdiction of the Court; and that, if it were necessary (which was not the case here) the High Court was competent even at that stage to direct an amendment of the plaint. BASDEO v. (54)—Suit for possession—Limitation—Proof of date of dispossession—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 26, 337—Appeal by one of several defendants Reversal of decree in favour of all.—A person suing to recover possession of lands is bound, under the provisions of s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, to give the date of dispossession as accurately as he can, especially in a case where one of the issues is whether the plaintiff has been in occupation of the lands within 12 years of suit. Where, in passing a decree against several defendants, the Court of first instance does not proceed on a ground common to all the defendants, the appellate Court is not, on the appeal of one of the defendants, justified in law in giving virtually a decree in favour of the other defendants also. BOYDONATH SURMAH v. OJAN BIBEE, 11 W.R. 238. [R., 30 M. 470, F. B. = 17 M. L. J. 119 = 2 M. L. T. 104; D., 16 M. 293, 30 C. 429]

(55)—Suit for confirmation of possession—Plaintiff not in possession—Ous of proof—Pleadings—Form of plaint—Distinctness—Decision upon issues.—In most suits for confirmation of possession and for declaration of title, the rule is that the plaintiff is bound to prove that, at the time he preferred his suit, he was in possession, and he is bound also to prove the distinct title which he sets up. But it is not such an inflexible rule that it cannot be departed from. For instance, when a plaintiff can prove that he was in possession for twenty years previous to the suit, until within two or three months of the institution of the suit, his claim should not be thrown out and he should not be required to bring a fresh suit, merely adding the words that he was dispossessed, and changing the prayer for confirmation of possession into one for recovery of possession. [Reversed, 16 W.R. 27.] Matters which are in dispute should be ascertained, not only from the plaint and answer, but also at the first hearing. The plaintiff should be exact in the form in which his plaint is drawn up, but if there be any indistinctness in the form of the plaint, the decisions come to upon the issues

(1)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 54 (=O. VII, r. 11 and O. VI, r. 18), 56 (=O. VII, r. 13)—Rejection of plaint—Res judicata.—Where a plaint in a previous suit for pre-emption had, after the issues had been framed, been rejected on the ground that in the plaint, the plaintiff had not shown any cause of action (i. e., that having alleged the sale to be fraudulent, illegal and void as against him, he could not claim pre-emption), and a subsequent suit was brought for the same, it was held that there was no bar of res judicata, as the order rejecting the plaint was one within the meaning of s. 56; that, under s. 54, a plaint could be rejected at any stage of the suit; and that when a plaint is so rejected although it be after registration thereof, it does not amount to a dismissal of the suit. KISHORE SINGH v. SABDAL SINGH, 12 A. 553 = A.W.N. 1889, 185. (2 M. 318, 8 C. 192, 7 A. 72, 2 M.H.C. 61, 11 W.R. 177, 13 W.R. 358, R.) (2)—Plaint, rejection of—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 32—Fresh suit, if maintainable.—If a plaint is rejected under s. 32, Act VIII of 1859, the plaintiff can bring a suit on the same subject-matter, provided he is not barred by lapse of time. KADUMBINEE DOSSIA v. (3)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 32, 36—Dismissal of suit under s. 32—Fresh suit, on same cause of action—Whether legal.—The fact that provision is expressly made in s. 36 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to the effect that when plaints are rejected under ss. 29 to 31, the plaintiffs are not precluded from bringing fresh plaints on the same cause of action suggests the inference that, when a plaint is rejected under s. 32, a fresh plaint cannot be entertained on the same cause of action, as an appeal lies from that order of rejection. NAGAR MAL v. BHAGWANDAS, 81 P.R. 1878.

(4)—Schedule to plaint—Irregular plaint—Filing fresh plaint—Costs.—A plaint which in the first count did not sufficiently disclose the subject of claim, without reading the schedule annexed as part of the plaint, or when the action accrued, and in the second count did not show any right to sue in the plaintiff, was rejected by the Court as irregular, but with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit. Semble.—The Court will not make the payment of costs in respect of the former plaint a condition precedent to filing a fresh plaint, where there is no suggestion of mala fides. LUCKHEY MOONEY DOSSEE v. KHETTER COOMARY DOSSEE, 2 Ind. Jur. N.S. 117.

(5)—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 12—Finality of decision of first Court as to under-valuation of plaint—Plaint not to be rejected without opportunity to plaintiff to affix proper stamp.—The decision of a Court of first instance as to the under-valuation of a plaint is not open to interference by the superior Court. But however as the combined result of s. 54 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), and s. 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the first Court is not justified in rejecting a plaint merely on account of the under-valuation, without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of affixing the proper stamp required. BAI ANOPE v. MULCHAND GIRDHAR, 9 B. 355. [R., 10 B. 610, F.B.]

(6)—Plaint, insufficiently stamped—Deficiency not made good within time allowed by Court—Plaint admitted subject to defendant's objections—Subsequent rejection of plaint—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 54—Act VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), s. 28.—The plaintiff filed his plaint on the last day of limitation on an insufficient stamp, and, being required by the Court to make good the deficiency within a certain time did not do so until two days after the expiration of that period. The Court however accepted the plaint and issued notice to the defendant, but made an order to the effect that it would be open to the defendant to object to the admissibility of the plaint. The defendant did object, and the plaint was in consequence rejected. Held that even if the Court had power to extend the period of limitation the order admitting the plaint subject to the defendant's objections showed no intention of extending the time for payment of the residue of the Court fee; neither could it be taken as an order under s. 28 of the Court Fees Act. The plaint was properly rejected. Held also that the plaintiff not having made any application to be allowed to amend his plaint could not be permitted to prosecute his suit in respect of so much of his claim as was covered by the amount originally paid as

Court fee. DHARAM NARAIN LAL v. JAGMOHAN PANDE, A.W.N. 1891, 166. [R., 15 A. 65.]

(7)—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 12, cls. 1, 2 — Rejection of plaint for insufficiency of stamp—Appeal.—The rejection of a plaint by a Subordinate Judge on the ground of insufficiency of valuation and stamp for the purposes of the Court Fees Act, being not "to the detriment of the revenue is not appealable". MANOHAR GANESH v. BAWA RAMACHARANDAS, 2 B. 219. (2 B. 145, F.) [F., 9 B. 355; Cons., 10 B. 610, F.B.; R., 12 B. 675, 19 B. 198, 23 B. 486; D., 12 C.L.R. 148.]

(8)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 31, 350—Improper valuation of claim—Rejection of plaint—Jurisdiction.—Where it appears to the Court that the plaintiff's claim is improperly valued, the Court shall, under s. 31 of Act VIII of 1859, reject the plaint. The section is not confined to cases in which the defect is patent on the face of the plaint, but the Court may exercise jurisdiction under the section at any time before recording judgment. A Munsiff in whose Court a suit was instituted, found, after issues were fixed, and evidence recorded to some extent, that the suit was undervalued and that the proper valuation would take it beyond the jurisdiction of his Court. He returned the plaint, and the plaintiff, after filing additional stamps, filed the same plaint in the Court of the Sudder Ameen who tried the case and decreed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal, the Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the Munsiff acted illegally in returning the plaint and the act of the Principal Sudder Ameen in trying the case was also illegal. Held that the Munsiff had jurisdiction to reject the plaint under s. 31, Act VIII of 1859, and that his order was substantially, though not technically, an order under that section, and the Principal Sudder Ameen had jurisdiction to try the case. Held also that having regard to the terms of s. 350, Act VIII of 1859, the Judge in appeal was wrong in reversing the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen. RAM GUTTY v. GOONOMONEE DEBIA, 11 W. R. 177. [R., 8 C. 126, 12 A. 553.]

(9) Civ. Pro. Code, s. 54 (b)—Rejection of plaint on account of insufficiency of Court fee—Procedure necessary before rejection.—A Court has no power, subject to limitation, to reject a plaint for insufficiency of Court fees without first complying with the procedure enjoined by s. 54 (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is, before plaint can be rejected, the plaintiff must have been required by the Court to make good the deficiency within a specified period, and he must have failed to obey the Court's order. RAJA RAM v. PARTAB BHASKAR, A.W.N. 1898, 100.

rule of s. 54 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, is binding on Courts of appeal, as well as on Courts of original jurisdiction, and s. 578 has no application, because an objection that a relief has been "undervalued" under s. 54 (a) affects the jurisdiction of the Court which is prohibited to entertain the plaint under this condition. RAM PIARI v. BALGOBIND DAS, A.W.N. 1885, 294.

(11)—Rejection of plaint—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 54 — Stamp.—The power of rejection of a plaint, under s. 54, does not arise merely because the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped; but there must be the additional circumstance of a failure on the part of the plaintiff to supply the requisite stamp paper within the period fixed. DHONDIRAM v. TABA, 5 Bom. L.R. 198 = 27 B. 330. [R., 19 M.L.J. 340, F.B., 32 M. 305, F.B.]

(12)—Ss. 54 and 117—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Suit for partition—Plaintiffs found upon preliminary examination of parties to be out of possession—Court-fee insufficient—Rejection of plaint—Procedure.—The plaintiffs brought a suit for partition of what they alleged to be the family property of which they were in possession jointly with the defendants, and paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 upon their plaint. The Court, after examining one of the plaintiffs and one of the defendants under s. 117 but without framing any issues, found that the plaintiffs were not in possession, and consequently ordered them to pay an ad valorem fee on the reliefs sought. The plaintiffs failing to pay the additional Court-fee within the time allowed, their plaint was rejected. Held, that this procedure was totally erroneous, and the suit was remanded under s. 562. NAKCHED SINGH v. JHAGRU SINGH, A.W.N. 1905, 170.

(13)—Plaint omitting to specify place where cause of action arose—Acceptance of plaint—Decision by arbitrators—Defendant not competent to afterwards object to Court's jurisdiction—Rejection—Proper time.—The defendant to whom the award of the arbitrators appointed in this case happened to be unfavourable, urged, subsequently to the award for the first time, a defect in the plaint, contending that the Court had no jurisdiction because he resided outside its limits and the balance in account on which the plaintiff sued was also struck outside such limits. Without deciding where the cause of action had arisen, the Court rejected the plaint under s. 53 of the Civ. Pro. Code. This order, the Chief Court held, was not sustainable because s. 53 authorises a Court to reject a plaint "at or before the first hearing" and not after the case had been fully investigated upon its merits. At the stage which the present case had reached, the proper course as the defendant's objection was directed against the jurisdiction of the Court, was to proceed as if the Court had done what it should have done at or before the first hearing, namely, had returned the plaint for amendment by inserting a statement of the place at which the cause of action arose, and as if such statement had been inserted by the plaintiff. MEGHRAJ v. KARIM BAKSH, 126 P.R. 1881.

(14)—Plaint when may be rejected—S. 54, cl. (c), Civ. Pro. Code, 1882 (=O. VII, r. 11, present Code).—Where the plaintiff sued to establish a mul-rायति right which by a Government order was not granted and also sought for the position of a mustagir and to set aside the executive orders of the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner, and questioned the validity of those orders, asserting that his rights in the village are permanent and that he cannot be divested of them by any order made by any executive authority; held, that the suit ought to have been tried and that plaint should not have been rejected on the ground of the suit being barred by any positive rules of law. NAWAB SINGH v. CHARAN RANA, 6 C.W.N. 411.

(15)—Description of property in plaint, sufficiency of—Summary rejection of plaint.—There is sufficient description of the land in question when the plaint states what the zemindari is, the name of the juma and in what mouzah it is situated, and within that jurisdiction, and what it was owned by the defendants. Prima facie, this description is sufficient for identification, and such a plaint should not be rejected in a summary way for inadequate description of the property. DURGA CHURN LAW v. KALA CHAND BISWAS, 7 C.W.N. 615.

(16)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 50 (b), 54 (d)—Return of plaint for giving description of parties—Non-compliance with said order—Power of Court to reject plaint.—Where a plaint was returned by the Court for mentioning the ages of the defendants and the father's name of one of the defendants, it was competent to the Court to reject the plaint for non-compliance with the said order. SOMAYAJLU v. SURAYYA, 7 M.L.J. 81.

(17)—Misjoinder of causes of action—Undervaluation—High Court, of opinion that there was no misjoinder—Order—Act VIII of 1859, s. 31.—Where the Civil Judge rejected the plaint upon two grounds, because it included different causes of action and because the suit had been undervalued, and the High Court were of opinion that there was no improper joinder of causes of action, the order of the Civil Judge was reversed and he was directed to proceed strictly in accordance with s. 31, Civ. Pro. Code. KRISTNA AIYANGAR v. PERUMAL NADAN, 2 M.H.C. 436.

(18)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 53, 54—Plaint not to be rejected by reason of insufficient verification—Procedure.—Held, that a plaint should not be rejected on a mere question of defect of verification. Where the verification is found to be defective the Judge is bound to return the plaint for amendment and has no power to reject it until default had been made in amending it within the time allowed by his order. TULSI RAM v. MUNSHI RAM, 57 P.R. 1904. (21 B. 570, D.)

(19)—Rejection of plaint—Non-production of documents with plaint—Reason for non-production—Revision—Act VIII of 1859—Reg. I of 1827—Act XXIII of 1861.—A plaint cannot be rejected for non-production at its presentation of the document sued upon or of any other document intended to be relied on by the plaintiff in support of his action. The effect of such non-production is that he cannot afterwards produce it in evidence at the hearing, without the sanction of the Court. But when a sufficient cause is given for non-production of the document in the first instance, the Court is bound to give its sanction to its being received in evidence, if there be no other reason, than its previous non-production, for its inadmissibility. The High Court has jurisdiction to set aside the decisions of the Courts below rejecting plaint under the circumstances stated above. Ex parte RAYA CHAND AMI CHAND, 2 B.H.C. 369.

(20)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, O. VII, r. 11—Rejection of plaint at any stage—Time for amending plaint—Waiver.—O. VII, r. 11, of the Civ. Pro. Code, does not lay down that the plaint is to be rejected before it is registered. It may be rejected at any stage of the suit. The provision that a time should be fixed for amending the plaint being for the benefit of the party, he can waive his right. SRI KISHAN DAS v. PIR BAKHSH, 126 P.R. 1888.

(21)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act XIV of 1882, s. 54—Rejection of plaint already registered.—The Court has jurisdiction to reject a plaint after it has been registered and written statement filed. S. 54 of the Civ. Pro. Code is capable of being applied at any stage of the suit. VENKATESA TAWKER v. RAMASAMI CHETTIAR, 18 M. 338. (22)—S. 54—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Rejection of plaint under, after it has been registered—Legality thereof—Interference of Court of Judicial Commissioner in revision where order to be revised is appealable.—When a suit came on for hearing, the plaint was returned for amendment under s. 53 (b) (ii) of the Code and for making good a deficiency in stamp-duty. These directions were not complied with. When the suit came on for a second hearing, the Court rejected the plaint under s. 54 (b) and (d) of the Code. Plaintiff, then, applied for re-admission of the suit and the application was dismissed. Thereupon, he moved the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in revision. Held, that a plaint may be rejected under s. 54 even after it has been registered. Held, also, that the Court would not interfere on its revisional side, since the plaintiff failed to appeal against the order rejecting the plaint and against the order dismissing the application for re-admission of the suit. TRIMBAK PATIL v. MADHAO RAO, 1 N.L.R. 103.

(23)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 54, cl. (b)—Plaint, admission, registration, and rejection of.—It is competent to a Court to reject a plaint under s. 54, cl. (b), of the Civ. Pro. Code after it has been admitted and duly registered. A plaint was presented on the 23rd June, 1902, insufficiently stamped. The plaintiffs were directed by the Court to pay the deficit Court-fees on or before the 5th July; the Court fees were supplied on the 9th July. No prayer was made for extension of time, nor was an order made in that behalf; but the plaint was directed to be admitted and registered. At the final hearing, the plaint was rejected upon objection taken by the defendant that the deficit Court fees had not been paid within the time allowed. Held, that the plaint ought not to have been rejected, but the Court ought to have proceeded with the suit, as if it had been instituted on the date the deficit Court fees were actually paid dismissing such portion of the claim, if any, as might in this view, be barred by limitation. PUDMANAND SINGH v. ANANT LAL MISSER, 4 C.L.J. 421, F.B. = 11 C.W.N. 38 = 1 M.L.T. 355 = 34 C. 20, F.B. [R., 34 C. 305 = 5 C.L.J. 270.]

(24)—Cause of action—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 32—Rejection of plaint.—Under s. 32 of Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, it was not necessary that the cause of action alleged in a plaint was likely to succeed. It was enough if it appeared that the subject matter alleged raised a fair question of claim or right for trial and determination between the parties. Where that was the case, a plaintiff was entitled to institute his suit and to have it regularly proceeded with and fully heard, and a decree pronounced upon the matter in question. In the present case, the cause of action alleged by the widow was the breach of the agreement, and this depended upon the meaning and effect to be given in the construction of the agreement to the language used, as regards the intention of the parties. Consequently, the Court was wrong in having rejected the plaint. LAKSHMI AMMAL v. TIKARAM TOVAJI, 1 M.H.C. 240.

(25)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, s. 32—Suit to establish right to property—No specific acts of ownership alleged in plaint within period of limitation—General statements contained in plaint sufficient to entitle plaintiff to let in evidence at hearing—Propriety of summary rejection of plaint as barred by lapse of time.—Plaintiffs sued to establish their right as proprietors and hereditary mukhyasthans to the devasthan of a temple. The suit was instituted more than twelve years after they were ordered by the Collector to establish their right in consequence of certain disputes regarding it. The Civil Judge summarily rejected the plaint under s. 32, Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, on the ground that apparently the suit was barred by lapse of time. Held that the power to reject a plaint is one that requires to be very carefully exercised. Although no specific acts of ownership as proprietors were alleged in the plaint, yet, the general statements which it contained were sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to let in evidence at the hearing. The Court was, therefore, not justified in rejecting the plaint on the ground that, on the face of the plaint, the suit was barred by lapse of time. UDAYA VARMA v. NAYAR CHAMBITHU, 1 M.H.C. 322.

(26)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, s. 32—Rejection of plaint registered on ground of limitation.—A plaint, though registered, could be rejected, on the ground of limitation under s. 32 of Act VIII of 1859. CHETTI GAUNDAN v. SUNDARAM PILLAI, 2 M.H.C. 51. [F., 18 M. 338; Appr., 12 A. 553.]

(27)—Malicious prosecution—Pleadings—Malice—Reasonable cause—Rejection of plaint—Amendment—Reference to facts not in plaint—Measure of damages—Amount to be fixed in plaint.—Plaintiff brought a suit for malicious prosecution against the first defendant who had prosecuted him unsuccessfully, and against the second defendant, the Subordinate Judge at Broach who had granted sanction to prosecute the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not himself aver, anywhere in the plaint, that the charge was made against him by the first defendant maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, or that the sanction for the prosecution was given by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held that it was proper to reject the plaint. No amendment of a plaint can be allowed when there has been long delay and when there are no sufficient grounds for it. In order to determine merely whether or not the plaintiff made out such a prima facie cause of action as rendered his plaint admissible on the file, the Judge ought not to refer to documents and facts neither mentioned in, nor annexed to, the plaint, nor ascertained by interrogation of the plaintiff by the Judge. In every suit for damages for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff should name the amount of damages which he sought to recover as compensation for the injury of which he complained. GIRDHAR LAL DAYALDAS v. The plaintiff did not obey this order but appealed therefrom under cl. (6) of s. 588, Civ. Pro. Code. Pending this appeal, the Court of first instance recorded a judgment rejecting the plaint under s. 54 (d) of the Code and directing the plaintiff to pay the costs. Subsequently, the appeal was heard and the order returning the plaint for amendment was upheld. Then the plaintiff applied to the High Court for revision. Held that the case was not one in which the discretionary powers of the High Court under s. 622 should be exercised. MASITAN v. (3)—Want of jurisdiction—Return of plaint—S. 57, Civ. Pro. Code.—Where several causes of action, over none of which the Court has jurisdiction, are included in a plaint, the Court ought to return the plaint, with a proper endorsement as required in s. 57, Civ. Pro. Code, and not to dismiss the suit. JIVRAJU v. PURUSHOTAM, 7 M. 171.

(4)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 57—Suit filed in an inferior Court.—Where a suit is filed in an inferior Court, by understating the value of the subject-matter, the proper course to be adopted is to return the plaint to be presented to the superior Court, and not to dismiss the suit. KANDU v. KONDA, 8 M. 62. (7 B. 487, R.)

(5)—Act XL of 1858 and Civ. Pro. Code, s. 440, suit in violation of—Return of plaint.—Where a suit is brought in violation of s. 440 of the Civ. Pro. Code or of Act XL of 1858; the plaint should be returned, in order that the error may be rectified. RUSSICK DAS BAIRAGY v. PREONATH MISREE, 10 C. 102=12 C.L.R. 405.

for presentation to proper Court—Same and not new plaint to be re-presented.—Where a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court the plaint re-presented must be the plaint returned for presentation and not a new plaint. RATNA BAI v. PANDOBA, 12 C.P. L.R. 15. (8 B. 313, R.)

(7)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 26-29—Plaint prolix or argumentative, to be rejected by Court or returned for amendment.—The plaint in this case had been drawn in contravention of the directions of the Civ. Pro. Code, and was most unnecessarily prolix, argumentative and full of matter wholly irrelevant. The first paragraph of the plaint was to the following effect:—"Suit for setting aside a fraudulent and fabricated deed of sale and for causing the defendant to be tried for forgery." The whole plaint was mere argument such as could be inadmissible even in a written statement in which usually more latitude is allowed than in a plaint. The High Court held that the plaint ought to have been rejected or to have been returned that it might be amended by striking out the reference to criminal proceedings and other unnecessary matters. BISHEN SAHAYE SINGH v. BEER KISHORE SINGH, 8 W.R. 295.

(8)—Suit found at the hearing to be undervalued, liability of, dismissal—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 30, 31 and 32, benefit of the provisions of, claimable only when presenting plaint.—If the plaintiff in a suit chooses to neglect the rules as to valuation of suits, he does so at his own risk. If there is any doubt as to what is the proper value to be put upon a claim, the opinion of the Court can always be taken and ought always to be taken, upon the point at the time that the plaint is presented. And it is at the time of the presentation of the plaint—and not afterwards when the case comes on for hearing upon the return of the summons and after the appearance of the defendant—that the plaintiff in a suit, which has been brought in a Court in which, with reference to its proper valuation, it should not have been brought, can claim the benefit of those sections of the Civ. Pro. Code, which bear upon the question of valuation. So, where, at the time of the hearing, the suit appears to have been undervalued and the Court could not have entertained the suit if it had been properly valued in the first instance, it is the duty of the Court to dismiss the suit. SHAIKH MUZHUR ALI v. MUSSAMUT BASOO, 8 W.R. 46.

(9)—Plaint drawn up in other language than that of Court, not to be admitted on file—Procedure—Rejection or return for amendment and presentation in Court language.—The plaint filed in this case was drawn up in Persian. That language was not the language either of the Court or of the District, and the High Court observed with dissatisfaction that if the official presiding in the first Court had known his duty, he would at once have rejected or returned the plaint for amendment and presentation in the ordinary language of intercourse and business in the district. MIRZA AMEER KOLEE KHAN v. RUSSICK LALL SINGH, 8 W.R. 495.

(10)—Act VI of 1862 (B.C.), s. 20—Suit instituted in wrong Court—Return of plaint.—Where a suit was instituted before the Collector, whereas under s. 20, Act VI of 1862 (B.C.) it should have been instituted before a subdivision Court, the plaint should be returned to the plaintiff to be filed in the proper subdivision Court, but the suit should not be dismissed. RANEE SHURUT SOONDUREE DEBIA v. KHEMUN KUREE DEBIA, 5 W.R. Act X, Rul. 87. [F., 12 W.R. 310.]

(11)—Suit instituted at Sudder station by order of Collector—Return of plaint for presentation to sub-division Deputy Collector.—This suit had been instituted at the Sudder station instead of at the Sub-division Deputy Collector's office in pursuance of an order by the Collector, and the High Court held that the case was one in which the plaint might have been returned to the party to file it in the Sub-division Deputy Collector's office. KALEE CHURN CHOWDHRY v. RAM GOBIND MOZOMDAR, 6 W.R. Act X, Rul. 104.

(12)—Plaint—Return of, with leave to bring fresh suit.—The defendant applied to take the plaint off the file, on the grounds, first of indefiniteness in that it did not show when the cause of action arose and whether the suit was not barred, secondly, that the plaintiff, who was resident out of the British Territories in India had not deposited security in accordance with the provisions of s. 34, Civ. Pro. Code. No application had been made by the defendant that the plaintiff should be ordered to furnish security nor had the defendant filed his written statement. Held, that the plaint should be taken off the file with leave to bring a fresh suit. SONAMALL v. SUNDARAM ROTTI, 7 B.L.R. App. 23.

(13)—Plaint—Returnable—Decree—Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court.—Though the mere fact of a plaint having been registered did not make it unreturnable to the plaintiff on the discovery by the Court that it had no jurisdiction, yet a plaint could not be returned after a decree had been passed thereon. JHANDU v. GURMUKH SINGH, 39 P.R. 1872. (88 P.R. 1869, R.)

(14)—Return of plaint after trial on the merits—Power of Appellate Court.—An appellate Court is competent to pass an order directing the return of a plaint to the plaintiff, notwithstanding a trial upon the merits in the Court of first instance, if it be found that the first Court ought to have returned the plaint under s. 57 (a). Act X of 1877, on the ground—that the suit was exclusively cognizable by a Small Cause Court. SHADI v. MUSSAMMAT AISHAN AND SHAHABUDDIN, 55 P.R. 1878. [Cons., 90 P.R. 1884; R., 118 P.R. 1881, 8 P.R. 1885.]

(15)—Appeal—Return of plaint by Appellate Court.—Where an order has directed a plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court, an appeal from such an order is an appeal from an order and should be stamped with Rs. 2. It not being an appeal from a decree, full stamp duty need not be paid. FAZLUR RAHIM v. ABU AHMED, 30 C. 453 = 7 C.W.N. 402. (26 C. 275, F.)

(16)—Ss. 16, 17, 19 and 57, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Return of plaint—Appeal.—Where a plaint has been returned to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court, it is not open to him to appeal from the order of return, after he has taken back the plaint and refiled it in the Court directed. BENI MADHUB DAS v. JOTENDRA MOHAN TAGORE, 5 C.L.J. 580 = 11 C.W.N. 765. [F., 11 O.C. 98; R., 6 C.L.J. 547.]

(17)—Act XI of 1865, s. 28—Chief Court, power of.—Where it is obvious that a Small Cause Court has exceeded its jurisdiction in hearing a suit and dismissing it contingent on a reference to the Chief Court, the latter Court can under s. 28, Act XI of 1865, (when the case has been referred to it at the request of the plaintiff) set aside such order and direct that the plaint be returned to him in order to its being presented to a Court having jurisdiction to entertain it. SHANKAR DAS v. GHASITA, 73 P.R. 1876. [F., 90 P.R. 1884.]

(18)—Suit being premature—Return of plaint.—In one case the Chief Court returned the plaint on the ground that the suit was prematurely brought. GUNGA RAM v. RAM KISHEN, 17 P.R. 1875.

(19)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 440—Act XL of 1858, s. 3—Construction—Suit by minor—Plaint—Return.—Where a suit is brought in violation of s. 440 of the Civ. Pro. JAGUDAMBA DABEE, 13 C.L.R. 405.

(20)—Erroneous valuation of suit—Want of jurisdiction—Procedure.—If it is found that a suit or appeal is erroneously valued, the plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court. It ought not to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. MISRI v. MUHAMMAD KHAN, 63 P.R. 1887.

plated by s. 348, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859. KAMEEKHAPERSAD MOOKERJEE v. MR. R. LARMOUR, W.R., F.B., 86.

(22)—Jurisdiction—Suit by agent against principal—Return of plaint—Dismissal.—Plaintiffs, who are agents at F for principals resident elsewhere cannot sue their principals in the Court of F. In such a case, the Court should, instead of dismissing the suit, return the plaint to the plaintiffs in order to its being presented to the proper Court, especially where the objection to jurisdiction has been raised and allowed at a very early stage of the suit. KOOSHAL CHUND v. T.G.A. PALMER, 1 Agra 280.

(23)—Procedure—Jurisdiction—Evasion—Cause of action—Relief—Improper joinder of parties—Return of plaint.—Plaintiff in order to institute a suit in the Judge's Courts, made the Mamlatdar a nominal defendant. He alleged no cause of action against him nor did he seek any relief against him. Held, that the plaint should be rejected by the Judge, unless the plaintiff consented to amend it by striking out the name of the Mamlatdar. When the plaint is so amended, it must be returned to be presented to the proper Court. SHRIDHAR HARI v. CHIMA, 10 B.H.C. 17.

(24)—Issues raised as to jurisdiction—Finding against jurisdiction—Return of plaint—Act XII of 1861, s. 3.—Where a Court registers a plaint and allows the parties to join issue on the question of jurisdiction, and afterwards finds that it has no jurisdiction, the proper course is, under s. 3, Act XXIII of 1861, to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court having jurisdiction, but not to dismiss the suit. KARTICK NATH PANDAY v. ROY NUNDEPUT MAHATAB BAHADOOR, 23 W.R. 263. [R., 10 C.L.R. 146 = 8 C. 126.]

(25)—Presentation of plaint to wrong Court—Procedure.—Where a plaint is presented to a wrong Court having no jurisdiction to entertain it, it must be returned for presentation to the right Court. MAHARAJAH DHERAJ MAHTAB CHUND BAHADOOR v. DAMOODER SINGH, W.R. 1864, 65.

(26)—Want of jurisdiction—Return of plaint.—It appears to have been the intention of the Legislature that whenever there is a want of jurisdiction the plaint should be returned. KHANDU MORESHWAR v. SHIVJI GORKOJI, 5 B.H.C. A.C. 212. [F., 23 B. 679 = 1 Bom. L.R. 176.]

(27)—Practice—Jurisdiction, test of—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court, cannot be ordered after hearing.—The test of jurisdiction is the shape in which the suit is originally instituted, and not what the plaintiff is found entitled to in the course of the hearing. Where, therefore, plaint praying for a declaration that a certain tax was illegal and also for damages for illegal entry into the plaintiff's house was presented to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, and the Judge, in the course of the hearing, finding that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration but only to damages, returned the plaint for presentation to the Small Cause Court, held that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction in the case, and that he was not justified in returning the plaint at that stage of the proceedings. MOTABHAI v. THE SURAT CITY MUNICIPALITY, 20 B. 675.

(28)—Jurisdiction—Court—Return of plaint to be presented in proper Court—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 57.—The plaintiff filed a suit in the Sirsi Court. The defendant objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In the first Court, the objection failed. On appeal it succeeded; the order of the District Judge being: "I dismiss the suit subject to the condition that if plaintiffs so desire the plaint may be returned to them for presentation in the proper Court." On second appeal, held, that the District Judge in proceeding to dismiss the suit was wrong: inasmuch as there was no jurisdiction to institute the suit in the Sirsi Court the proper order was, as indicated by s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, to direct that the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court. PUTTAPPA v. VIRABHADRAPPA, 7 Bom. L.R. 993.

(29)—Suit for land—Jurisdiction—Plaint to be returned in absence of jurisdiction—Act VIII of 1859, s. 14.—Suit for land brought within the district of R. Plaintiff alleged that the land in dispute belonged to district R. Defendant stated that the land was in district G. Finding that the land was in district R, the first Court decided that the plaintiff was entitled to it. The first appellate Judge found the land to be an accretion to an estate in district G, and at once reversed the decree of the first Court. The High Court remanded the case to the Judge in order that he might first distinctly try whether the land was, according to s. 14 of Act VIII of 1859, included within the local jurisdiction of the Courts in district R. If the land was included within the local jurisdiction of the Courts in District G, neither the Judge nor the Munsiff could have any jurisdiction to try the case and, under such circumstances, the Judge should merely have returned the plaint to be presented in the proper Court. RANEE SURNO MOYEE v. DOORGA MONEE DOSSEE, 10 W. R. 335.

(30)—Suit in a wrong Court—Plaint, returning of—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 11—S. 57, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882.—Where the Court in which a plaint has been presented has no jurisdiction to try the suit, the proper procedure to be followed will be to return the plaint. A suit was brought in the Subordinate Court of Haveli, under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, for the recovery of a sum of money, against agriculturists, some of whom resided within the jurisdiction of that Court and others within the jurisdiction of the Saswad Court. Defendants residing within the jurisdiction of the Saswad Court were proved to be non-agriculturists under the Act, upon which the Haveli Court rejected the suit and refused to return the plaint for presentation to the Saswad Court on the ground that the case did not fall within the provisions of s. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure: Held, (ordering the return of the plaint), that s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code applied, because (a) no option as to the selection of the Court was allowed by law; and (b) none of the defendants were dwelling within the local limits of the Haveli Court. LADHAJI v. HARI, 1 Bom. L.R. 176 = 23 B. 679.

(31)—Jurisdiction—Civil Courts Act—Court Fees Act.—Whenever a mortgage (not admitted by the plaintiff) is proved and its amount fixed, he may propose, if the defendant do not object, to redeem that mortgage. The amount of the subject-matter may become increased in value, and then further duty should be payable. If the value of the subject-matter appears at the conclusion of the trial or before that to exceed the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court should return the plaint to be presented in the proper Court. CHANDU v. KOMBI, 9 M. 208. [R., 14 M. 169.]

(32)—Ss. 53, 54, 57, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Properties exceeding pecuniary jurisdiction—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court—Re-presentation to the same Court after amending, by striking off some items, and properly valuing the rest—Jurisdiction.—Where the Munsiff returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, on the ground that the subject-matter of suit was undervalued, and that, if properly valued, it would exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, and the plaintiff amended the plaint by correcting the valuation, and striking off some of the properties, so as to bring the rest within the jurisdiction of the Munsiff, and re-presented the plaint with a petition that he relinquished his claim to the properties struck out. Held, in a petition for revising the order of the Munsiff, admitting the plaint on re-presentation, that the action of the Munsiff fell within the letter of s. 57, Civ. Pro. Code, read with s. 54. Since under s. 53, cl. (c) the Court may on itself amend the plaint at any time before judgment, it cannot be said that the Court has no power to allow or accept the amendment, when it is made by the plaintiff and sanctioned by the Court. KARUM BAYIRA PONNUPUNDAN v. AUTHIMOOLA PONNUPUNDAN, 6 M.L.T. 261 = 33 M. 262 = 3 Ind. Cas. 338.

(33)—Presentation of plaint—Jurisdiction.—A plaint valued at Rs. 1,000 being registered by mistake in a Judge's Court, would be rightly dismissed for want of jurisdiction: but the defect of jurisdiction should be noticed at time of presentation and the plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court. MAHARAJAH DHEERAJ MAHTAB CHUNDER BAHADUR v. DAMOODUR SINGH, W.R., 1864, 162.

(34)—Suit beyond pecuniary jurisdiction of Court—Procedure.—Where a plaint is filed in a Civil Court and it is found subsequently that the value of the suit exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court, the party, when that fact is discovered whether in the first Court or in the appeal before the lower appellate Court, or in the High Court, should not lose the benefit of the stamp-duty that he had already paid, but should have the plaint returned to him in order that he may present it with the additional stamp in the proper Court. MUSSAMUT EDOO v. (35)—Jurisdiction — Defendant's change of residence after filing of plaint—Plaint, return of, after registration.—If, by reason of the residence of the defendant beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, the jurisdiction of the District Court attached upon him at the time of the institution of the suit, such jurisdiction cannot be deemed to be altered by his change of residence after that time. A plaint becomes unreturnable to the plaintiff merely because of its having been registered. RAM GOPAL v. ASA RAM, 88 P.R. 1869. [R., 39 P.R. 1872.]

(36)—Returning plaint after trial—Power of.—If the Court finds that it had no power to entertain a suit for want of jurisdiction, it ought not to dismiss the suit but should return it even though after trial, for presentation to the proper Court. MUSSAMMAT PERMESHRI v. (37)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 53, 57—Return of plaint after commencement of trial, legality of—No additional Court fees leviable.—It is the practice of the Court to act under the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code and return, or direct the return of the plaint in cases where, in the course of the trial, it comes out that the suit has been entertained by a Court without jurisdiction. No additional Court-fees are payable in such a case. When the decision is that the Court has no jurisdiction, it is a decision that the plaint ought not really to have been admitted, and it should therefore be returned under s. 57 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and, where, on the institution of such a suit, the necessary Court-fees have been paid in a Court not competent to afford the relief sought, it is but just that the plaintiff should be allowed to ask without paying a

(39)—Return of plaint—Act X of 1877, Civ. Pro. Code, s. 57 (c).—Though s. 57 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, contemplates a return of the plaint, should an error as to jurisdiction be patent, when it is first presented, there is nothing in the language of the section which forbids the return of the plaint at a later stage in the case, when the Court finds it has no jurisdiction. ABDUL SAMAD v. RAJINDRO KISHOR SINGH, 2 A. 357. [R., 8 B. 313, F.B.]

(40)—Return of plaint—Necessity for re-stamping.—A plaint returned by a Civil Court to the plaintiff after cancellation of the stamp for presentation to the proper Court, can be received by the latter Court without being again stamped. MUSSAMMAT AMIN JAN v. IBRAHIM, 91 P.R. 1884. (7 B. 487, Not F.; 90 P.R. 1884, Cited.)

(41)—Plaint or appeal, not returnable for presentation in proper Court after admission in wrong Court and cancellation of Court-fees stamps—Provision is made for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff, if it has been presented to the wrong Court, in ch. V of the Civ. Pro. Code. That chapter prescribes the procedure to be followed for the institution of suits, and before summons is issued to the defendant. There is nothing in the Code permitting the return of a plaint or memorandum of appeal to the plaintiff or appellant, as the case may be, after a case has been heard on its merits, and the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. Even if the returning of a plaint is allowable, after the Court-fees thereon have been cancelled, such a plaint could not again be legally presented in the proper Court without new stamps being affixed to it. The Executive Government alone has power to remit the Court-fees, and no Court or Judge has legal authority to admit a plaint which bears only cancelled stamps, or to direct a subordinate Court to accept such a document. JAGJIVAN JAVHERDAS SETH v. (43)—Plaint presented within time—No signature of plaintiff in plaint—Return of plaint and re-presentation within time fixed—Limitation.—A plaint was first presented to the Court without the plaintiff's signature and was returned for amendment. It was amended and re-presented again within the time fixed by the officer of the Court, and it appeared that the suit was within the time prescribed by the law of Limitation, at the time of the first presentation, but was barred at the time of the second presentation. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation. THYAGARAJA AIYAR v. SANKARA AIYAR, 6 M.L.J. 213.

(44)—S. 53, cl. (b), Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Plaint not duly signed and verified—Amendment, on determination of issue, return for, if allowed.—Where, in a case, upon an issue as to whether the plaint was duly signed and verified, the Court finds that the suit is not properly signed and verified, it cannot act under cl. (b) of s. 53 and order the return of the plaint for amendment. The proper order in such a case is to direct the removal of the plaint from the file of registered suits; such an order will, however, not debar the plaintiff from bringing a fresh suit, subject to the law of limitation. BARODA PROSAD BOSE v. GIRIJANATH ROY CHOWDHURY, 2 C.L.J. 11.

(45)—Plaint seeking various reliefs—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court with reference to one relief—Rejection of plaint—Cause of action—Premature suit.—Where a plaint in a suit seeks various reliefs, with reference to some of which no cause of action is disclosed, or the suit is premature, it should be rejected, and not returned to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court, simply because one of the reliefs claimed may disclose a cause of action cognizable by another Court. —8.—Verification and Signature.

(1)—Duty of Court on presentation of plaint.—A Court ought never to allow a person other than the plaintiff to verify the plaint, save strictly under the exception which the law permits,—namely, where the plaintiff, by reason of absence or other good cause, is unable to subscribe it (see Act VIII of 1859, s. 28). Whenever the plaint is not presented by the plaintiff in person, the Court should satisfy itself that the verification is actually signed by the plaintiff. NURSING DEB v. RAM MOHUN MOOKERJEE, Marsh 176. RAM MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. NURSING DEB, W.R.F.B. 55 = 1 Ind. Jur. O.S. 63 = 1 Hay 379.

(2)—Necessity for plaint being signed by plaintiff.—The plaint in every suit must be signed by the plaintiff unless there is sufficient cause for his failure to do so. RAJA GOKUL DASS v. MULLU, 16 C.P.L.R. 103. (7 W.R. 168, 4 B. 468, R.)

(3)—Plaint and written statement, how subscribed and verified—Witnesses—Examination of.—Where plaintiff showed no bona fide intention to examine certain parties to the suit as witnesses, and did not complain of the lower Court's refusal to add them to the list, he cannot be allowed to put in their evidence after the arguments on appeal are concluded, and the decision is about to be given. It is a duty strictly incumbent on all Courts, without regard to rank or station, to see that plaints and written statements are subscribed and verified by the parties in person, except when unable to do so by reason of absence or other good cause. In these cases they may be allowed to be subscribed and verified by persons competent to do it. KUNOO SINGH ROY v. ESHAN CHUNDER ROY, 6 W.R. 213.

(4)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 51—Plaint, necessity of plaintiff's signature to.—Except in the case provided by the last clause of s. 51 of the Civ. Pro. Code, it is imperatively necessary that the plaintiff himself should sign his plaint. Where the plaintiff is not shown to be, by reason of absence or any other good cause, unable to sign the plaint himself, a power of attorney authorising a pleader in general terms to sign plaints for him will not render a plaint signed by such pleader in accordance with such power of attorney a valid plaint according to law. MAHABIR PRASAD v. SHAH WAHID ALAM, A.W.N. 1891, 152. [D., 22 A. 55; R., 21 A. 450.]

(5)—Verification of, by some only of the plaintiffs—Effect—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 51 (O. VI, rr. 14 and 15).—In a suit, where only two of four plaintiffs had signed and verified the plaint, it was held that, as there was no rule prohibiting a person named as a co-plaintiff from being treated as a plaintiff unless he signed and verified the plaint, the two plaintiffs who signed and verified were not suing on behalf of the plaintiffs who did not sign and verify, but that the latter were plaintiffs from the very first; that, though the plaint should be signed by all the plaintiffs according to s. 51, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, and should be returned by the Court for amendment, the verification by some of the plaintiffs, who were conversant with the facts of the case was sufficient; and that, though the Court should see that a plaint on being received is properly signed and verified, an objection as to the informal character of signing and verification which did not go to the root of the suit, could not be taken at a late stage of the suit, after one or two judgments had been passed in the suit without any objection having been raised as to the informality. CHANDI MAL v. DEVA SINGH, 48 P.R. 1896. (17 C. 580, A.W.N. 1886, 102, R.)

(6)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 28—Permission to verify plaint through person other than plaintiff, grantable by Court on good cause shown.—Under the provisions of s. 28 of Act VIII of 1859, before granting an application made to the Court to permit the subscription and verification of a plaint to be made on behalf of the plaintiff by another person, it is the duty of the Court to determine whether the allegations made by the applicant are true, and, if so, whether they constitute a good cause within the meaning of s. 28, sufficient to enable the Court to grant the application. MAHARAJAH MOHESSUR BUKSH SINGH BAHADOOR v. SHEO NARAIN SINGH, 6 W.R. Mis. 59.

(7)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 51—Plaint to be signed by plaintiff—Cases when signature is dispensed with—"Good cause" significance of the words.—S. 51 of the Civ. Pro. Code contains a rule and an exception to that rule. The rule is that plaintiff and his pleader, if any, shall sign the plaint. Where there is a pleader to sign, no exception is made. But for plaintiff's personal signature an exception is provided for specified reasons. When resort is had to the exception, such reasons must be asserted in every case. It is a misinterpretation of the proviso to say that "absence" is a good cause of not signing. It is only absence of such a kind as makes signature impossible that would make this part of the proviso applicable. But the words "other good cause" are of a wider significance, and, in effect, leave the matter to the discretion of the Court; for each case must be treated by itself. So, unless by reason of absence or for other good cause, the plaintiff is unable to sign, the language of s. 51 is imperative that he shall sign. CHANDRA MAL v. GANPAT RAO, 4 N.L.R. 117. (16 C.P.L.R. 103, F.)

(8)—Verification by person other than plaintiff—Notice.—When a plaint is subscribed and verified by a person other than the plaintiff, notice should be given to the defendant. Nothing more formal need be done by way of notice to support an application for the admission of the plaint, if the person verifying is qualified in other respects according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. PUDDOMOKEY DOSSEE v. SHAMA CHURN CHUCKERBUTTY, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 226.

(9)—Verification by unauthorised person—Removal from file—Pracice—When a plaint has been verified by a person who has not shown to the Court that he is a person competent to verify it, the Court will order the plaint to be removed from the file. OVEREND, GURNEY & CO. v. STEELE, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 39.

(10)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879), ss. 51, 52—Verification of plaint by person holding general power-of-attorney.—A plaint signed by a person holding a general power-of-attorney to sue on behalf of the plaintiff, is properly signed within the meaning of the proviso in s. 51 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879. Although there is nothing in the Code requiring that the verification of a plaint should be made in the presence of the Court or its officers, yet, having regard to the fact that, where a person other than the plaintiff happens to verify a plaint, it should be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that that person is acquainted with the facts of the case, it is desirable that the verification by such person should be made in the presence of the Court, unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient ground for dispensing with his attendance. H. KASTOLINO v. RUSTOMJI DEDABHAI, 4 B. 468. [R., 54 P.L.R. 1902 = 41 P.R. 1902, 16 C.P.L.R. 103; D., 2 L.B. R. 41.]

(11)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, ss. 17, 27—Suit by agent under letter of attorney as plaintiff—Death of party before judgment—Abatement—Legal representative—Verification.—A party residing within the jurisdiction of the Court appointed a person under letter of attorney to act as agent for filing and verifying a plaint; held that such a person was not an authorized agent within the meaning of s. 15 of Act VIII of 1859, and was not competent to sign and verify the plaint on behalf of the principal. As the agent had elected to put himself in the position of the plaintiff, the appeal did not abate on the death of the principal before pronouncing of judgment of the lower appellate Court and its decision on the merits was right, since it was not necessary to make the legal representative of the deceased person a party to the suit. THORNHILL v. TAYLOR, 1 Agra 215.

(12)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 36, 51—Plaint, subscription of—Authorized agent.—S. 36, read with s. 51 of the Civ. Pro. Code, Act X of 1877, shows that a plaint which may be presented by an authorized agent, may, in like manner, be subscribed by him, and that such subscription would be a compliance with s. 51. ROY DHUNPUT SINGH BAHADUR v. JHOOMUK KHAWAS, 3 C.L.R. 579. [R., 54 P.L.R. 1902 = 41 P.R. 1902; D., 2 L.B.R. 42.]

(13)—Plaint—Subscription of plaint, by authorized agent—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 51.—Under s. 51, Civ. Pro. Code, Act X of 1877, the Court may in its discretion admit a plaint which has been subscribed by an authorized agent of the plaintiff. MAHARANEE SURNAMOYE v. POOLIN BEHARY MUNDUL, 3 C.L.R. 15.

(14)—Plaint, verification of, by agent—Subsequent objection after previous sanction—Dismissal for default.—It is not competent to a Small Cause Court Judge to raise any objection to the verification of a plaint by an agent, when such verification has been expressly sanctioned by him at the commencement of the suit, and it is still less competent to him to dismiss the case for default when it has been argued by three pleaders of his Court on behalf of the petitioner. In the matter of RAJAH SUTTO CHURN GHOSAL BAHADOOR v. SUROOP CHUNDER DOSS, 12 W.R. 465.

(15)—False verification—Verification by mocktear—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 24.—The verification of a plaint signed with the name of the plaintiff by her mocktear, and which does not aver what is false, but attempts to do what the law estops her from doing, is not a false verification within the meaning of s. 24, Act VIII of 1859. ROSHUN JOHAN v. ENAYET HOSSEIN. W.R. F.B. 41 = Marsh 127 = 1 Ind. Jur. O.S. 44.

(16)—Practice—Suit by firm—Signature and verification by one partner.—It has been the practice of the Court in a suit brought by a firm, to allow a member of the firm, without special leave to verify the plaint on his own behalf and also on behalf of his co-partners. Quære.—Whether such a practice is right or ought to be allowed to continue? RAMACHUNDER v. CHOONEELALL, 12 B.L.R. 35.

(17)—Suit by partners—Plaint—Signature—Verification.—One only of several partners can verify a plaint. Partners of a firm may sign with the firm's name. On the plaintiffs describing themselves as lately carrying on business under the name of C and Co., held that there was no irregularity in the plaint being signed by C and Co., and verified by A.B., one of the partners. ROBERT LACHLAN v. SHAIK ABDULLA, 5 B.L.R. App. 89.

(18)—Plaint—Suit on behalf of firm—Suit in the name of firm—Plaint signed and verified by one of the partners—Misdescription—Amendment of plaint—Power of Appellate Court to amend plaint—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 578—Irregularity.—In this case the plaintiff was described in the plaint "dukhan Amar Singh Wazir Singh" and it was signed by Amar Singh Mudai. Objection was taken to the form of the plaint and its verification but disallowed and the Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court remanded the suit under s. 562 of the Civ. Pro. Code, for re-trial after proper orders to be passed for amendment of the plaint. The Chief Court set aside the order of remand and directed the lower Appellate Court to rehear the appeal as the original Court had not disposed of the suit on a preliminary point. The Lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that the order of the Chief Court precluded a re-trial, and s. 578 of the Civ. Pro. Code did not cure the defects in the plaint. Held, that the suit could not be brought in the name of the shop, and the original Court should have ordered the word dukhan to have been expunged on pain of rejection of the plaint. Held, further that one of the partners can sign, and verify the plaint on behalf of other partners also and the lower Appellate Court should have directed the amendment as to the description of the plaintiff. The Chief Court allowed the amendment of the plaint and again remanded the case to the Lower Appellate Court for determination of the appeal. AMAR SINGH v. MAGHAR SINGH, 103 P.L.R. 1902.

(19)—Ss. 51 and 435, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882—Subscription and verification of plaint by acting Manager—Acting Manager, "principal officer of the Corporation."—An acting Manager of a Bank is a "principal officer of the Corporation," and he is entitled to subscribe and verify the plaint for the Bank within the meaning of s. 435, Civ. Pro. Code. Where a permanent Manager, of a certain Bank, authorised to sue for debts due to the Bank and to substitute any person for himself, besides doing other acts of management, executed a power of attorney as Manager, whereby another person was appointed as acting Manager, and where such acting Manager while he was conducting the chief business of the Bank, instituted a suit for recovering certain debts, notwithstanding the fact that the power of attorney did not contain express authority empowering him to sue for debts, held, that s. 51 of the Code regulating proceedings taken by or on behalf of ordinary plaintiffs did not apply, but that the case must be decided with reference to s. 435 only. DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. OLDHAM, 21 C. 60, P.C. = 20 I A. 139 = 6 Sar. 331.

(20)—Verification of plaint by lunatic—His right to sue.—There is no ruling of law which renders a lunatic incapable of suing in a Court of Law, to obtain redress for injury, and he could verify a plaint where he is capable of understanding it. BRINDAPUN CHUNDER KUR CHOWDHRY v. KALI DASS SIRCAR, W.R. 1864, 268.

(21)—Plaint alleging frauds within plaintiff's knowledge—Necessity of subscription and verification by plaintiff himself.—Where a plaint happens to contain several allegations of fraud on the part of the defendants, many of which must obviously be true or false within the knowledge of the plaintiff himself, but has, however, been signed and verified only as by the pen of his general attorney, there is nothing unreasonable in the defendant's requiring the plaintiff to himself subscribe and verify the plaint, it being right and proper under the circumstances that he should be required to do so. THE RAJAH OF TOMKUHI v. BRAIDWOOD, 9 A. 505 = A.W.N. 1887, 137.

(22)—Verification of plaint—Fraud—Personal knowledge—Plaintiff's verification necessary.—Where the plaintiff sets up gross fraud in a case depending chiefly upon his personal knowledge, he should verify the plaint. PROTAP CHUNDER BANERJEE v. KRISTO KISHORE SHAHA, 8 C. 885.

(23)—Plaint—Verification by servant—Fraud. A plaint containing certain allegations of fraud and setting out circumstances tending to affect any possible question of limitation, such circumstances being peculiarly within the knowledge of the plaintiff, ought to be verified by the plaintiff herself and ought not to be allowed to be verified by a servant of the plaintiff. JARDINE SKINNER & CO. v. MOHARANEE SHURNO MOYEE, 24 W.R. 215.

(24)—Plaint, Verification of—Personal knowledge and information and belief—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, s. 51 = (s. 52 of the Code of 1882). In all cases, whether a plaint is verified by the Plaintiff or some other person, the party verifying should state shortly what paragraphs he verifies of his own knowledge and what paragraphs he believes to be true from the information of others. In the matter of UPENDRO LALL BOSE, 6 C. 675 = 7 C.L.R. 413. [F., 15 A. 59]

(25)—Benami mortgage—Disclosure of beneficial owner—Foreclosure—Non-verification of plaint.—A suit for possession after notice of foreclosure having been decreed in favour of the parties who appeared as mortgagees in the mortgage-bond, though it was contested that the ostensible plaintiffs were not really interested, an action was brought to recover the mesne profits of the land decreed in the above suit. While the case was under trial, L, whose guardian had brought the action, filed a petition, stating that he had nothing to do with the property, and that the real owner was C, who was in possession. A petition to the same purport was filed by C, and the Court directed that his name should be entered as a joint-plaintiff in the suit. Held also, that the suit could not be dismissed and justice denied on the technical ground that C had failed to verify the plaint as required by law. BIRJ MOOHANLAL MITRA v. BISHNU CHANDRA CHATTERJEE, 1 B.L.R. A.C. 100 = 10 W.R. 145.

(26)—Plaintiff when may be excused from verifying plaint—Absence or other good cause.—It is for the Court in each case where a verification is not made by the plaintiff to consider whether, by reason of absence or for other good cause the plaintiff is unable to subscribe and verify, and whether, if so, the person who has verified it is a person competent to make the verification. It is impossible to set down categorically by way of general directions, what shall be or shall not be considered good cause. That is for the consideration of the Court in each case, and it is only necessary to see that in no case is the plaintiff excused from verifying his plaint, except where, by reason of absence or other good cause, it is made out to the satisfaction of the Court that he is unable to do it. In re RAJAH LEELANUND SINGH, 7 W.R. 168. [R., 16 C.P.L.R. 103.]

(27)—Verification of plaint—Inability to verify.—In general, plaints should be verified by plaintiff; s. 28 of Act VIII of 1859 should be applied exceptionally and for the good and sufficient cause contemplated therein. Such causes should be judicially considered whenever pleaded. MAHARAJAH MUHESSR BUKSH SINGH BAHADUR, PETITIONER, 5 W.R. Mis. 33.

(28)—Civ. Pro. Code. 1882, s. 52 (= O. VI, r. 15, new Code)—Verification, particulars of.—A verification in a plaint was made as follows:—"To the limit of my knowledge the purport of this is true." Held that such verification was not in accordance with the provisions of s. 52, Civ. Pro. Code. (6 C. 675, R.)

Plaint—continued.—8.—Verification and Signature—contd.

The verification under s. 52 must be, if all the facts are within the knowledge of the deponent, a distinct verification that they are to his knowledge true. If he has knowledge as to some, and only information and belief as to others, the verification should show as to which he speaks from his knowledge and as to which he speaks from his information and belief. GIRDHARI v. KANHAIYA LAL, 15 A. 59 = A.W.N. 1892, 235. [R., A.W.N. 1896, 75, 18 A. 396, 10 C.L.J. 91]

(29)—Civ. Pro. Code (1882), s. 53 (= O. VI, r. 17, new Code)—Defective verification of plaint—Amendment of plaint.—In a plaint consisting of three leaves, the signatures and verifications were contained in the last leaf. The first leaf, the stamped paper containing the name of the Court and the names, description and place of abode of the parties was apparently not verified by the plaintiffs, because that stamped paper showed that it was purchased after the date of the verification. Held that the verification was defective, and that the Court should not, under such circumstances, dismiss the suit, but should allow the plaintiffs an opportunity of amending the plaint by making a proper verification. FATEH CHAND v. MANSAB RAI, 20 A. 442 = A.W.N. 1898, 110.

(30)—Plaint not properly signed and verified—Procedure of Court.—A plaint was drawn up on two sheets of plain paper, and it was signed and verified at the foot by the plaintiffs as required by s. 51, Civ. Pro. Code. They then sent the plaint to their pleader for being filed in the Court. The pleader, instead of attaching to the plaint the stamp paper requisite for the Court-fees payable on the plaint, as he should have done, took out the first sheet and transcribed the contents of it on the stamp paper. Held that the plaint was defective and that the Court should not dismiss the suit, on that account, but should have returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for amending it by signing and verifying it as it stood. Held further that it was the duty of the Court to return the plaint before settlement of issues, and that even if the issues had been settled, the plaintiffs should not be deprived of the opportunity to cure the defect in the plaint by amending it. GANGA SAHAI v. MUHAMMAD ALI JAN KHAN, 20 A. 444, Note.

(31)—Verification of plaint defective—Suit not to be dismissed—Plaint should be amended—Verification that all matters in plaint are true to his knowledge—Effect of want of personal knowledge as to some.—The plaint was written out on four sheets of plain paper and the end was signed and verified by the plaintiff, but the pleader filing the plaint, instead of attaching to it the stamps required for the claim took out the first two sheets and caused their contents to be copied on the stamp papers. Held that the verification was defective, and that the Court should not dismiss the suit on that account, but should return the plaint to the plaintiff in order that it might be properly verified. A verification cannot be considered to be defective in form, on the ground that although the plaintiff verified the whole of the statements contained in the plaint as true to his knowledge, he had, in fact, as to some matters, no personal knowledge. For the purpose of ascertaining whether a verification is a good one in form, the fact whether it is true is wholly immaterial. MUNSHI FAKIR CHAND v. MAHESH DAS, 20 A. 445, Note.

(32)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 52, 53, 578—Plaint not properly verified, amendment of—Procedure of appellate Court—Defect in verification, whether justifies dismissal of suit.—Under s. 53 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the Court of first instance, unless acting under the orders of the appellate Court, could not return a plaint to be amended after the settlement of issues: but if the plaint required amendment and the fact was only discovered after the issues had been settled, the Court could, under s. 53, cl. (c), amend the plaint or cause it to be amended at any time before judgment. The result of defective verification of the plaint is not necessarily to be the dismissal of the suit. Where, however, a material defect in such verification is not discovered until the suit gets into the superior Court on appeal, the appellate Court can either order the amendment to be made in that Court, or may order the first Court to do what it ought to have done at the proper stage. If the defect in the verification is merely of a formal nature, and not one affecting the merits of the suit, so that it comes under s. 578 of the Code, the appellate Court need not take any notice of it and is not bound to take any steps to rectify it. RAJIT RAM v. KATESAR NATH, 18 A. 396 = A.W.N. 1896, 102. [F., 5 C.W.N. 91; R., 22 A. 55, 23 A. 167.]

(33)—Return of plaint in suit as not properly verified—Presentation beyond expiry of limitation.—The plaint, in this case, having been returned as not duly verified, and not having been presented or registered until more than six months after the expiration of the period of limitation, was clearly out of time. ABOO BEEBEE v. THE COLLECTOR OF JESSORE, 4 W.R. 81.

(34)—Irregular verification — Dismissal on ground of improper verification after admission of plaint.—The Judge on appeal dismissed a suit on the ground that the plaint was verified by an agent, when it might and ought to have been verified by the plaintiff himself. Held that, the plaint having been admitted, the suit ought not to be dismissed for this defect, but the Judge might properly have required the verification of the plaintiff to be supplied. GOKUL CHUNDER v. BUREEK BEGUM, Marsh 344 = 2 Hay 325.

presentation — Subsequent amendment—Starting point — Limitation.—A plaint was both signed and verified by an agent of the plaintiff. It was pleaded that the plaintiff's signature was not essential because the plaintiff, though resident within jurisdiction, had no personal acquaintance with the facts. The Munsiff held that the plaint was not bad in law, and decided the suit correctly on merits. Held, that the signature by the agent amounted to an irregularity, that the defect was cured by s. 99, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908 and that there was no ground for interference in appeal. A plaint is not void or inadmissible until the defect in signature is removed. The date of amendment of a plaint is immaterial for purposes of limitation, unless the time expressly allowed by Court has been exceeded, and it is the date of the original presentation of plaint that determines the date of suit for purposes of limitation. DURGAGIR v. (38)—Trial by Deputy Collector—Non-verification of plaint—Examination of parties and their agents—Defective procedure.—In this case, the High Court was of opinion that there was not only an error in the facts on which the judgment of the appellate Court was based, but there had been, from first to last, defective procedure in the following respects:—(1) The plaint was not verified and the mere fact that one of the plaintiffs had given a deposition could not cure the defect of non-verification of the plaint of all the plaintiffs. (2) The provision of the law that, on the date fixed for the hearing, the Collector should examine the plaintiff or defendant or the agent of each and each may cross-examine the other, had not been observed by the Collector, and no opportunity of cross-examination had in fact been given to the parties. The decision of the lower appellate Court was accordingly reversed and the case remanded to that Court to be returned to the Deputy Collector with directions to adhere strictly to the procedure laid down in Act X of 1859. SREENATH DUTT CHOWDHRY v. (40)—Plaint—False verification—Dismissal of suit—Decision on merits.—A plaintiff was verified by one N, who, in verifying it, declared himself to be the tehsildar of the plaintiff, and to know that the particulars given in the plaint were true. When the case came on for hearing, the Munsiff found that the verification by N was false; and he then apparently was about to dismiss the suit on account of this false verification, when the plaintiff presented an application for leave to withdraw the suit, with permission to bring a fresh suit. The Munsif rejected this application, and dismissed the suit with costs, on the ground that the verification of the plaint was false. Held that the defendant having filed his written statement, and the case having actually come on for trial, it was the duty of the Munsif to have disposed of the case upon the merits, dealing in such a manner as he might have thought fit with N, who, no doubt, had laid himself open to criminal proceedings, if he made a false verification for the plaintiff. SHAMA SOONDUREE DEBIA v. (1)—Cause of action—Benamedar.—The plaintiff alleged that the three first defendants, with a brother since deceased, purchased a putnee mehal therein described; that the same was thereafter sold for arrears of rent, and purchased by the said three defendants with their own funds; but that the Collector, in compliance with their petition, entered the name of their mother, the fourth defendant, as the purchaser. The plaintiff then alleged a subsequent sale by the three first defendants to the plaintiff; that they, the said defendants, caused a kobala to be executed by the fourth defendant, and that they, being the real owners, became witnesses to the deed, and received the whole of the consideration-money; and prayed, by reason of ouster and disturbance alleged, for damages against all the defendants for breach of the following covenant contained in the kobala:—"If any one making any objection to the sale by me of the said mehal give you trouble in any way, then I will put matters straight. If I fail to do so, I will return the consideration-money. If I do not return it you will realize it by means of a suit." The Civil Judge in whose Court the plaint was filed held that no cause of action was shewn; and the High Court, on appeal, remanded the case to try whether there had been the ouster and disturbance alleged, and whether, under the circumstances, they constituted a breach of the contract. The High Court, however, dismissed the suit against the three first defendants, holding that the mother only was bound by the contract:—Held, by their Lordships, that the plaint disclosed a cause of action against all the defendants, and that the case must be remanded accordingly. One issue raised by the plaint was whether the kobala was really entered into by the mother as the agent and on behalf of the three first defendants, and by their authority. RISHESWARI DEBYA v. (2)—Failure to prove case set up in plaint—Admission by defendant—Decree for plaintiff as to such portion.—Where a plaintiff states in his plaint that the lands in dispute are his self-acquisition and fails to prove his averment, it is no ground for dismissing his suit altogether, if he is entitled in part to the relief sued for on the facts admitted by the defendant himself. NARASANNA v. (4)—Decree—Uncertainty—Relief—Supplemental plaints.—The first Court allowed a supplemental plaint to be filed, and passed no order on it, and, in drawing up judgment, wholly omitted to notice it, and gave a decree for an area, not according to the boundaries correctly laid down in the supplemental plaint, but simply for "the lands under litigation." To prevent the petitioner's decree from being infructuous, or, if possible, to protect him from unnecessarily incurring further expenses in applying for a review of judgment, it was indicated to the Court executing the decree that, where the lands have been identified in the plaint by boundaries, and also by trustworthy measurement papers, if possession cannot be given according to the former, it may be according to the latter. GRAY v. LOYAL, 1 W.R. Mis 19.

(5)—Plaint not stamped—Credit asked for excess paid elsewhere.—Where the plaint is not stamped but the plaintiff claims that the necessary stamp for the same relief has been furnished in excess in another suit, the credit claimed cannot be allowed. ASSAN v. PATHUMMA, 22 M. 494.

(6)—Stamps—Plaint—Necessity to write on stamp paper.—It is not at all necessary that the substance of the plaint should, as much as possible, be engrossed on the stamp papers. If the rule against the use of a larger number of stamps than is absolutely necessary is complied with, it is not material whether the plaint be taken to commence or end on plain paper. In the matter of THE LAND MORTGAGE BANK, 18 W.R. 326.

(10)—Inconsistent allegations—Suit framed either under cl. (2) or cl. (5) of s. 108, U.P. Act, XXII of 1886.—Plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,098 alleged to be due from defendants as agents employed by her to collect rent or as arrears of rent payable by them as thekadars of the village. The suit was entitled as one either under cl. (5) or cl. (2) of s. 108, Act XXII of 1886. The Court in which the suit was filed was competent to entertain it either as a suit under cl. (5) or as a suit under cl. (2) it was found that the defendants were liable under cl. (2) as thekadars. Held, that the suit was not liable to dismissal on the ground that the plaint contained inconsistent allegations. JAFRI BEGAM v. TALEYAR KHAN, 1 O.C. 88.

(11)—Verification of statement in suit for rent—Act X of 1859, s. 37.—The plaintiff brought a suit for rent claimed to be due for three years; he failed to prove his claim, and the suit was dismissed for want of evidence. He afterwards sued to recover rent for one of the same years, and recovered the amount. The Judge on appeal reversed the decree, and made an order remitting the case to the Deputy Collector to enquire under Act X of 1859, s. 37, whether the plaintiff had committed perjury in the first suit, the plaint in which was verified by his agent. The 37th section of the Act requires that the statement of claim shall be verified by the plaintiff or his agent, and enacts that, if the statement shall contain any averment which the person making the verification shall know or believe to be false, or shall not know or believe to be true, such person shall be subject to punishment according to the law for the time being in force for the punishment of giving or fabricating false evidence. Held that there was no foundation for the order, the averment having been made by the agent, and not by the plaintiff; and besides, there was no evidence that it was untrue, there having been no finding in the first suit that the rent was not due. TARAPERSAD ROY CHOWDHRY v. In execution of his decree, A obtained possession of the said property. B objected that the under-proprietary rights in the property were held by A and B, under previous Settlement Court decrees and that these rights were not affected by the decree for the proprietary rights obtained by A. On this ground, B claimed restitution of the property. In the decree obtained by A against B no reservation was made in respect of the under-proprietary rights in favour of B; no question was in issue as to under-proprietary rights in the suit: Held, (1) that the decree related to the proprietary rights of C's estate, and did not affect the under-proprietary rights held by A and B jointly and independently of C; (2) that the under-proprietary rights were no part of the property of C; (3) that, as A and B litigated as rival claimants to the estate of C, under a title different from the one claimed as under-proprietors, s. 11 of the Civ. Pro. Code could have no application. (11 M.I.A. 50=10 W.R. 1, P.C., Expl.) A party may join two or more alternative claims for relief based on inconsistent allegations, but is not bound to join them in a claim unless such joinder is possible without confusion or embarrassment and without impleading others as additional parties. The word "ought" in Expl. IV, s. 11, Civ. Pro. Code, should be interpreted with reference to the array of parties to the previous litigation and the nature of the estate or claim then claimed or set up. (12 O.C. 347=4 Ind. Cas. 763, F.) Under-proprietary rights are independent and distinct from proprietary rights. They do not form a part and parcel of talukdari rights. An under-proprietor has as complete an ownership over his land as that possessed by a superior proprietor, subject only to the payment, in certain cases, of rent or malikana to the superior proprietor. An under-proprietor can deal with his property as freely as a superior proprietor can deal with his, and an under-proprietor's interests are heritable and transferable. The main distinction between a proprietor and an under-proprietor is that the former is not only the owner or part-owner of the mahal, but is also entitled to engage directly with Government for land revenue, while the latter, though owner of the land within the mahal, is not entitled to engage directly with Government, but pays his assessment to the proprietor of the mahal. *SURAJ BIKRAM SINGH v. (1)—Pleadings—Object of pleadings.—The sole object of any system of pleading is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that each may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues. SAYAD MUHAMMAD v. FATTEH MUHAMMAD, 22 C. 324, P.C. = 22 I.A. 4 = 6 Sar. 515. [R., 3 Bom. L.R. 535, 28 B. 153 = 5 Bom. L.R. 892.]

(2)—Forms of pleadings—Cause of action to be disclosed in plaint.—The Code of Civil Procedure does not deal with the forms of action. A plain statement of facts in the plaint, disclosing a cause of action, is all that is required by the Code. It is illegal to hold that a suit for the price of goods sold to a purchaser, without regard to a contract regarding the same matter, would not lie, on the ground that the suit ought to have been brought on the basis of contract and that the plaintiff should sue for a statement of account on the contract. MUHAMMAD SHARIF v. SHAMSHER KHAN, 11 P.R. 1891. [Rel. on, 111 P.R. 1900; R., 91 P.R. 1901 = 113 P.L.R. 1901.]

(3)—Case where an error in framing suit was held not fatal.—Where several persons, who had purchased different shares of an estate, sued the manager to account for his management, and it was pleaded that the suit should be dismissed, the High Court, in regular appeal, although the suit had not been rightly framed, refused to dismiss it, as the plaintiffs were in joint possession; and the fact of their suing together did the defendant no injustice, and as expense had been incurred, and if the plaint were now dismissed, the plaintiffs would probably be barred by limitation. (6)—Allegation of title by plaintiff—Non-traverse by defendant, effect of.—Where plaintiffs sue alleging that they are the Sudder putneedars, and there is no traverse by the defendants of this allegation, then, under the ordinary rules of pleading, the possession of the plaintiffs requires no further proof. CHUNDEE CHURN v. MOBARUCK ALI, 12 W.R. 469.

(7)—Averments not traversed to be taken as admitted, not applicable to Indian Courts.—The strict rule that averments not traversed must be taken to be admitted, is not applicable to, in Indian Courts. DEO NUNDAN PERSHAD v. MEGHU MEHTON, 11 C.W.N. 225 = 5 C.L. J. 181 = 34 C. 57. (9 M.I.A. 287, F.)

(8)—Written statements, pleas of defendant recorded in—Evidence for the defence must be confined to—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 114.—In a case for pre-emption, a finding that the sale was a fictitious transaction was arrived at by the first Court and upheld on appeal. On second appeal, it was urged, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the defendants, in their pleadings, never alleged that the sale was a fictitious transaction and there was also no issue framed on this head and that, therefore, the Courts below had acted illegally in raising this point on behalf of the defendants and basing their decree on it. Held, the case for the defence must be confined to the pleas put forward by the defendant. In the absence of a clear statement in the defendants' pleadings, in the first Court, of the contention that the sale was a fictitious one and of issues framed thereon, evidence in support of such contention should not have been allowed to go on the record. The finding of the lower Courts based on such defence cannot, therefore, be upheld. RAM RAKHA MAL v. DEVI DAS, 89 P.R. 1905.

(9)—Pleading—Point pleaded in plaint and denied in the written statement—No issue taken—No objection taken in the grounds of appeal to the lower appellate Court—Abandonment.—Case where a lease was held not to be one in perpetuity, but one for a specific period. Where notice was pleaded in the plaint and the sufficiency of notice was denied in the written statement, but no issue was raised and no question as to sufficiency of notice was raised in the lower appellate Court. Held, that the contention as to sufficiency of notice must be taken as abandoned. PONNUSAMI PILLAI v. PASUPATHI MUDALIAR, 7 M.L.T. 106=5 Ind. Cas. 813.

(10)—Case set up in—Decisions not supported by—Legality.—The determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in, or consistent with, the case thereby made, and a decision not so founded ought to be set aside. P. T. CHRISTENSEN v. K. SUTHI, 5 L.B.R. 76=3 Ind. Cas. 719. (11 M.I.A. 7, 14 O.C. 801, F.)

(11)—Pleadings and proof—Specific relief prayed for not proved—Decree on general prayer.—Although the plaintiff had failed to prove the case on which he claimed a special relief, the Court in this case held that he had established a case in which, upon the plaint and the general prayer for relief, he was entitled to a decree. GOBIND CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. DOORGAPERSAD, 14 B.L.R. 337=22 W.R. 248.

(12)—Decision in judgment, to be founded on case set forth in pleadings—Original grounds of relief, not to be departed from.—The decision of the High Court in the present case was founded upon an assumed state of facts which was contrary to the case stated in the plaint by the plaintiff and devoid of allegation, or of any evidence in support of it. Their Lordships pointed out the absolute necessity that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. They directed that the rule should be observed that the statement of facts and grounds of relief originally related and pleaded by the plaintiff, shall not be departed from, and did not concur in the conclusion of law drawn by the Court below, even taking into consideration, if they could do so, a statement of facts which that Court assumed. ISHAN CHUNDER SINGH v. not made out, and it ought not to award a declaratory right that the plaintiff as reversioner is entitled to possession after the defendant's death. ALI GAUHARKHAN v. MUHAMMAD HOSSAIN, 159 P.R. 1888.

(14)—Practice—Pleadings—Decree at variance with case as stated by the parties.—Where, in a suit for possession of immoveable property, each party claimed that he was entitled to the sole and exclusive possession. Held that it was not competent to the Court to decree partition of the property in suit whether the pleadings were or were not amended. GAJADHAR v. GAYA DIN, A.W.N. 1893, 103.

(15)—Suits to be decided with reference to pleadings.—Suits must be decided with reference to the pleadings of the parties, and unless the Court is specially asked to determine a particular question, as between the parties, it is not only not bound to do so, but it would not be justified in so doing. RASH DHARY GOPE v. KHAKON SINGH, 24 C. 433.

(16)—Form of suit, Court not competent to change—Decree of Court not to be based on facts not found in pleadings or alleged by either party.—It may be the practice of the Courts to place a liberal construction upon the pleadings of the parties, but there must be some limits placed upon such liberality. As was ruled by the Privy Council in 11 M.I.A. 7, it is an absolute necessity that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. The present case falling within the above rule, the Commissioner's decision observing that "the plaintiff's claim was not properly laid" was held to be unsustainable. It was not competent to the Commissioner in hearing a second appeal to change the form of the suit and to pass an order based on a view of the facts not pleaded or alleged by either party. FOTA v. JOWAHIRA, 36 P.R. 1879.

(17)—Claim for too much—Party entitled to recover as much as he is entitled to.—A plaintiff ought not, by reason of his having claimed too much, to be precluded from recovering a proportionate amount, to which he is entitled, if the pleadings are sufficient to cover such a claim. The question as to whether a partial decree ought to be made in such a case is not one of indulgence to be granted or refused at the Court's discretion. MALIC AHMAD WALI KHAN v. MUSSAMMAT SHAMSI JAHAN BEGAM, 10 C.W.N. 626=3 A.L.J. 360=3 C.L.J. 481=1 M.L.T. 143=8 Bom. L.R. 397=16 M.L.J. 269=28 A. 482, P.C.=33 I.A. 81=8 Sar. 918.

(18)—Pleadings—Construction.—Held, that pleadings in the mofussil ought not, as a general rule, to be strictly construed. CHINKU WD. JETHO v. UTAMCHAND WD. KHAN CHAND, 2 S.L.R. 59.

(19)—Pleadings in Indian Courts, construction of.—Pleadings in Indian Courts must not be construed with the same strictness as those in English Courts. "Allowance must be made for a very inaccurate mode of setting forth the claims of persons, and the answers or defences to them." A defendant should not be held to have admitted every allegation in the plaint which he has failed to traverse. NATHA SINGH v. JODHA SINGH, 6 A. 406 = A.W.N. 1884, 140. (21 W.R. 60, R.)

(20)—Admission by pleading.—Where parties allow a suit to be conducted in the lower Court as if a certain fact was admitted, they cannot afterwards, on special appeal, question it, and resile from the tacit admission. MOHIMA CHUNDER ROY CHOWDHRY v. RAM KISHORE ACHARJEE CHOWDHRY, 15 B.L.R. 142 = 23 W.R. 174.

(21)—Admission of fact—Implication.—It has been repeatedly held by the English Common Law Courts, and much more so in India where the pleadings are less technical, that an admission of a fact on the pleadings by implication is not an admission for any other purpose than that of the particular issue, and is not tantamount to proof of the fact. AMIRTOLAL BOSE v. RAJONEEKANT MITTER, 15 B.L.R. 10, P.C. = 23 W.R. 214 = 2 I.A. 113 = 3 Sar. 430. [R., 6 A. 395, 16 C. 364, 12 C.W.N. 409.]

(22)—Pleadings — Statements of parties for purposes of particular judicial proceeding—Effect on subsequent proceeding between parties in respect of same matter.—In the Indian system of pleadings the allegations of parties to a suit cannot be excluded as allegations in bills in equity and pleadings at common law. Mere statements for the purpose of a particular judicial proceeding can only be conclusive evidence in another proceeding as to such material facts embodied therein as must have been found affirmatively to warrant the judgment of the Court upon the issues joined. They are then conclusive between the same parties, not because they are the statements of these parties, but because, for all purposes of present and prospective litigation, they must be taken as truth. SIVA RAM NANAJI v. JEVANA RAU, 2 M.H.C. 31.

(23)—Pleadings—Pleas of the defendants—Inconsistent — No rule of law to prevent.—There is no rule of law which prevents a defendant from raising inconsistent pleas, at any rate where the facts to which the pleas relate are not within his personal knowledge. SRI JANAGANTI CHINA VENKATARAJAM GARU v. KAPPOJEE LINGANNA, M.W.N. 1912, 413 = 15 Ind. Cas. 382.

(24)—Setting up inconsistent pleas—Allegations in plaint inconsistent with case afterwards set up.—Plaintiff sued for recovery of the value of two Government pro-notes. She stated in the plaint that the notes were made over to her by the defendant's ancestor in consideration of her refraining from putting forward certain objections to the grant of a succession certificate to him (the transferor). It being found that there was no evidence to substantiate the allegation, she put forward the plea that the transfer was in consideration of natural love and affection. Held, the latter plea was inconsistent with the plea put forward in the plaint and that the same was not allowable; for, if the consideration set up in the plaint were true, the plea that the transfer was on account of natural love and affection would necessarily be false and vice versa. Though a certain amount of latitude is permissible in construing pleadings in this country, a plaintiff cannot be allowed to abandon a case set up in the plaint and substitute an absolutely new and inconsistent case. PITAMBAR PARSHAD v. MUS-SAMMAT PARBATI, 8 O.C. 116.

(25)—Pleadings—Plaint containing inconsistent allegations.—Held, that, where the plaint contained a patent inconsistency, the plaintiff's case should have been thrown out in accordance with the legal maxim allegans contraria non auditur. HARI CHAND v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF JALALPUR JATTAN, P.L.R. 1900, p. 196 = 14 P.R. 1900.

(26)—Practice—Pleading—Inconsistent pleadings—Pleas of denial of execution and want of consideration — Allowable—Embarrassment to opposite party—Remedy.—Where the defendant in a suit pleaded want of consideration for a promissory note in addition to her denial of execution, and where no embarrassment was caused to the plaintiff by such inconsistent pleas. Held that the pleas, though inconsistent, may be allowed to be raised (18 A. 125, F.; 15 C. 684 = 15 I.A. 81, Expl.; 13 M. 549, Not F.). A party who has to answer before a fallible tribunal may plead inconsistent allegations of fact. Any embarrassments which may be caused to the opposite party by such pleading may be met under the Civ. Pro. Code in the same way as they may be met under the Judicature Act and its rules and orders, namely, by the Court striking out or requiring anything which is really embarrassing to be amended. VENKATACHALAM CHETTY v. KYAUK LON, 5 L.B.R. 251 = 9 Ind. Cas. 469.

(27)—Inconsistent issues—Non-execution of pro-note and coercion — Suit on a promissory note.—In his written statement, the defendant denied the execution of, and the consideration for, the note; and issues were raised on these contentions. Plaintiff proved the execution and the passing of consideration. Judgment was given in his favour. On appeal, defendant contended that the note was executed under coercion on the plaintiff's own showing that, as such, the contract was voidable. Held, the contention as to the coercion was inconsistent with the contention as to the non-execution of the note, and was, therefore, inadmissible. The determination in a cause should be founded on a case either to be found in the pleadings, or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. In this case, the contention as to coercion was inconsistent with the case set up in the written statement. The contention of the defendant that, on the plaintiff's own evidence, he was not entitled to a decree, will not prevail, because the contract was not illegal or void, but only voidable, which latter contention was not raised by the defendant in his statement. MA HNIN GET v. S. V. A. SATAPPA CHETTY, 14 Bur. L.R. 65. (15 C. 684, 11 M.I.A. 7, 14 C. 801, R.)

(28)—Pleadings—Inconsistent averments in plaint—Suit to set aside sale-deed—Averment of forgery and fraudulent inducement to execute document—Maintainability of suit.—Where, in a suit to set aside a sale-deed, plaintiff, a young woman, alleged that the document was a forgery and that it was brought about by fraud, and on the Court's asking her to elect which plea she would stand by, she stated that she denied execution: Held, that the suit was maintainable and was not liable to be dismissed for inconsistent averments in the plaint. In re AMAVASAI GOUNDEN, 8 Ind. Cas. 845 = 9 M.L.T. 210. (13 M. 549, Not. Appr.)

(29)—Two inconsistent rights—Claim in alternative—Easement and proprietary right—Pleadings—Decree.—Two inconsistent rights cannot be claimed jointly in the same land, though they may be claimed in the alternative. (34 C. 51, F.B., 4 C.L.J. 487, 11 C.W.N. 20, 1 M.L.T. 364, Rel. on.) Therefore, a decree cannot be given declaring both the plaintiff's right to a mala as also his right to the flow of water, through it. BHULU v. ASSAM BIBI, 8 Ind. Cas. 886.

(30)—Practice—Agreement—Specific performance—Failure of consideration—Unsuccessful attempt to rescind agreement—Inconsistency of pleas.—It cannot be laid down as an abstract proposition that there is any necessary inconsistency in a party who has unsuccessfully tried to rescind an agreement, afterwards claiming performance of it. But where the principal object of a person (claiming as adopted son), entering into a compromise, is to obtain from the second party a clear admission of his title to the property in dispute and immunity in the future from attacks upon his title from that quarter, and the language of the compromise necessarily imports an agreement by the second party to abstain from questioning the validity of the adoption for the future, if the subsequent conduct of the latter be at variance with, and amount to a subversion of the relation intended to be established by the compromise, there is a failure of consideration for the agreement, and no decree for specific performance can be made at the instance of the second party. SRISH CHANDRA ROY v. BANOMALI ROY, 31 C. 584, P.C. = 31 I.A. 107 = 8 C.W.N. 594 = 6 Bom. L.R. 501 = 14 M.L.J. 185 = 2 A.L.J. 31 = 8 Sar. 677.

(31)—Inconsistent pleadings—Custom—Pre-emption—Town—Village.—A litigant cannot be allowed to play fast and loose with the Courts. When a claim for pre-emption is based on the allegation that the area on which land in dispute is situate is a town, he cannot be allowed to contend afterwards that the area is not a town but a village. NAWAB KHAN v. YATAM, 15 P.L.R. 1911 = 2 P.W.R. 1911 = 9 Ind. Cas. 36.

(32)—Inconsistent pleas—Matter not within the personal knowledge of defendants.—The defendants, as donees from the wife of the testator, first pleaded in their written statement that there was no adoption, and later, on appeal, raised the contention that there was an adoption, but that the adoption and the will formed one transaction, so that the adopted son could not question the will. The defendants were held not to be precluded from raising the above pleas. The case in L.R. 15 I.A. 81 was distinguished on the ground that there the matters in both the inconsistent pleas were within the knowledge of the plaintiff who sought to raise them. In this case the matters were not within the personal knowledge of the defendants. Moreover, the plaintiff can under certain circumstances reserve a claim; but a defendant will have to put forward all his claims, since he cannot afterwards raise the omitted pleas in any other action at the suit of the same party. NARAYANASAMI v. RAMASAMI, 14 M. 172 = 1 M.L.J. 38. [F., 8 Bom. L.R. 921; R., 16 M. 121, 1 O.C. 174].

(33)—New and inconsistent plea cannot be set up in appeal.—Plaintiff sued for pre-emption of certain shops basing his claim on the ground that his house adjoined those shops at the back. The pleadings for the defence, admitting that a custom of pre-emption exists in the locality, urged, that the custom does not allow the plaintiff's claiming the pre-emption by virtue of his ownership of the house at the back of the shops. In the Court of first instance, the case was fought out from beginning to end on the said line of defence, but on appeal, the defendants sought to raise new points urging that the custom of pre-emption does not exist in the locality and that it does not apply to shop property. Held, defendants should not be allowed in appeal to raise the said points as they involve a new and inconsistent plea and if they are entertained the pleadings will have to be recorded afresh, the issues reframed and necessarily, the case tried de novo. Where a case has been fought out from start to finish on a certain line of defence, it is not competent for the defendant to ask for a retrial on appeal on the ground that he finds that he was mistaken in taking up that defence since, if this is allowed, there can be no finality in judicial proceedings. SHARIF HUSSAIN v. MUHAMMAD YUSUF, 88 P.R. 1905 = 179 P.L.R. 1905. [R., 81 P.R. 1906, 116 P.R. 1908; Overruled, 49 P.R. 1908 = 63 P.L.R. 1908 = 1 P.W.R. 1908.]

(34)—Pleadings—Inconsistent defences—When may be pleaded—Bond not executed—Bond executed under—Circumstances so as not to bind executant—Sub-mortgagee—Whether competent to sue for sale of mortgagee rights of his mortgagor—Benamidar—Right of suit—Benamidar mortgagee—Pardanashin lady—Document executed by such lady—Court to be satisfied on what points—Rule not applicable to literate lady of considerable intellectual capacity—Execution sale—Purchase by stranger—Subsequent modification of decree—Whether sale affected or not.—It is open to a defendant to raise by his written statements as many distinct and separate, and, therefore, inconsistent defences as he may think proper, subject only to the qualification that, if the defence is embarrassing, the Court may, under O. VI, r. 16, direct one of two inconsistent defences to be struck out and the pleading amended. The defendant pleaded that the bond in suit was a forgery and never executed by her, and, in the alternative that, if it was executed, it was done under circumstances which did not make it binding upon her. When the evidence came to be adduced, the defendant was allowed to go into both these matters: Held, that it was too late for the plaintiff in appeal to raise any objection on the ground that the defences put forward were inconsistent. A sub-mortgagee is competent to maintain a suit for sale of the mortgagee right of his mortgagor. Whatever divergence of judicial opinion there may be upon the question of the right of a benamidar to maintain an action in ejectment, there is none as to his right to maintain a suit to enforce a mortgage security which stands in his name, or has been assigned in his favour. The Court, when called upon to deal with a deed alleged to have been executed by a pardanashin lady, must, before it gives effect to it, satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorized by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. But this doctrine applies to the case of execution of a document by a pardanashin lady properly so called. If a lady is not pardanashin, or, though pardanashin, is literate and of considerable intellectual capacity, the Court will not be inclined to interfere with a deed which has been prima facie properly executed by her, or to interfere with transactions to which her consent has been deliberately given. When a property passes into the hands of a stranger by a sale in execution of a decree, then, even if the decree be modified, the sale will not be affected. ALI-KJAN BIBI v. RAMBARAN SHAH, 7 Ind. Cas. 167=12 C.L.J. 357.

(35)—Defendant, stranger to transactions upon which pleas founded—Whether it is open to him to raise distinct, separate, inconsistent pleas—Principle applicable to plaintiffs—S. 1, Negotiable Instruments Act—Provisions of the Act, how far applicable—Hundies in oriental language—S. 74—Presentment of hundies for payment within reasonable time—Effect of failure—Discharge—“Reasonable time” what is.—It is open to a defendant, who is a stranger to the transactions in respect of which he makes allegations upon which his defence is founded, to raise and set up as many distinct and separate defences as he might think proper, even though they are obviously inconsistent. This principle which has been applied to the case of a plaintiff is applicable to a defendant also. What s. 1 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does is, to save the operation of any local usage relating to instruments written in an oriental language. So in the absence of any allegation or proof as to the existence of any such usages, the provisions of the Act are applicable to hundies written in an oriental language. Under s. 74, the holder of a hundi is bound to present it for a payment within a reasonable time, and if it is not so done, and the drawer and the previous indorsees are prejudiced by the delay in presentment, they would be discharged and be absolved from their liability to the party guilty of such delay. In determining what is a reasonable time for presentation, the nature of the bill, the usage of trade with respect to similar bills and the facts of the particular case are to be taken into consideration. JOHAR MAL v. NAINSUKE, 6 N.L.R. 33=5 Ind. Cas. 745.

(36)—Changing frame of suit—Claim as heir impugning adoption—Plaintiff not to be allowed to continue suit as heir of adopted son.—N died leaving K his widow to whom he gave a power to adopt several sons in succession. K adopted L, who, after taking possession of the property, died leaving a widow and daughter. His widow who had been authorized by him to adopt, adopted one P, but subsequently the widow, daughter and the adopted son all died within thirty years of L's adoption. K, who had been alive all this time then adopted M who also died soon after, leaving a widow S. After the death of K, the present plaintiff sued S, claiming the property as heir of N, denying the genuineness of the power of adoption given by N to his widow K. The original Court dismissed the suit holding that, as plaintiff did not claim as heir of L whose adoption he contended as invalid, but claim as heir of N, he could not claim to succeed as the nearest collateral heir after the death of K. Held, on the admission of the genuineness of the power in the High Court by the plaintiff, that it was necessary for him to make out his title as heir of L, that to allow him to proceed with the suit as if he had sued as heir of L, would have been to change the frame of the suit and allow the plaintiff to make an entirely new case, and that, therefore the, original Court was right in dismissing the suit on plaintiff's failure to prove the case upon which he came into Court. ISHAN CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. SHARODA GOOPTEAH, 12 W.R. 487.

was not proved, held that the Court had no right to give a decree for the plaintiffs without going into the question of limitation, which also must be decided. KEAMUDDI v. HARA MOHAN MONDUL, 7 C.W.N. 294.

(38)—Pleadings—Plaintiff representing himself in different capacities in plaint and in supplementary petition—Suit not liable to dismissal when status of plaintiff not material.—It was urged in this special appeal that the lower appellate Court had erred in holding that the plaintiff-appellant's suit should be dismissed because he had first represented himself in his plaint as a zemindar, and afterwards in a supplementary petition as a shikmee talookdar, and these two representations constituted such a changing of the character of the suit as to be held illegal. The High Court however held that the matter in dispute was merely whether the land in question was inside or not inside the putnee lease. The question whether it was the putnee of the zemindar or of the shikmee talookdar was quite immaterial. The only question was whether the land in suit was land of the putnee lease or of the separate talook of the defendant; and the decision of such question could not be affected by the status or character of the giver of the putnee. WOOMESH CHUNDER GOOPTO v. RAJ NARAIN ROY, 6 W.R. 168.

(39)—Fraud — Pleadings — Plaintiff's case resting solely on fraud — Fraud negatived—Case on mistake, whether allowable—Alternative claim.—Where the pleadings are so framed as to rest the claim for relief solely on the ground of fraud, it is not open to the plaintiff, if he fails in establishing the fraud, to pick out, from the allegations of the plaint, facts which might, if not put forward as proofs of fraud, have warranted the plaintiff in asking for relief. If relief is asked alternatively, either on the ground of fraud, or failing that ground, then on some other equity, a plaintiff may fail on the first but succeed on the latter alternative. RAJENDRA KUMAR BOSE v. (40)—Pleadings — Fraud — Competence of Court to grant a decree where fraud proved is not identical with that alleged in the plaint.—Although in a suit based upon fraud it is, ordinarily speaking, incumbent upon the plaintiff to substantiate completely by his evidence the precise fraud alleged in the plaint, it is nevertheless competent to the Court to grant the plaintiff a decree upon the basis of a fraud disclosed by the facts given in evidence, even if such facts do not constitute a fraud to the full extent alleged in the plaint, provided that the case so disclosed by the evidence is not inconsistent with the case set up in the plaint. GANGA RAM v. joint proprietors A and B separately mortgaged the whole of the joint property (a house) to different persons. B's mortgagee who was prior in time, obtained a decree on his bond, sold and purchased the house. In a subsequent suit for confirmation of right and possession by A's mortgagee, he charged that the other bond and decree were fraudulent and collusive and that B had no interest in the property. All these allegations were found to be false by the lower appellate Court. Held in special appeal, that the plaintiff could not recede from the case he had made in the lower Courts and claim to be entitled to a decree for A's interest in the house. DURSUN SAHOO v. PRAYAG RAM, 2 C.L.R. 538.

(42)—Pleadings—Plaint and written statement both defective—Proper course—Fraud must be pleaded specially—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53 — Fraudulent Transfer — Intent to defeat or delay creditors — Mala fide sale.—When both a plaint and a written statement are defective, the proper course is to either return the plaint for amendment and require a fresh written statement in reply to the amended plaint, or to examine the parties in Court with a view to framing proper issues. A party who relies upon fraud must both plead and prove it. He is bound to give particulars of the alleged fraud and can succeed upon proof of the fraud as alleged and not of any other kind of fraud. Where, however, the question as to the bona-fide nature of a sale was not raised in the pleadings: Held, the lower appellate Court did not exceed its powers in framing issues on this question which, though not raised in the pleadings, had governed the case from the first. Where a judgment-debtor, soon after a money-decree had been passed against her, sold her land for an inadequate price to an employee of her advocate's father who lent the money for the purchase, it is clear that her intention in selling the land for a sum considerably less than its value was to delay or defeat the claim of her judgment-creditor. According to the provisions of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, the sale was voidable at the option of the creditor so defeated. MG. LU GALE v. VENKATACHELLAM CHETTY, 10 Ind. Cas. 922. (43)—Practice—Pleading—Collusion—Plaintiff decree-holder, collusively appearing as judgment-debtor, in prior suit—Non-maintainability of plea of collusion in later suit—S. 44, Evidence Act.—It is not open to a party to collusive proceedings to plead, in a subsequent suit or proceeding, his own deception of the Court which dealt with that case, or to shew that, when he seemed to be a judgment-debtor, he was really a plaintiff decree-holder. Notwithstanding s. 44, Evidence Act, a party cannot plead his own collusion, to avoid a decree to which he himself was a party. TUKARAM v. SONAJI, 6 N.L.R. 177 = 8 Ind. Cas. 1179. (5 L.B.R. 321, 26 C. 891, 11 B. 708, 20 M. 333, 31 M. 485, F.; 35 C. 551, P.C., D.)

(44)—Practice—Pleadings—Parties to be kept to their pleadings—Court making a new case for a party—Oppressive or unconscionable bargains—Court's duty to investigate—Second appeal—High Court—Specific ground on which appeal is fought in lower Court—Waiver by the parties of the other grounds—Presumption.—

As a general rule, parties ought to be kept to their pleadings, and the Court should not raise a new point for them in appeal. There are exceptions to this rule. One of them relates to agreements entered into between persons who stand to each other in the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, or trustee and cestui que trust. A Court, as a Court of Equity, is bound to examine into the nature of such agreements, where, on the face of them, or having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the Court finds prima facie grounds to suspect that the transaction is oppressive or unconscionable. When a question is fairly raised either at the original trial or in appeal, and it is met thereby one of the parties on a specific ground, though other grounds were open, and the specific ground fails, that party should not be allowed, as a general rule, to rely upon any of the other grounds in second appeal, if the allowing of that ground necessitates a remand for the taking of fresh evidence and thereby prolongs the litigation. In such a case the Court will presume, in the absence of clear indications from the record to the contrary, that the other grounds were waived by the party. JAGANNATH RANGO DANDEKAR v. BHASKAR GOPAL BHAT, 12 Bom. L.R. 795.

(45)—Divorce Act, 1869, s. 14—Cruelty—Pleading.—Cruelty must be specifically pleaded, and if it is not, the Court will not allow the issue to be raised or evidence given of it. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS, 3 B.L.R. App. 6.

(46)—Duty of party impeaching settled account.—A party who seeks to open a settled account must point out specific errors by his bill; otherwise he will not be permitted to prove them at the hearing. MOULVI NIZAMUDDIN SOWDAGAR v. SETH KASTURCHAND, 15 C.P. L.R. 61.

(47)—Suit to recover possession—Existence of a right of pre-emption no answer to such a suit.—Plaintiffs, as owners of part of the equity of redemption, which they had purchased from two of the representatives of the mortgagor, sued for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage. The defence of one of the defendants, mortgagee, was to the effect that he was one of the co-sharers in the village and as such, entitled to pre-empt the sale made in favour of the plaintiff, if that sale was a valid sale and that he was ready to exercise the rights. He urged that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable. Held, the plea was not entertainable, it not being competent for a co-sharer in possession to plead the existence of a right of pre-emption in defence to a suit to recover possession. IDARA T KHAN v. ILAHI BAKSH, 27 A. 78. (1 A. 892, 26 A. 61, R.)

Pleadings—continued.

(48)—Amendment of plaint—Prayer for relief on footing of defendant's story.—When the parties to a suit have come to trial to determine which of two stories is true, the Court cannot allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint, by abandoning his own story and adopting that of the defendant and asking relief on that footing, the question whether on that footing the plaintiff is entitled to relief being one to which the defendant's attention has not been called, and as to which he has had no opportunity of answering. SHIBKRISTO SIRCAR v. ABDOL HAKEEM, 5 C. 602=5 C.L.R. 455. [R., 10 B. 451.]

(49)—Amendment of pleadings without notice—No ground for setting aside decree.—The mere fact that an amendment in the pleadings, which the Court had jurisdiction to make, and which in fairness it would have made if notice had been given to the other side, was made ex parte, does not weaken the binding effect of the decree, and at any rate it cannot have the effect of nullifying the decree subsequently made in the suit. SADHO MISSER v. GOLAB SINGH, 3 C.W.N. 375.

(50)—Plaint praying for declaration, amendment of, by adding prayer for possession—Whether amounts to changing character of suit—Amendment allowing barred relief to be claimed, whether legal.—Plaintiff asked for a declaratory decree and for an injunction restraining the defendant, his landlord, from interfering with his possession of certain fields. Defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the plaintiff was not in possession of the fields claimed, and that the suit as framed was, therefore, untenable. Plaintiff then sought and obtained permission to amend his plaint by adding a prayer for possession and eventually obtained a decree in the Court of the Additional Sub-Judge which was upheld in appeal by the District Judge. On second appeal it was pressed that the amendment of the plaint should not have been allowed because at the time when the amendment was made the new relief asked for was barred by time, and it was held that the amendment of a suit for a mere declaration into one for possession does not change the suit into one of an inconsistent character. (5 Bom. L.R. 329, F.; 16 M. 319, 18 M. 33, 1 N.L.R. 117, R.) The relief for declaration is, in most cases, for recovery of possession claimed as ancillary to the latter and there can be no inconsistency between the two. But no amendment of a plaint can be allowed under s. 53 of the Civ. Pro. Code, where the effect of such amendment would be to deprive the defendant of the defence of limitation. SHRIRAM SADASHEO BALKRISHNA JOSHI v. GANPATI KUMBI, 2 N.L.R. 79.

proof substantially correspond. BALABHADRA PERSAD SINGH v. NAJIBAN alias BASMATIA, 4 C.L.J. 370=11 C.W.N. 85. (19 I.A. 221, 3 C.L.J. 481, F.)

(52)—Pleading and proof—Variance—Practice.—The plaintiff in a suit for possession alleged that the defendant took a lease at a certain rent from him some years ago, but was not paying rent latterly. The defendant denied the lease and set up title and adverse possession. It was proved that the plaintiff was the owner of the property, that the defendant occupied it as a friend with permission, and that there was no adverse possession. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession though the case set up had not been proved. ABDUL GHANI v. MUSAMMAT BABNI, 25 A. 256, F.B.=A.W.N. 1903, 18. (A.W.N. 1884, 285, A.W.N. 1901, 157, D.)

(53)—Variance between pleadings and proof—Suit for rent—Kabuliyat not proved—Claim for use and occupation—Alternative case—Amendment of plaint or issues—Mistake.—Where a landlord sues a ryot for arrears of rent alleged to be due under a kabuliyat, and the Court finds that such kabuliyat has not been executed by the ryot, but it appears, notwithstanding, that the ryot occupied the land under the zemindar, the landlord's right to have a further trial of the question, whether any rent, and how much, is due on account of the ryot's occupation of such land, depends upon the claim which is stated in the plaint. If that claim is in the alternative and thus the ryot has noticed that the landlord, if he fails to prove the execution of the kabuliyat, will claim rent for the occupation of the land, an issue ought to be framed to try whether any rent, and how much, is due on account of the occupation, and the landlord is entitled to have that issue tried. But where a claim for rent on account of the occupation of the land is not made in the plaint, the landlord is not entitled to have that question tried. Where the omission of an alternative claim in the plaint appears to have been from inadvertence or by mistake, it would be proper to allow amendment. But where there is reason for thinking that the omission was deliberate, it would generally not be proper. LUKEE KANTO DASS CHOWDHRY v. SUMEERUDDI LUSKER, 13 B.L.R. 243, F.B.=21 W.R. 208. set aside on the ground that the sale was invalid except in so far as it affected the rights of the widow herself therein, it was contended on behalf of the defendant, that the plaintiff, having sued as heir, could not be allowed to succeed on the basis of a solenamah entered into between himself and the heir by virtue of which he had acquired the rights of the heir, as this would be contrary to the rule laid down in 11 M.I.A. 7,—that the determinations in a cause should be founded on a case, either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made and that the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from—the Judicial Committee fully affirming the rule stated, held, that if this objection had been taken in the first Court, the plaint and issues might and ought to have been amended, but, as it was not so taken, and the substance of the case in the plaint was that the sale by the widow was invalid beyond her own interest, under the circumstances of the case, there was no weight in the contention of the appellant. NURUL HOSSEIN v. (55)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 123, Construction of—Written statement—Variance between case set up in written statement and that made by him at trial—Practice.—S. 123, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, contemplated that a defendant should, in his written statement, set forth the case he intended to make at the trial. The plaintiff must be held to the state of facts and equities alleged and pleaded by him in his plaint, or involved in or consistent therewith, and the same rule applies to the defendant also as regards his written statement. (11 M.I.A. 7, 11 M.I.A. 468, Appl.) Accordingly, in a suit in ejectment, the defendant cannot be permitted to set up at the trial a case of adverse possession against the plaintiff, while in his written statement, the contrary was alleged and the defence was based on purchase. CHOVA KARA v. GOVIND SHAW TANTI*, 2 C. 418. [F., 7 C. 560; D., 14 C. 592.]

(59)—Failure to prove case set up in plaint—Admission by defendant—Decree for plaintiff as to such portion.—Where a plaintiff states in his plaint that the lands in dispute are his self-acquisition and fails to prove his averment, it is no ground for dismissing his suit altogether, if he is entitled in part to the relief sued for on the facts admitted by the defendant himself. NARASANNA v. GURAPPA, 9 M. 424.

(60)—Pleadings—New case—Practice.—Although the plaintiff may have framed his suit in a particular manner, owing to the fact that he has been misled by various representations made by the defendant, yet the plaintiff can only recover according to his allegations and his proofs. He will not be allowed to set up an entirely new case, which is not even set up or hinted at in the plaint. GOPI LALL v. MUSSAMUTSREE CHUNDRAOLEE BAHOOJEE, 11 B.L.R. 391, P.C.=19 W.R. 12=I.A. Sup. (61)—Suit for possession depending upon a division in family—No averment of the division made in plaint.—In a suit for possession of a Zemindary, the plaintiff's title depended upon the fact of a division having taken place in the family. No averment of such division was made in the plaint, nor did the Courts in India as required by the Madras Reg. XV of 1816, s. 10, make it a point to be established, though some evidence was given of the fact. Held, on appeal, that there had been a miscarriage, the conditions of the Regulation being imperative, and the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut reversed. But, as the parties had acted under a misapprehension of the regulation, leave was given to institute a fresh suit within three years. *SRIMUT MOOTTOO VIJAYA RAGHANADHA GOWERY VALLABHA PERRIA WOODIA TAVER v. (62)—Cause of action alleged different from that proved—Suit for 'maintenance of possession'—Suit virtually one to get a rectification of an erroneous decree or a cancellation of an erroneous order in execution—Maintainability of suit.—Plaintiff, as mortgagee of 13 bighas of land, sued to redeem a prior mortgage. The prior mortgagee objected that he was mortgagee not only of part of the 13 bighas but also of another 15 bighas of land under four other mortgage-deeds and that plaintiff should redeem all the five mortgages. Plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption of all the five mortgages. He paid the money into Court for redemption of all the five mortgages and afterwards, applied, in execution, for redemption of the 28 bighas. The defendant objected that the decree gave plaintiff possession of only 13 bighas and that the decree was wrongfully framed. Plaintiff, without attempting to get the decree rectified, now sued for 'maintenance of possession' of the 15 bighas alleging that he had obtained possession of the 15 bighas lawfully but that one of the defendants, at the instigation of the other, had interfered with his cultivation of the 15 bighas or in the alternative, for possession, if the Court found him to have been dispossessed. It was found by both the lower Courts that plaintiff was never in possession of the 15 bighas and consequently, never dispossessed. Held, the cause of action alleged by the plaintiff, viz., possession and interference with possession not having been made out and the Courts having found that no such cause of action ever accrued to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit, which was liable to dismissal on this ground alone. Held, also, that, when the execution Court refused to give him possession on the ground that the decree had been wrongly drawn up, two courses were open to the plaintiff; he might either have appealed against the order in execution refusing to give him possession, if the decree had been properly drawn up, or, if the decree had been wrongly drawn up, he might have applied to the Court that passed the decree and got it rectified. He did neither but brought the present suit, which, in reality, was one to have the redemption-decree rectified and to have the order in execution set aside. Such a suit is not maintainable. BASAWAN KURMI v. NAKCHHEDI PANDE, 27 A. 174=A.W.N. 1904, 207=1 A.L.J. 628.

(63)—Plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that set up by defendant.—A decree of the Sudder Court held that, although the title set up by the plaintiff might be wholly bad, yet that a party, defendant, with whom the plaintiff had, by a deed of Solenamah, or compromise, agreed to divide the estate, was entitled and, on that ground, decreed possession. Such decree reversed on appeal, as the effect of the decree would be (1) to defeat the defendant's possessory title without giving him an opportunity of contesting the title of the party by whom he is turned out of possession, and (2) as it was a violation of legal principles which protect possession, and of justice which regulate the joinder of parties and the union of titles to sue in one suit. It is essential that a claimant, seeking to oust a party in possession of an estate, should establish his own right to the estate, and not rely upon the failure of the title impeached. JOWALA BUKSH v. DHARUM SINGH, 10 M.I.A. 511.

in cash and it was fictitiously entered in the sale deed as due to certain creditors of his to be paid by the vendee to prove "necessity." In his oral statement, the plaintiff said that the amount was entered fictitiously to defeat pre-emptors. The claim was allowed by the original Court, but was rejected on appeal. Held, that the claim was rightly rejected, for the plaintiff must succeed or fail on his own allegations. PALA v. BEANT SINGH, 40 P.L.R. 1910 = 8 Ind. Cas. 230.

(65)—Claim for proprietary right set up—Rights as hereditary cultivator proved—Suit not to be dismissed.—Where the plaintiffs, though they set up their right as proprietors in the plaint proved only their right as hereditary cultivators, the suit ought not to have been dismissed on that ground, but the Court could have tried the case and affirmed their right as hereditary cultivators. SHADEE v. ARJUN, 55 P.R. 1868. [F., 90 P.R. 1882, 105 P.R. 1884.]

(66)—Suit on bond—Denial of execution—Admission of part of claim—Previous transaction, between parties—Recovering secundum allegata, application of.—Although a creditor can, in some cases, fall back on his account stated, his account books and his actual claim for money lent, even when he has failed to prove a bond, still he cannot be allowed to allege one sort of claim and prove another sort of claim. When a claim is based on a bond (alleged to have been executed, after the accounts had been understood by the debtor, in lieu of previous bonds), and on that only, the creditor, when the bond has not been proved, has no right to fall back on the account stated. On the principle of recovering secundum allegata et probata, the Court cannot remand the case for decision on the accounts, that being a matter which the creditor in fact never asked for originally, having chosen to rely on the bond exclusively. GHAILA SINGH v. AHMED KHAN, 32 P.R. 1876.

(67)—Relief in suits—Pleadings and issues—Secundum allegata et probata.—Cases must be tried and determined secundum allegata et probata; and it is contrary to this principle to decide a cause upon a point not raised in the pleadings, nor embodied in an issue. JOYTARA DASSEE v. (68)—Practice—Setting up of defence—Failure of defence of adoption—Defence that plaintiff's deed of title not valid, not open—Pleas.—The plaintiff, claiming under a deed of gift by the daughter of the owner of the property, sued to recover possession of the property from defendant, who claimed to be an adopted son of the owner. Failing in his defence as to adoption, the defendant set up a case that the plaintiff's deed of gift was invalid. Held, that it was not open to the defendant to take up that line of defence. Ex hypothesi he was a person who had no title to the property. The plaintiff was a person claiming under a registered deed of gift executed in his favour by the person who was admittedly the heir of the last male holder. The plaintiff had, therefore, a prima facie title and must succeed, unless the defendant could show some better title in himself. TRIMBAK KHIKAJI v. SHANKER SHAMRAO, 13 Bom. L.R. 947.

(69)—Pleadings—Suit for money—Objection to maintainability of suit—Defendant's consent while giving evidence to plaintiffs recovering the amount, whether validates suit—Issue not framed—Right of Appellate Court to adjudge on questions, not the subject of an issue.—Where, in a suit for money, an issue is framed as to plaintiff's right to maintain it, the mere consent of the defendant, while being examined as a witness, to plaintiff's recovering the amount, will not be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to maintain the suit. Where no issue on a matter is raised by the pleadings and the Court of first instance has not dealt with it, it is not competent to the appellate Court to entertain the question in appeal. MALAIKOLANDU CHETTIAR v. PERIA PILLAY, 10 Ind. Cas. 351 = 2 M.W.N. 1911, 393.

(70)—Suit for confirmation of possession—Change in form of suit—Suit for recovery of possession—Bona fides.—When a plaintiff has a bona fide case, which he has proved in substance, but not in form, there are circumstances, under which the Courts assist him. But, where a plaintiff put forward a distinct allegation of possession founded on a deed of sale, which is found by the Court to be false, this is not a case in which the general rule ought to be relaxed and the plaintiff assisted to establish a case which he did not originally put forward. TERIETPUT SINGH v. (71)—Benami mortgage—Title—Proof.—In a mortgage deed, the mortgagee was described as one "M.J.B., otherwise B K, the wife of M," and it recited that the consideration-money was advanced by her. M J B. was not the wife of M, but his concubine. In the absence of satisfactory proof that the money advanced was M. J.B.'s separate property, and upon evidence that the consideration money was really advanced by M. Held (affirming the decrees of the Courts in India) that the preponderance of the evidence was in favour of M being the person who advanced the money, and that the transaction was to be considered as benamee, or in trust for M, as mortgagee. BHOWUN DOSS v. (75) — Suit to redeem converted into a suit to recover possession on payment of a charge—Compromise in settlement Court not equivalent to a mortgage—Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II, art. 124—Adverse possession—Charge—Transfer of Property Act, s. 100—Recovery of the whole share.—On the basis of a compromise, a decree was passed, in favour of the ancestors of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, by the Settlement Courts, to the effect that they would be entitled to the possession of their share in the property, if they paid their share of the family debts, and if they failed to do so, the defendants would be entitled to take possession of the whole of their shares. It was also added in the compromise, that, if afterwards the plaintiff and his co-sharers paid the whole of the debt due from them, they would be entitled to recover possession of their shares. The defendants paid the entire amount and took possession of the whole share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers. The plaintiff now sought to redeem his own share, as well as that of his co-sharers, on the payment of the amount due from him and his co-sharers on account of their share. The defendants pleaded that the suit to redeem was not maintainable and was also barred by limitation, as they had been in possession for more than 12 years. They also pleaded that the plaintiff could not recover more than his own share. Held, that the above compromise did not create the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties to it, and no suit for redemption could lie, but the suit of the plaintiffs should not be dismissed, merely because the plaintiff had stated in his plaint that the above compromise had created such a relationship. The suit was actually for recovery of the property on payment of a certain charge and should have been decreed as such. The actual facts were clear from the pleadings, and the defendants were not in any way prejudiced by such a view of the case. Held, further, that the suit being really one for possession of the property on payment of a charge, it was governed by art. 144 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and as the defendants had not succeeded in showing that they had been in adverse possession for more than 12 years before the date, on which the present suit was instituted, it was not barred by limitation. Held, also, that the plaintiff could recover not only his own share, but also those of his other co-sharers, on payment of the amount due from

(76) — Practice—Second appeal—Change of pleading not allowed.—Where the plaintiff sued for possession by avoidance of a deed of gift and failed, he cannot, in second appeal, claim as heir of the donee, nor can he claim to set aside a sale by the donee as being unauthorised by the deed of gift. KANHIA v. MAHIN LAL, 10 A. 495 = A.W.N. 1888, 181.

(77) — Plaint, plaintiff how far bound by case set up in his—Declaration of proprietary title and ejectment of tenant, suit by talukdar for—Denial of taluqdari title and assertion of adverse title by defendant—Burden of proof—Indian Evidence Act, ss. 102 and 110—Presumption of ownership—Procedure—Act I of 1869, s. 3.—In 1886, the plaintiff served the defendants with a notice of ejectment under the provisions of ss. 42 and 43 of Act XIX of 1868, the Rent Act then in force in Oudh, in respect of a village which the plaintiff had acquired under the provisions of s. 3 of Act I of 1869. On the 11th May, 1886, the defendants sued under the same Act contesting the notice, which was finally cancelled on the 6th May, 1887. On the 2nd January, 1888, the plaintiff brought a suit in which he prayed for a declaration of his proprietary right to the village and for ejectment of the defendants from that village, because the latter, being lessees of the village, denied in the suit to contest the notice of ejectment, the tenancy, and set up an under-proprietary title to the village. According to the plaint the tenancy commenced in 1866 with a lease for one year. The defence to the suit was substantially a denial that the relationship of landlord and tenants between the plaintiff and the defendants came into existence in 1866 or at any time, and an assertion that the defendants were entitled to possession of the village as under-proprietors, and that the suit was barred by limitation. It was admitted that the village was a portion of the plaintiff's taluqa and that rent had been paid to him for the village. The question was on whom did the burden of proof lie. Held, that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff. In view of the provisions of s. 102, Indian Evidence Act, the plaintiff would fail if no evidence were given on either side, notwithstanding that the village was a part of his taluqa and that rent had been paid to him. The defendants had admittedly been in possession for more than 12 years; and possession, according to s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act, was prima facie evidence of ownership. The defendants having denied the plaintiff's title and set up adverse possession of the village, the plaintiff was bound to give some evidence that the possession of the defendants had not been adverse for 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, that is to say, some evidence that his title as taluqdar was subsisting when the suit was instituted. The plaintiff's case, as stated in the plaint was, that in 1866 he gave the defendants a lease of the village for one year, since when they had held as tenants. In the lower Court, the case was tried on the issue generally whether the defendants were lessees or under-proprietors. In appeal the plaintiff contended that he ought not to be tied down to the statements that the relationship of landlord and tenants between him and the defendants commenced in 1866 and be taken to have failed in his suit if that statement was not proved, but should be allowed to prove the existence of such relationship irrespective of that statement. Held, that the substance and the merits of the plaintiff's case, as made in the plaint were that the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the defendants came into existence in 1866 and that that case ought not to have been departed from. The rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ishan Chandra Singh v. Shama Charan Bhatt that "the state of facts, and the equities, and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff shall not be departed from" was consistent with and was not to be confounded with another rule laid down by their Lordships in Hamuman Prasad Panday's case that "the substance and the merits of the case are to be kept constantly in view" by the Courts in this country. BHAGWAN BAKHSH v. KAMTA PARSHAD, 6 O.C. 119. [R., 3 O.C. 145.]

(78)—Plaintiff setting up a new case not made in the plaint—Possession, suit for.—The case which the plaintiffs made in the plaint and which was embodied in the issues was that the share in dispute was the property of one D, that on his death his widow M inherited it, and that they (plaintiffs) as the reversionary heirs of D were entitled to it as she was dead. The Subordinate Judge held "that the property never belonged to M," but on the contention of the plaintiffs that the share had been granted to M for maintenance and that they as the representatives of the grantors were entitled to resume it at her death, decreed their claim. Held, that the plaintiffs could not be permitted to set up a new case which they did not make in their plaint; and that as they failed to prove the case upon which they came into Court, their suit should have been dismissed. GAJADHAR BUX SINGH v. MITAN SINGH, 6 O.C. 247.

(79)—Case set up in appeal different from that in the plaint.—Where the plaintiffs in a suit for partition sued for a certain share on a specified title, but the lower Court held that they were entitled only to a lesser share on that title, and the plaintiffs in appeal set up a claim to a larger share based on a finding of the lower Court but inconsistent with the title set up in the plaint, held that such a plea could not be set up in appeal. ILAH KHAN v. SHER ALI KHAN, 26 A. 331.

share of the property of her deceased brother in the hands of his widow claiming to have been given by her deceased husband in lieu of her dower debt, held, that the plaintiff-appellant cannot raise, in appeal, the question that an account should be taken of the profits of the property so as to ascertain how much of the dower-debt had been satisfied out of the income of the property in the respondent's possession, inasmuch as there was no prayer or claim for an account in the plaint and no issue as to profits was raised at the trial. HUMERA BIBI v. ZUBEDA BIBI, A.W.N. 1905, 125=2 A.L.J. 485. (6 M.L.A. 211, 14 M.L.A. 377, F.)

(82)—Pleadings—Ex-parte decree—Appeal—Supplementing evidence.—Where, in a suit under Act X of 1859, the Collector gives a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the ground of an ex-parte inquiry and report, and the plaintiff in appeal chooses to rely on the Collector's opinion, he cannot, after an adverse decision, supplement his case by other evidence. WOOMANATH ROY CHOWDHURY v. SREENATH SINGH, 15 W.R. 260.

(83)—Special appeal—New title.—The defendants who in Court below unsuccessfully claimed to retain possession of some land under a Kabala from a Mahomedan widow, who was alleged by them to have been absolutely entitled thereto under her right of dower, could not, in special appeal, set up for the first time that the widow was entitled to a share by inheritance, if not as denmohur, no case of that kind having been made in the Courts below, and no enquiry asked for into the state of the family or as to whether any and what share came to the widow. AMBIKA CHARAN DUTT v. NADIR HOSSEIN, 2 B.L.R. A.C. 258=11 W.R. 133.

(84)—Contract to transfer—Question not raised in first Court—Pleadings.—The defendant who had not raised the issue in the first Court that there was a valid contract to transfer could not, on failing to prove the actual transfer set up by him, be allowed to raise it in the appellate Court. IMMADIPATTAM THIRUGNANA v. PERIYA DORASAMI, 5 C.W.N. 217=28 I.A. 46=24 M. 377, P.C.=7 Sar. 811. [Expl., 16 M.L.J. 395=1 M.L.T. 153=29 M. 336.]

(85)—Plaint clumsily drawn—Reading issues to ascertain the case—Difficulty arising from confusion in the plaint—Liability of appellant to pay costs—Appeal—Practice.—Where the plaint was clumsily drawn, it was held in second appeal that the plaint ought to be read with the issues framed in the case to ascertain the plaintiff's case. As much of the difficulty in the appeal arose from the confusion in the plaint, the Appellant, the plaintiff in the lower Court, was directed to pay the costs of the respondent in the appeal, though the High Court reversed the decree of the lower appellate Court and remanded the case for disposal according to law. GADIDASS SURYANARAYANA ROW v. GADIDASS RAJYA LAKSHMAMMA alias RAJYAM, 8 M.L.T. 202=7 Ind. Cas. 800.

(86)—Revision—Material irregularity—Defence not set up in the first Court—Punjab Courts Act XVIII of 1884, as amended, s. 70 (a).—Held, that the defendant must be limited to the defence set up by him in the first Court. It is a material irregularity on the part of an appellate Court to go outside the merits and consider a technical point not raised in the original pleading. So where a defendant simply pleads in the first Court that he has nothing to do with the contract or its breach, he cannot be allowed to appeal on the ground that he is not legally liable for damages even if he made and broke it. KARAM BASKH v. ABDUL KARIM, 81 P.W.R. 1912=146 P.L.R. 1912=14 Ind. Cas. 1008.

(87)—Order of remand—On a point not arising from the pleadings—Counter allegation by defendant—Necessity of proof.—Where an order of remand was mistakenly issued on an issue which did not really arise between the parties, but the lower appellate Court on remand came to a finding of facts which correctly disposed of the case, held that, although the Judge of the lower appellate Court had not dealt properly with the evidence on the record with reference to the precise issue which was sent down to him, his default in that respect ought not to govern the final result between the plaintiff and the defendant. Where the defendant, instead of merely denying the plaintiff's allegation, raises a counter-allegation in his written statement, he is bound to prove the counter-allegation. MAHOMED HASHIM v. KALLE CHARAN BANERJEE, 13 W.R. 91.

(88)—Withdrawal of first suit for possession of land as owner—Second suit for establishment of easement over land claimed in the first suit.—There is no legal impediment to a plaintiff, suing for possession of land as owner and withdrawing such suit with liberty to sue again, bringing a second suit, not for recovery of the land itself, as owner, but for establishing an easement over it. "If he (plaintiff) has enjoyed the right, by user, for such a long period as was sufficient to confer on him a right by prescription, the circumstance that, in a previous suit, he had erroneously stated that he was the owner, would not deprive him of the right of easement, which he had already acquired." CHADAMMI LAL v. SHIB CHARAN, A.W.N. 1905, 18=2 A.L.J. 59. (A.W.N. 1883, 66, D.)

(89)—Counsel—Omission to argue question of law or abandoning a point—Power of Court to go into question.—Omission of a counsel either to argue a question of law, or his abandoning a question of law is not sufficient to disentitle Court to go into the question. RAMSARAN SINGH v. KHAKAN SINGH, 11 C.W.N. 340. (27 C. 156, F.)

(90)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, ss. 29 and 73—Power of Court—Addition and transposition of parties.—S. 73 of Act VIII of 1859 empowered a Court to add parties to a suit as well as to transpose a party from his position as pro-forma defendant, and to array him amongst the plaintiffs after amendment of the plaint under s. 29 of the Act. PITAMBUR PYNE v. (92)—Appeal—New ground of attack not allowed in appeal—Shamilat land.—Held, that a plaintiff cannot be allowed to alter the nature of attack for the first time in appeal. Therefore plaintiff suing for land as its sole owner cannot be permitted in appeal to base his claim on the ground of its being shamilat. NATHU v. MANJI RAM, 4 P.W.R. 1913=138 P.L.R. 1913.

(93)—Pleadings, defective—Finding on evidence which plaintiff had no opportunity to meet—Appellate Court, duty of—Remission of issue.—If an appellate Court is of opinion that the plaintiff has been prejudiced by the defective pleadings and that there has been a finding upon insufficient evidence and upon evidence which the plaintiff had no reasonable opportunity of meeting, the proper course is to remit an issue on the point. AHMAD BAKSH v. SAIRA BIBI, 15 Ind. Cas. 3.

(95)—Pleadings—Plaintiff alleging a fact—Defendant denying but admitting a certain sum due—Decree and judgment.—Where the plaintiff sued for dissolution of partnership and for ascertainment of his share, and the defendant said the partnership was dissolved and a certain amount was due to plaintiff, the Courts ought to give a decree for the sum admitted to be due by the defendant. The fact that the plaintiff was persistent in denying the defendant's case and has refused his offer of payment is not a sufficient ground for refusing him the decree for the amount admittedly due. KARUMUSI BRAHMANNA SASTRULU v. JALDU VENKATA SUBBA ROW, M.W.N. 1913, 432=24 M.L.J. 561.

(96)—Pleadings—Change of case—Issues—Suit to set aside a deed of gift as fraudulent, failing, claim for accounts of a share as from agent.—Where, on the eve of a contemplated pilgrimage to Mecca, M transferred her property to her nephew E, by a deed of gift, and on the same date the latter executed a deed which provided that a fourth share of the properties thus conveyed should remain in her possession during her lifetime, and on her death should come into E's possession; Held that the fact that, in a suit to set aside the deed of gift on the ground of fraud and misrepresentation which failed, a general issue as to whether E was liable to render an account to M was raised with reference to the whole property, would not justify the Court in passing a decree directing E to account for the profits of a 4 annas share, on the footing of his being M's agent in respect of that share. SAYEDANI MAHMUDA KHATUN CHOWDHURANI v. MAHOMED ELAHABAD KHAN PANI, 17 C.W. N. 427, P.C.

(97)—Practice—Pleadings—Issue dealing with questions raised in the pleadings and questions not so raised—Determination of latter question—Legality—Inconsistent defences during suit—Court's duty.—Where the Court of first instance framed in a suit only one broad issue which not only covered the question raised on the pleadings, viz., whether a gift was a death-bed gift or not, but also another, question namely, whether the gift was made under undue influence, and where the appellate Court determined the question of undue influence which was not specifically raised in the pleadings. Held, that there was nothing illegal in the appellate Court taking into consideration the question of undue influence and in coming to a determination upon that question, because such question was not necessarily inconsistent with the other question which was specifically raised by the pleadings. Undoubtedly the case must be decided on the pleadings, not on what transpires in the case. But to non suit a person suing in a small petty Township Court in Upper Burma, merely because there is not sufficient legal advice to draw up the pleadings as fully and carefully as they might be, would obviously involve great hardship on litigants. Of course, the appellate Court must be careful to see that inconsistent defences are not trumped up during the progress of the case. This would merely lead to fraud. U. THONDAYA BY HIS AGENT NGA PO CHOK v. NGA NI, U.B.R. 1912, 2nd Qr., 141. (5 L.B.R. 76, U.B.R. 11, 1902-03, Bud. Law, Gift. U.B.R. 11, 1907, Execution, Signing, 1 and 14 C. 801, P.C., R.)

(1)—Mortgage of moveable property—Delivery of possession—Pledge.—A mortgage of moveable property, even if unaccompanied by possession, is valid. DAMODAR v. ATMARAM, 8 Bom. L.R. 344.

(2)—Suit to recover money advanced by sale of property pledged, nature of—Claim of pawnee for similar relief in respect of moveable property.—When a mortgagee of immoveable property brings a suit to recover the money advanced, by sale of the property pledged, it is a suit to enforce his charge upon the said property; and by analogy, the claim of a pawnee for a similar relief in respect of moveable property is a suit to enforce his charge upon that property. NIM CHAND BABOO v. JAGABUNDHU GHOSE, 22 C. 21.

(3)—Pledge—Right of pledgee to sell property pledged.—In the absence of payment of the debt, a pledgee may sell the property pledged, even without the consent of the pledgor. CHELAPATHI v. SURAYYA, 12 M.L.J. 375.

(3-a)—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 178—Goods, pledge of, without possession—Subsequent pledge with possession, validity of—Pawnee, good faith of.—M who had first pledged his dog-cart and horse to A, retaining their possession, subsequently pledged them to C, for payment of a debt, giving him possession. Held in a suit by the first pawnee, that his claim was not sustainable, and that the second pledge was valid under s. 178 of Act IX of 1872, as it had not been shown that C (that second pawnee), knew of the previous transaction with A. CHUMMON KHAN v. MODY, 70 P.R. 1874. [F., 34 P.R. 1902 = 23 P.L.R. 1902.]

(4)—Pledge—Pledgee obtaining money-decree—Subsequent purchaser—Execution.—When a person to whom property is pledged for a debt obtains a simple money-decree against his debtor, he cannot execute that decree against the property pledged, to the prejudice of a subsequent bona fide purchaser. He is simply in the position of an ordinary judgment-creditor in respect to his decree, and can only seize the rights and interests of his debtor. GUPINATH SINGH v. SHEO SAHAY SINGH, B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 72 = 1 W.R. 315. [Appr., 2 W.R. 130, 5 W.R. 115, 6 W.R. 312, 7 W.R. 30, 8 W.R. 29, 10 W.R. 88, 3 B.L.R. Pledge—continued.

(5)—Pledgee selling to himself—Effect—Unauthorized conversion—No damage to pledgor—Pledgor whether entitled to recover property without payment.—Where a pledgee, having power to sell for default, takes over, as if upon a sale to himself, the property pledged without the authority of the pledgor, but crediting its value in account with him, this act, though an unauthorized conversion, does not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment. NECKRAM DOBAY v. THE BANK OF BENGAL, 19 C. 322=19 I.A. 60, P.C.=6 Sar. 164.

(6)—Pledge in British India—Debt due in futuro—Sale of property by a French Court—Right of pledgee in sale proceeds—Cause of action.—Where property is pledged in British India to secure the payment of a debt due in futuro, and before the due date, it is sold at the instance of another creditor by a French Court, the pledgee has no right in the sale proceeds and, therefore, no cause of action accrues to him for denial of his title in them as against the other creditor. CHITHAMBARA v. MUTHAYA, 5 M. 330.

(7)—Bank—Share-holder—Shares, pledge of, to third party—Bank's certificate recognising pledge—Subsequent loan by Bank to shareholder—Bank and first pledgee, rival claims of.—When a debt has been contracted by a shareholder of a Bank with a third party, and the Bank has registered the pledge of the shares to such person as security for the loan, it cannot afterwards, with notice of such prior debt and prior pledge, lend money to that share holder and assert a preferential lien to that of the first pledge. *THE DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. (1)—Policy of life insurance—Declaration as to age, untrue—Its effect in rendering policy void—Return of premium.—In a suit to recover money on a policy of life insurance, it appeared that the policy recited that the assured had signed a statement in writing declaring that his age on his next birth-day would not exceed fifty-eight years, and setting forth the past and present state of his health and other circumstances touching his habits and life, and that the assured had agreed that this declaration and personal statement made to the medical referee of the defendants should be the basis of the contract between the assured and the defendants; the policy also contained a condition that in case any statement or allegation contained in the declaration were untrue, or if the assurance had been made through any misrepresentation, concealment or untrue averment, the policy should be void; and the assured, in the proposal for assurance, in his personal statement, and in the declaration annexed to his personal statement, had solemnly declared that his age on his next birthday would not exceed fifty-eight years, but the evidence showed that he was from three to four years older than he had declared himself to be. Held:—(a) that the policy had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation as to age, and so defendants were not liable on the policy; (b) that plaintiff was not entitled under s. 65 of the Contract Act to a refund of the premia paid on the policy during the life-time of the assured; (c) that the omission of the assured to disclose, in the personal statement above alluded to, in answer to a question as to how many brothers and sisters had died and of what diseases, the fact that two of his sisters had died, did not render the policy void; (d) that the declaration as to age in the personal statement, being ambiguous, must be considered as a warranty that the age of the assured was fifty-eight to the best of his knowledge and belief, that the statement was untrue in fact, and untrue to his knowledge and belief, and the suit should be dismissed since the statement formed part of the basis of the contract—Per Sir Arnold White, C.J. (e) The policy must be construed as a warranty of the assured's age in truth and fact, and not simply as a warranty of his belief as to age, and the effect of incorporating into the policy the prospectus of the company was to throw upon the assured the onus of the proving correctness of his age as early as he might find it convenient during his life time, or in default thereof his legal representative proving the same on the settlement of the claim under the policy, and it was quite unnecessary to prove that the prospectus had been read by the assured, or that it was specially brought to his notice by the company apart from the reference made to it in the policy itself. ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY LIMITED v. Exclusive enjoyment by one member of the family at a time, even among male co-parceners, being an incident of impartibility, the general presumption is that the same is the case among co-widows between whom no partition is allowed except by way of equal beneficial enjoyment. VIRA CHINNAMMAL v. —1.—General.

(1)—Possession, value of, in relation to title.—As a general principle of law, the fact of obtaining possession affects the title, and has, in all systems of law, European and Oriental, been always treated as a most important element in the acquisition of title. SELAM SHEIKH v. (2)—Possession—Finding by Mamlatdar as to possession—Subsequent contrary finding by Civil Court—Mamlatdar's order not conclusive—Suit by party affected by Mamlatdar's order—Limitation—Prima facie evidence of title—Burden of proof.—This was a suit to recover certain lands. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendants could prove any title to the lands other than that of possession. Previous to this in 1881, the plaintiff had brought a possessory suit against the 1st defendant in a Mamlatdar's Court, which was dismissed in 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that the plaintiff had not been in possession. While the proceedings were pending in the Mamlatdar's Court, plaintiff filed a suit in the Civil Court in which it was found that she was in possession since 1880, and damages were also awarded to her against the first defendant (who was held to be her farm servant) for crops which had been taken away by him. In 1887, the 2nd defendant as mortgagee from the 1st defendant obtained a decree against plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land, and in execution of that decree, the plaintiff was dispossessed in 1887. Hence in 1890, the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover possession. The defendant contended that the plaintiff had no title to the land, and that the suit was barred by limitation as she had not brought a suit to establish her right within three years of the Mamlatdar's decision in 1885. Held that the Mamlatdar's order of 1885 had no conclusive effect, and was rendered ineffectual by the decree of the Civil Court; and that as plaintiff continued in possession notwithstanding that order down to 1887, the present suit was not time-barred, and neither her remedy nor her right was extinguished. [R., 3 Bom. L.R. 246.] Possession is prima facie evidence of title, and is primarily exclusive, and it is for him who impugns this exclusive title, to show that the possession originated in a way not to effect his own right. KRISHNACHARYA v. LINGAWA, 20 B. 270. [R., 78 P.R. 1902=137 P.L.R. 1902.]

(3)—Possession for a long time sufficient for a decree—Disturbance of plaintiff's long continued possession by defendants, effect of—Title to hold possession not sufficiently established, effect of.—Held, that, where the plaintiffs and their ancestors had been in possession of lands for a long time and the defendants had disturbed them in their possession, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession, although they had not been able to sufficiently establish their possession as mortgagees according to their allegation. HUB LAL v. JAGESHAR, 11 Ind. Cas. 94.

(4)—Suit for possession of land, by the Secretary of State against co-sharer in a village.—Where plaintiff, Secretary of State, claimed possession of a piece of land, which was originally part of village B but had subsequently become part of village J, of which the defendant was a co-sharer, it was held, that the defendant, having been in possession of land for about 36 years, should not be ejected unless the title of the plaintiff was proved beyond reasonable doubt. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. THACUR MOHAR SINGH, 9 O.C. 301.

(5)—Possession without title.—A person in possession without title has an interest in the property good as against all the world except the true owner which interest is capable of being dealt with, until the true owner interferes, just in the same way as if it were unimpeached, and it therefore passes by conveyance, devise or by an execution sale, such interest so possessed confers an unimpeachable title which becomes complete as soon as the true owner's claim is barred by limitation, practical effect of which is to extinguish his title in favour of the party in possession. BRINDABUN CHUNDER ROY v. TARACHAND BINDOPADHYA, 11 B.L.R. 237=20 W.R. 114. [R., 1 B. 286, 3 C. 224, 9 B. 198, 22 A. 204, 24 A. 157, 6 C.L.J. 521.]

(6)—Possession without title—Nature of interest of person in possession of immoveable property.—A person who is in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is heritable and good against all the world except the true owner, an interest which, unless and until the true owner interferes, is capable of being disposed of by deed or Will or by execution sale, just as in the same way as it could be dealt with if the title were unimpeachable. GOBIND PRASAD v. MOHAN LAL, 24 A. 157. (12 A. 51, 20 W.R. 114, R.) [F., 27 A. 169=1 A.L.J. 625=A.W.N. 1904, 222, A.W.N. 1906, 184=3 A.L.J. 424; R., 137 P. (7)—Long possession—Effect.—A person claiming by virtue of long possession cannot claim a larger right than he would have had if the title under which he claimed had been a valid one. For instance, a person holding under a mortgage executed by one who had only a qualified power to deal with the property, but not valid against others interested in the property, may, by dint of long possession, acquire the right to be redeemed by those persons. His possession may be adverse and, therefore, put beyond question his title under the mortgage; but it cannot give him an interest larger than he had ever claimed or was supposed to have. VENKATASWAMY v. RAMANNA, 6 M.L.J. 188. [Not F., 3 P.R. 1904.]

(8)—Long possession at uniform rent—Presumption as to permanency of tenure.—Where possession at a uniform rent for a long period is established, the Court can infer that the tenure has been of a permanent nature. RAM RANJAN v. RAM NARAIN, 5 M.L.J. 7, P.C.=22 C. 533=22 I.A. 60=6 Sar. 530.

(9)—Suit for possession—Defence of limitation—Plaintiff to prove subsisting title—Submerged land—Constructive possession of true owners—Vis major.—When the defendant to a suit for possession of land pleads adverse possession, it lies in the first instance upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession at some time within 12 years of the suit. (14 A. 193, R.) Where a party is dispossessed by vis major, e.g., floods, the constructive possession of the land, so long as the land remains submerged, is in the true owner. MUNSHI MAZHAR HASAN v. Pro. Code, one of the three who was lambardar, must be deemed to be in possession. RAMDAI v. PARBATI, A.W.N. 1890, 178.

(11)—Lands under attachment by Magistrate—S. 146, Crim. Pro. Code.—Lands under attachment by a Magistrate under s. 146, Crim. Pro. Code, are presumed to continue in possession of the person, who is afterwards found to have title thereto, where a person, who is, afterwards, found to have title to a property, receives from the Magistrate the rents and profits thereof for the period during which it was held under attachment by the latter, under s. 146, Crim. Pro. Code, he is held to be in constructive possession thereof, until withdrawal of such attachment. Limitation does not run against him during such period. JAGABANDHU BHATTACHARJEE v. (12)—Possession—When possessory title can hold good—Interruption in possession.—Where both plaintiff and defendant had no title in them, but claimed the land by virtue of their possession, the plaintiff, though in prior possession having ceased to be in possession for some years before the defendants occupied the land, cannot claim the benefit of his possessory title. VENKATACHALA AIYANGAR v. CHINNA GOUNDAN, 2 M. W. N. 1911, 460 = 12 Ind. Cas. 583. (29 C. 518, R.)

(13)—Suit by Zemindar for fixing of boundary and declaration of ownership—Acts of possession established by Zemindar, when sufficient to entitle him to decree—Acts of mere easement, independent of possession, effect of.—Plaintiff, a Zemindar sued to set aside a survey award and to obtain a declaration of his right to certain hills, villages and hamlets, "as part and parcel of Pergunnah Shoosung," in the Zillah of Mymsensing. The dispute was, whether the Government were right in saying that Pergunnah Shoosung extended northward, only to the foot of the locality in question—the plaintiff contending that the Government was wrong and that the pergunnah ran into the Garrow hills. The case for the Government thus was in effect that the lands did not belong to the plaintiff's pergunnah. The Judge of the lower Court decided that the Raja's ancestors obtained a permanent settlement of pergunnah Shoosung from being in possession of it; that the settlement was completed with specification of areas or boundaries, and that the position of the plaintiff was similar to the kind of possession described in the preamble of Reg. X of 1822. It was against this decision that, the defendant, the Government, preferred this special appeal. The grounds of appeal chiefly relied on were that the plaintiff failed to prove that the lands in suit were part of the Zemindaree settled with his ancestor at the time of the decennial settlement; that the evidence showed no such possession on the part of the plaintiff and those through whom he claimed as will support such a suit as this; that some of the documents put in were not proved; and that much of the documentary evidence relied on was not evidence at all as against the defendant. One of the two Judges before whom the appeal came on for hearing decided that the decree of the lower Court ought to be reversed and that the plaintiff's suit ought to be dismissed. But the other Judge, Seton-Karr, J., differed from him as to the result of the evidence and as to the points that it proved in favour of the Raja, the plaintiff. He was of opinion that the judgment of the lower Court should be substantially upheld and that the appellant, the Government, was not entitled to have that decision set aside in its favour. Hunting elephants, cutting wood, levying cesses and exacting services in the Garrow Hills for a period of more than 60 years were held to be acts evidencing possession by the zemindar and not mere acts of easement. The whole of the evidence, documentary and oral, proved sufficiently that the Raja of Shoosung for generations, and possibly from time immemorial, had exercised in the tract of country from which he was cut off by the line drawn by Government in 1859, a right partly feudal, and subject to fluctuations and impediments, and that evidence, looking to the nature of the suit, was both credible and sufficient to establish his claim. Further, the Raja could not have produced any evidence differing much in kind from what he had produced though possibly he might have given more detailed evidence of the same kind, or have filed collection-papers. He was therefore entitled to a decree affirming the decision of the Judge and allowing him to go on collecting dues in the tract in question as hitherto. He had shown a prescriptive right to collect in, and receive tribute from, the tract in question, and the Government, in opposition to the case which he has set up, had shown literally nothing to debar him from the future exercise of those rights. THE GOVERNMENT v. RAJAH RAJ KISHEN SINGH SURMONA BAHADOOR, 8 W. R. 343. (On appeal, 9 W. R. 426.)

(15)—Possession of female member, not that of a qualified owner—Onus of proof.—Prima facie, the possession of a female member of a family not entitled to take as an heir is not the possession of a qualified owner, and it lies on the party who affirms it to show that, when she took possession, she did so claiming only a limited estate. BAPANAYYA v. PEDDICHALAMAIYA, 9 M. L. J. 33. (22 C. 447, P. C., F.)

(16)—Joint possession — Tenant — Encroachment — Trespasser — Co-owner.—The defendants were tenants under the plaintiffs, but they encroached upon the disputed land and took wrongful possession as trespassers, notwithstanding the protests of the plaintiffs. Subsequently, one of the defendants, became a co-sharer of the plaintiffs by purchasing a very small share. The plaintiffs sued for joint possession and the defendants contended that the plaintiffs might sue for partition but could not get joint possession. Held, that, if the defendant had taken possession of the land peacefully after he had become a co-sharer, the case would have fallen within the principle of the case in 18 C. 10 = 17 I. A. 110, but that in the present case the plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession. SAMAREDDY v. SHYAMA CHARAN SEN, 11 Ind. Cas. 637 = 16 C. W. N. 251.
